Among other hard finishing materials easily applied in veneers and providing an extensive range of colors, patterns and wood-grain effects there are a number of products well suited to theatres in both appearance and price. Marlite, and its associated types, is one of these. It comes in sheets of various sizes to accommodate the particular space and design problem at hand, in many colors, and in gloss and dull finishes. It can be applied with good effect in continuous sheets, or in pattern effects with metal mouldings at the joints. In addition to the solid colors, Marlite is available in genuine wood veneers, prefinished in the factory for appearance and wear. Both types can be obtained in panels for bending as well as flat application. The same line of materials of which Marlite is a member includes genuine wood-panels marketed under the name Carstenite. This veneer is a raw panel with the same backing as Marlite, but requires finishing after installation in the general manner of any woodwork (and it is accordingly priced lower than Marlite).

Theatre walls finished in Marlite—a marble pattern for the dado, genuine wood veneer (with Marlite finish) forming alternate panels of walnut and light Avodire.

Farlite is another veneer available in solid colors, wood-grains and pattern or texture effects, as for example linens and marbles. Farlite, and its associated Farloex, is a laminated hot-pressed sheet material of the synthetic resinoid group, and are available in both dull and glossy wood should of course be mentioned in connection with such materials. Their use already has been wide, and so there is no need to go into their characteristics here; indeed, they have really been dealt with in above discussion of veneers, since with respect to wood-grain finishing, their appearance and application are essentially similar to the other materials referred to.

The pliable wood veneers such as Flex-

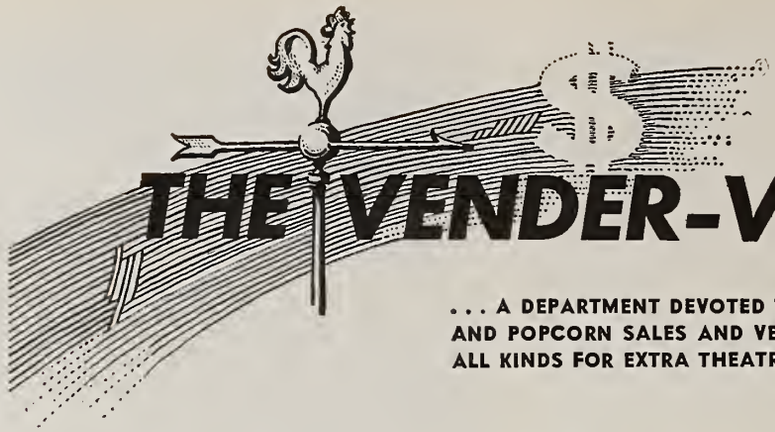
All of these veneers, it should be added, are readily applicable to existing walls, whether plastered or not, hence are admirable materials for rapid and relatively inexpensive interior remodeling; moreover, most are conveniently available locally.

WALL COVERINGS

Of non-structural wall finishing materials, there are of course a large number adapted to theatres—the finer papers, such as Tekko and Salubra; simulated leather, damasks, wall linoleum, velours, etc. All of these have been frequently discussed and applied. An interesting covering not generally known in its suitability to theatres is

Two of scores of patterns available in Wall-Tex (see also Charles C. Burton's "Suggestions" on page 15).

Wall-Tex. This is a wall canvas, having a strong fabric base which is coated in solid colors and patterns. It has the decorative effect of fine wall paper, yet is cleaned by merely wiping down with a thinly soaped water, and this can be done as often as need be without impairing in any way the surface or pattern.



An additional advantage of Wall-Tex is that the fabric holds plaster firmly. It thus checks cracking of plaster and offers effective means of redecorating walls already cracked.

DECORATIVE CARPET PROTECTION

It is recognized good practice to lay mat runners over carpeting in the traffic lanes during bad weather. This can be done without detracting from the appearance of the theatre by laying strips of decorative matting. One of the most durable of these, Sisalcrest, is also highly decorative, and comes in a number of colors and patterns. This fibre fabric lies flat on the carpet, can be rolled up for storage, and is cleaned with clear water and a brush with injury to neither the fabric itself nor its pattern.

WITH the sale of candy and popcorn and other refreshments an established service in the motion picture theatre, provisions for such sales equipment are properly integrated with the floor plan and interior architectural treatment. In the sketches below are offered a number of original studies of—

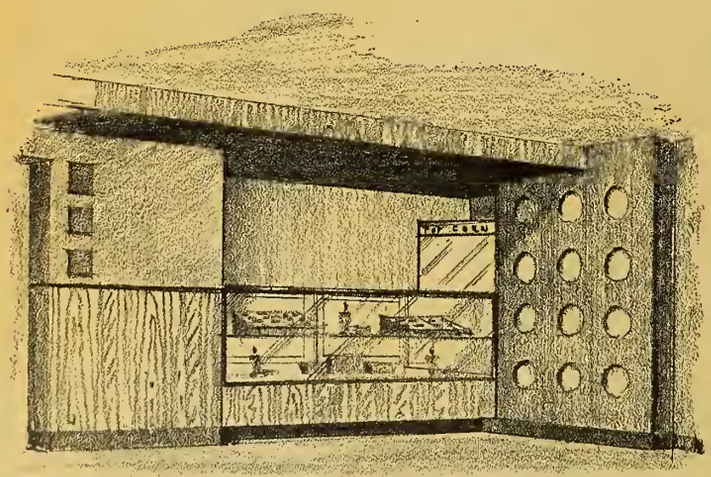
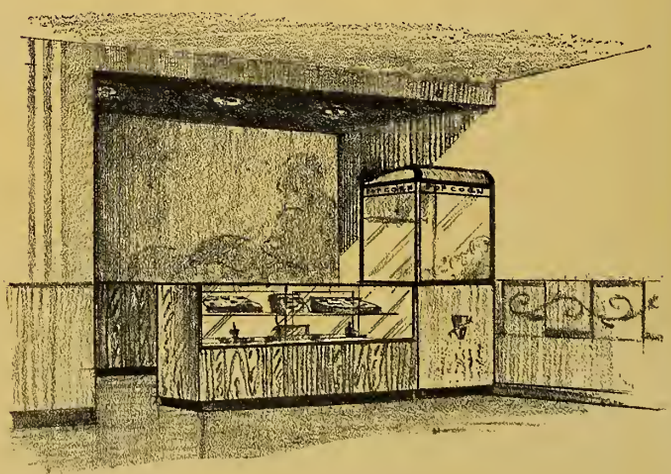
REFRESHMENT BOOTHS



BY THE DESIGN DEPARTMENT OF THE F & Y BUILDING SERVICE, COLUMBUS, O.



■ Occupying space at a turn or broadening of the foyer, the refreshment station above calls for a built-in display and dispensing counter beneath a furred out ceiling of similar contour rimmed with louvered box lights. There is space for a popcorn machine inside. Colored or mirror Flexglass is suggested for rear rounded feature; Flexglass, leatherette, or hard veneer for counter facing.

The above alcove arrangement is well adapted to floor plans having relatively deep traffic area to the auditorium, with this foyer area including lounge facilities. The alcove is illuminated with box lights. To provide brilliant white illumination, daylight fluorescent lamps could be used, with flush covers of Louverglas (louvered plastic), the Louverglas pink to "naturalize" the light.

A single recess built-in effect, well adapted to placement just inside entrance doors from outer lobby, is that above, with which a stock candy case of good size could be used, while popcorn machine would be located behind it.

Another simple scheme for placement of stock candy case and popcorn machine so as to form "partition" as well as display and dispensing medium. Suggested for the back wall is an attractive mural, or a mirror panel.

FRONT SIDE-WALLS

THE FRONT side wall surfaces of a theatre often prove to be a source of objectionable sound reflections, if they are large plain areas of hard material, or if they are shaped in such a way that they concentrate the reflected sound into certain sections of the seating area.

Concavely curved front walls have been observed in a number of very recent designs. One might gain the false impression that there should be no troublesome reflections from these areas, inasmuch as they do not appear to lie directly in the path of sound from the horns. Nevertheless, when modern wide-angle horns are used the higher frequencies of sound, particularly, do reach these curved front surfaces.

Focusing of Sound

This sound is very frequently focused across the seating area to opposite sections, and the time lag is sufficient to create the effect of an echo. In a number of cases it has been necessary to cover these areas with large amounts of sound absorbing material in order that the effect of the concentrated reflections might be reduced.

Large flat surfaces running diagonally from the stage opening to the main side walls are, of course, not as serious as curved surfaces at these points, for the reason that they do not focus the sound. However, these flat surfaces can produce objectionable discrete reflections, or "slaps," if they are designed as plain areas without irregular break-up or acoustical treatment.

Materials Distribution

When sound absorbing materials are needed in a theatre, naturally it is very effective to distribute them as widely as possible and in irregular areas over the surfaces. It is not desirable, however, to concentrate too much of this treatment at the front of the auditorium.

For an example of the effect of excessive acoustical treatment at the front, attention is directed to some of the older legitimate theatres, where a heavy draping material has been installed at the side sof the screen and often extended well out toward the main side walls. Although this has been done either for reasons of appearance or to reduce light reflections, it is not uncommon to find that the excessive amount of high frequency absorption introduced by this draping at the front produces a "tubby" effect in the quality of sound and detracts markedly from its true life and naturalness.

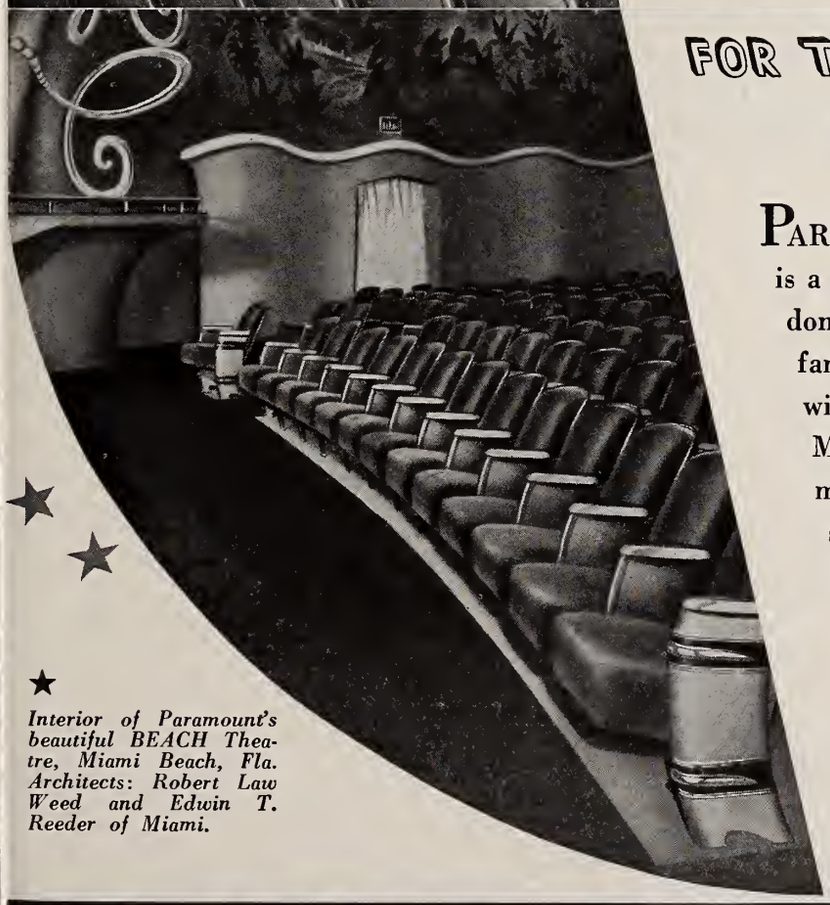
DECORATIVE VALUE OF AUDITORIUM SEATING

IT IS OF REAL practical importance to realize how much the chairs in the motion picture theatre auditorium can be the nucleus of the decorative scheme, even to the extent of creating a major part of the physical decorations. The decorative value of the chairs is doubly significant because of the nearness of the chairs to the person ("feel") and sight of the patrons. Auditorium light levels proper today are such that every part of the chair is seen close at hand by the patron, and therefore detailed decorative values are present here, in contrast to the need for large simple masses in the treatment of the walls and ceiling of the motion picture theatre auditorium.

Much money has been wasted on auditoriums in meaningless wall and ceiling decorations, decorations which even prove to be distracting to the viewer during the screen performance; while much less attention, as a rule, has been given to getting the most out of the seating decoratively.

It is an established rule in modern architectural design that decoration must not be overdone, and in the case of modern interior architecture, the necessary furnishings are ordinarily more than adequate to carry the burden of the decorative requirements. When the chairs are given the decorative value that they easily can have, it will be found that lavish wall and ceiling decoration becomes superfluous waste of money and also tend to produce an "overdone" feeling. It seems that it would be highly profitable to pay a little more for the chairs to allow for a better quality of the finish materials used thereon. Better wearing qualities and decorative finishes become important.



Influence of Illumination

Recent tendencies in motion picture auditorium lighting show that more light is being concentrated on the seating plane, with a diminishing amount of light being recommended for the remaining interior surfaces. One of the reasons for this is that light cast upon the chairs themselves is tolerable and most desirable for making it easier to locate a seat. With this extra attention called to the chairs, it becomes an important requirement to give extra attention to the need for attractiveness in the chairs themselves.

The chair and carpet surfaces in the

THEATRE PLANNING SERVICE

¶ Better Theatres is glad to answer the questions of exhibitors concerning theatre planning. Better Theatres' Service Department annually deals with hundreds of inquiries regarding planning problems.

¶ In order that questions may be dealt with effectively, they should be specific, and all conditions bearing upon them should be clearly given. Often a rough sketch is helpful. It is of course understood that this service is in no way intended to supplant that of licensed architects and Better Theatres cannot supply working plans, design sketches, etc.

¶ Although Better Theatres' Service Department has leading specialists regularly available for consultation when and as an inquiry may advise this, all inquiries are answered by this department and should be addressed to it, as follows:

BETTER THEATRES

auditorium are necessarily fixed as the main surfaces upon which richness in color may be used, whereas the remaining interior surfaces should be finished in neutral coloring. The woven texture of the seat coverings and carpets absorb screen light reflections much more effectively than the hard interior surfaces.

It is significant also that the desirable richly textured fabrics used as chair coverings and the carpeting function advantageously in establishing a proper acoustical balance in the design of the auditorium.

Chair Color Scheme

The design of the auditorium chair lends itself to a two-tone color scheme—the rear of the chair back and the end standards in one color, and the front of the chair back in another color. The seat cushion color can be either of the aforementioned to effect an interesting color scheme.

It is not desirable, in my opinion, to break up the chair color scheme to any greater number of colors than indicated above because a further breakup of color would tend to diminish the desirable "solid" appearance of the chair. Either contrasting color, or different intensities of one color may be appropriately used.

Decorative effects are obtained in mohair fabrics by the different type of twists and machine cuts worked into the woven yarn. These comparatively new finishes provide practical wearing surfaces in addition to the beautiful appearance they create. Such mohair fabric is used most effectively on the chair back. The decorative value of the texture makes it unnecessary to resort to more than one color for the fabric itself.

Chair and Assembly Pattern

The rear faces of the chairbacks—the portion of the chair which faces the seated patron—is now in most instances made of metal. The trend now points to this surface being formed so that the surface is ribbed or grooved or otherwise shaped to add a needed decorative touch and make for a practical wearing surface. The end standards of the chairs are cast in a similar manner. Florid decorations are replaced by the more modern streamlined texture-like decorations. These groovings are painted in two tones. The final coat of paint is wiped off the highlights, but left in the depths of the grooves to lend accent to the texture. The arm blocks look best when finished in a natural wood grain, preferably in the bleached light finish since they then act as guides to individual chairs owing to extra light reflection. Additionally, auditorium seating of today's design contribute importantly to the overall decorative effect of the auditorium through the mass lines of the assembly, together with the aisles. Thus in reseating, the exhibitor is not merely providing modern standards of chair comfortableness for his patrons, but he can, if he plans and selects his seating wisely, give the auditorium new decorative values as well.

A LINE O' LAW OR TWO

Damages Based on Structural Defects

By RUDOLPH ALLEN
Member New York Bar

IN October, 1936, there occurred in one of the leading motion picture theatres in New York City, a most unusual and unique situation. While the performance was in full swing, two women patrons attempted to obtain seats in the mezzanine. They were jostled by the crowd and precipitated over the railing into the main floor, where they fell upon two other patrons. All four persons sustained serious injuries and brought action against the owner for negligence, based upon the theory that the balustrade in the mezzanine, erected as a protection for the public, was faultily constructed, endangering the lives of the patrons, and that therefore, the owner should have anticipated the possibility of such an accident.

Now this particular theatre had been in operation for 23 years, had been constructed by a well-known architect in accordance with plans approved by the city building department, and was similar in structure to other theatres of its class. This theatre had been in constant use and had never in all its history had any accidents of this kind.

The plaintiffs were successful in their action before the jury. They all obtained substantial verdicts. An appeal was taken to an intermediate court, and there the verdicts were sustained. The case was then brought to the Court of Appeals (Di Salvo vs. Marks-Strand Theatre Corporation, 281 N. Y. 333) and this tribunal, by a divided court, reversed the decision of the intermediate court and of the verdict of the jury, rendering a decision in favor of the theatre owner.

The opinion granting the reversal was rendered by Judge Crane, with two judges concurring. The two other judges voted to affirm the judgment of the lower court.

It can be readily seen that the problem was a difficult one even for the high court. The Court of Appeals based its decision upon the case of Loftus vs. The Union Ferry Company, 84 N. Y. 455, which is the leading case on the subject. In this case, a child fell through a guard rail on a ferry as it was drawing into the pier. The child was drowned. The act was brought against the ferry company, based on faulty construction, in that the guard rail did not fill the entire space between the ferry and the pier when the boat docked. There was evidence that millions of persons had traveled on this boat without the occurrance of any accident. The Court, in rendering its decision, presented this illuminating thought:

> "But the rule does not impose upon the defendant the duty of so providing for the safety of passengers that they shall encounter no possible danger, and meet with no casualty in the use of the appliance provided by it."

In the case before us, the court, in finding that the accident was one of those unfortunate occurrences for which the law provides no remedy, stated the law to be as follows:

> "No structure is ever so made that it may not be made safer, but as a general rule when an appliance or machine or structure not obviously dangerous has been in daily use for years, and has uniformly proved adequate, safe and convenient, its use may be continued without the imputation of culpable imprudence or carelessness."

In numerous cases in New York State recovery has been sought for accidents happening out of the construction work claimed to be defective in plan. The happening of the accident does not and cannot of itself be evidence of faulty construction. Of course, a condition may be so bad that its danger is readily apparent. In order to hold the theatre owner liable, it must be established that the accident must have been reasonably anticipated in the light of human experience.

All the cases emphasize that where no previous accidents have happened, negligence cannot be charged against the owner. It is the old story of "dog bites man." Since every dog is entitled to one bite, every theatre owner is allowed one accident before liability can be attached to him.

While Better Theatres cannot perform the service of legal counsel, inquiries from readers are invited and will be answered as full as permissible.

The Possibility of Low-Cost Theatre Cooling with Ice

• Perhaps your theatre and local situation are adapted to ice-actuated air-conditioning. Explained here are the potential advantages and how to realize them

By CARL F. BOESTER

CARL F. BOESTER

EXHIBITORS WHO have had the most direct experience with air-conditioning are usually those operating small groups of theatres, usually consisting of from five to twenty theatres, either in the same city or spread out over an area including a number of small country towns. Such operators have usually had experience with air supply systems in many of their various forms, from simple cooling by the utilization of fans handling large quatities of air, on up to the most complicated refrigeration installations. Many have had experience with the utilization of ice as a source of refrigeration, to provide reduction in temperature, and to condense out of the air the excess moisture (which some people call, erroneously, high humidity). As a matter of fact the very earliest attempts at the application of refrigeration was with the utilization of ice for cooling; but like the first attempts at anything, ice as such proved to have the need for some research in its application and utilization in air-conditioning.

Unfortunately for ice, the industry that manufactures and distributes it was little interested in its application to air-conditioning, and for that matter, it is still, on the whole, not very much more interested than it was; however, there are an increasing number of companies manufacturing ice that realize its potentialities in the field of air-conditioning. All of this has been made possible primarily as a result of the belief of a few air-conditioning engineers that it is an ideal medium of refrigeration for some theatres; and of the further experience, in the actual operation of theatre systems.

Enough properly designed theatre ice installations are now in existence to prove that in many ways this is a practical way, in some cases, of providing theatre cooling. The small circuit operator has not only mechanical refrigeration air-conditioning systems in his houses, but he also has air washers in some of them, and probably ice-actuated cooling in one or more others. If the ice system has been properly designed and installed, he probably has found it highly successful as a means of getting done the kind of job it was intended to do—and it is likely (though not certain) that he also has found it cheaper than systems doing a comparable job in his other theatres.

The question that will arise in many readers' minds is, "Well, I have had some experience with ice and it was indeed far from satisfactory, and I paid a lot."

A ton of ice, as ice, is far from cheap when you look at it from the viewpoint of the direct out-of-pocket expense. It does seem costly, particularly when on a hot day the ice man literally dumps tons of ice into your bunker; but a true analysis calls for a review of the cost on the basis of a year's operation, which includes fixed charges on installed equipment, power, and all the other items that should be reflected in honest bookkeeping. It has been found that ice can provide low-cost air-conditioning in some theatres—or maybe we should say lower-cost air-conditioning, for full and complete air-conditioning in the minds of many theatre men never is low in cost (they may call air-conditioning a necessary evil, yet it does and will continue to pay dividends).

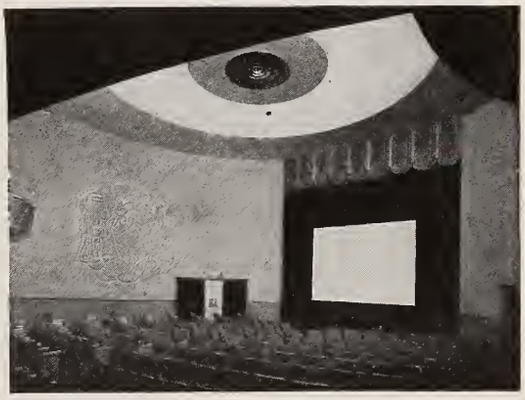
What Ice System Can Do



A properly designed ice-actuated summer cooling system, employing ice water as a refrigerant, will do everything that a completely mechanical or automatic refrigeration air-conditioning system will do for the theatre to which an ice system is adapted. For example, if the fin coils that are in the air stream are of the same size and of the same rated capacity, what difference does it make whether the water is kept at 40° by ice, or by a mechanical refrigeration system, or whether the surface of the coil is kept cold by a refrigerant (freon or any other) circulated at 40° temperature inside the coils. In either case, the same amount of heat is extracted, and the same amount of moisture is condensed out of the air, so that you can maintain as good a temperature and relative humidity condition with one as with the other.

Ice cooling has the advantage of being simple in that it cannot get out of order; moreover, as a rule, if your ice man is willing to give you good delivery service there is an unlimited supply of it for peak conditions. For example, your cooling system may be designed to maintain 70° to 80° inside (depending on the temperature you like), when the temperature is no more than 95° to 100° outside; then on those days when it is 110° or higher, outside, your system of course is short on capacity for complete comfort conditions. On such peak days, an ice-actuated system is given enough ice to reduce the temperature of the water circulated in the coil from 40° to, say, 34°, and this will materially increase the capacity of the system to handle such unusual conditions. The reduction of water temperature is accomplished simply by melting a little more ice which is well worth the investment on that hot day, for surely your customers gauge the quantity of the comfort maintained by how well it works on the hot days.

Ice also produces more refrigeration than is normally believed. For example, refrigeration as applied to air-conditioning is based on the equivalent of the melting of one ton of ice. This is the equivalent of the absorbing of 288 Btu's (heat units) from the interior of the theatre. This is also at the temperature of melting ice, which is at 32°. But it is certainly simple foolishness to throw away good 32° ice water, particularly a whole ton of it (by weight), or maybe several tons of it. If the air you require for ventilation is taken in from the outside at a temperature of 90° to 100°, it certainly has to be cooled down to the temperature which you are maintaining in the house. You have to take a certain amount of the air for ventilation, by law. If you can take this 32° ice water that is many times wasted down the sewer, and pump it through a separate coil placed in the fresh air stream, the fresh air will warm this ice water from 32° up to 65° or 70°. Now in refrigerating effect this is the equivalent of an additional quarter ton of ice or more, which you get actually for nothing.

You can help yourself still further by discharging the water from this coil through sprays that are located on the roof of the theatre. In this way the ice water further helps in that it is evaporated off the surface of the roof by the heat of the sun, and this heat thus required in evaporating this wasted ice water never reaches the inside of the theatre, therefore lowering your operating cost this much more. Many theatre air-conditioning systems that use ice do not provide this economizing feature, nor do they use the water in the fresh air stream, but waste it down the sewer rather than spray it on the roof. So if you would use a few simple practices like these you can begin to see how ice can contribute to low cost.

The first cost is relatively low. By using coils prefabricated in cabinet type conditioning units, in which ice water is circulated, these same units can provide complete winter air-conditioning—that is, instead of circulating cold water through the coils, you circulate hot water through them. This hot water can be secured from a heating boiler. The same pump can be used to circulate the water through the coils.

Arranging Ice Supply

Many ice men are becoming aware of the advantages of ice and are making such prices for it that you should be able to buy ice for $3 to $3.50 per ton delivered. This is what they call marginal ice; it is the ice produced by the equipment at their very lowest cost during periods other than when they have their greatest demands. There are other ways of getting ice, one of which would be to join in group purchasing of ice and make a deal with the ice man to furnish the ice for the cooling of a group of theatres at a particularly attractive price. If he happens to have large facilities for making and storing ice, he could make it over the winter months at a very low cost and have it available to you in summer, and since he would have a contract on a yearly basis he could put a relatively low price on such ice. He wouldn't have to be particular about filtering and treating the water, or about making the ice clear. White ice has just as much refrigerating effect as clear ice, and there is no need to incur the expense of making it clear for your purposes. Then in the larger communities there is available a definite amount of white ice that is made by accident and which can't be sold for ice cubes and similar purposes. This is always sold at a preferential price and such ice is ideal for theatre cooling purposes.

If there are sufficient needs for the ice, your local ice man might be justified in installing one of the tube ice machines which makes ice in small cylinders about an inch in diameter and from 2 to 3 inches long. This is ice produced in its very simplest and cheapest form and can make possible refrigeration for air-conditioning at a cost much lower than any other of which I know. This is really low-cost refrigeration, and if your ice man can earn a fair rate on his investment in such equipment, he can surely give you a very good price, particularly if one machine producing such ice on a 24-hour basis furnishes ice to all of the theatres in such a group.

Another cheap way of using ice for refrigeration is that employing the storage refrigeration principle, about which you have heard much in the last few years. By the simple installation of coils in an ice bunker, then running the equipment over a 24-hour period, the amount of refrigeration for cooling your theatre is made in the form of ice, which is subsequently made into ice water for the absorbing of heat for maintaining comfort conditions in the auditorium.

In next month's article we shall describe the design of a good ice bunker and have details concerning its construction. We will also give advice on the selection of conditioning units, which consists of filters, fin coils and a fan, and tell you what to look for in selection of such equipment. We shall also give you some pointers on its installation, and show a piping hookup, illustrating the connection between the ice bunker, the pump and the unit that does the actual conditioning; and we shall also describe the disposition of the excess water as a result of melting the ice, and show how it is utilized on the roof. You will readily see how simple and fool-proof this type of cooling system can be, in the event that your theatre and local conditions are adapted to it.

EXPANSION VALVES

THERMOSTATIC expansion valves are an important part of any refrigeration system that is used in air-conditioning, yet there is no device that is more frequently condemned as being a fault of the failure of the complete plant to provide adequate refrigeration for comfort purposes. Illustrated here is the multi-outlet type of expansion valve which goes a long way towards curing many of the inherent troubles. However, it might be here pointed out that more often than not the dfficulty with the expansion valves, and particularly when the source of trouble is located at the valve, is the misapplication of the valve.

The purpose of an expansion valve is to meter the liquid refrigerant to the heat-absorbing, or cooling, surface at a rate required to maintain certain temperature conditions. We all know that the refrigeration rate varies from partial load to full load, and there must be some device for compensating for this variation, for if the cooling or evaporator surface is fed too much refrigerant, then its temperature is lowered and different conditions are created. It is the purpose of the expansion valve to prevent such occurrences.

The expansion valve feeds the refrigerant under response to the temperature and pressure conditions in the cooling coil, and the purpose of the multi-outlet expansion valve is to feed equal amounts of refrigerant to each of the many circuits comprising the complete coil. If one circuit is flooded or starved, as the case may be, little good is accomplished because the evaporator coil cannot work at full efficiency.

Many refrigeration installations that have adequate coil capacity are developing far less capacity than they should, and this is because the various circuits of the coil are not getting good distribution of refrigerant. This is made possible by the installation of such a valve, which contributes to greater and more even capacity. This has been established many many times by the replacement of a conventional one-outlet valve with one of the new multi-outlet type valves.

This type of valve is particularly effective because the metering of the refrigerant to the various coil circuits is accomplished before the expansion occurs through the valve orifice. Other devices attempt to distribute a mixture of liquid refrigerant and refrigerant vapor or refrigerant gas, and it is difficult indeed to meter gases under various temperature conditions in equal quantities to the respective circuits. It is better to do your metering first, then allow your pressure to drop across valve orifice and the expansion to occur. This definitely assures equal amounts of refrigerant to all coil circuits, and thereby full utilization of such coil surface. If you are having difficulties, particularly as to the performance of your system, look into the utilization of such valves as a means of correcting the trouble.—Carl F. Boester.

WAYS & MEANS

in operation, installation, maintenance

John J. Sefing is a graduate mechanical engineer and has long specialized in theatre work

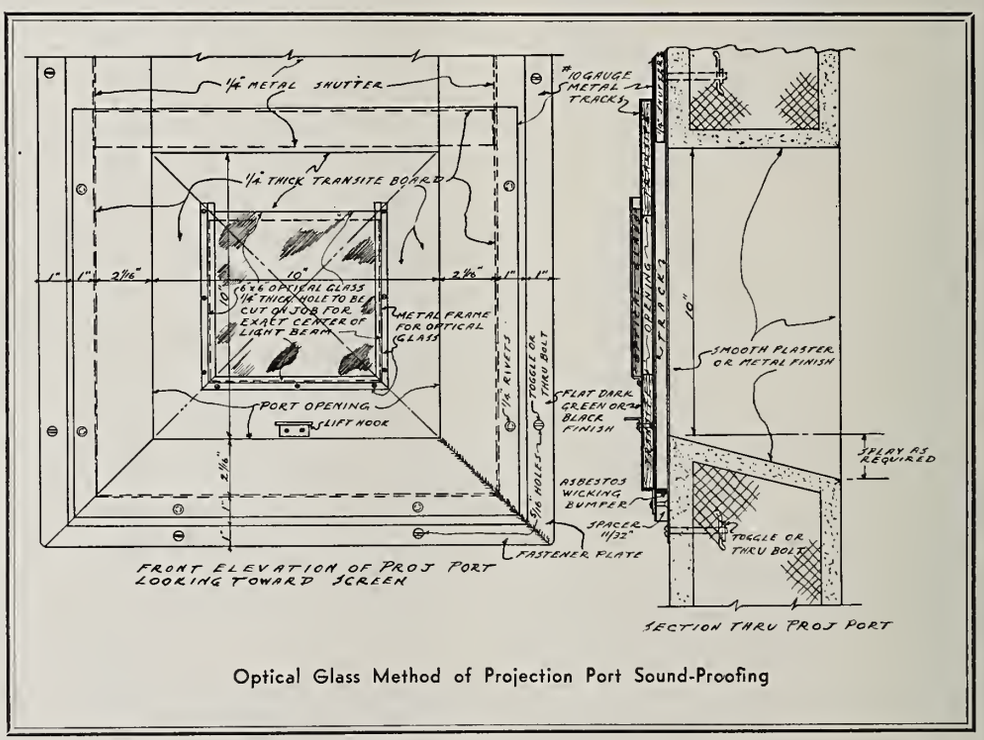
IN presenting ways to isolate the projection room, I describe the optical glass method of port sound-proofing. This is sometimes objected to because the glass reduces light transmission. The loss is so slight, however, that others contend it is balanced by the simplicity of the method.

Sealing Projection Room Ports Against Fire and Noise

DURING THE showing of sound motion pictures in the theatre it is very important that all extraneous noises be entirely eliminated. Any noise, no matter how slight, that distracts the audience from enjoying the picture is objectionable, be it from the ventilating equipment, the projection room, or other sources. Now we all recognize that. But do we always provide for it? There is no question that in the projection room there is a certain amount of mechanical noise coming from the moving parts—from projectors, rewinders, motor-generators; and if permitted to reach the audience, such noise is very annoying to patrons.

At the present time, several practical methods are used in the projection room to help cut down these noises. One is to install a good grade of fire-proofed acoustic tile or plaster on the walls and ceiling; the other is to "stop-up" the port opening with glass, acoustic or transite board.

In the case of the projection port opening, sound-proofing is the toughest nut to crack. There is a difference of opinion as to what is the best and most practical method. There are two ways that the projection port opening can be sound-proofed, and either works well.



¶ Sound-Proofing by Using Optical Glass

One method is to install a metal track of about No. 10 gauge directly over the metal track used for the gravity-drop port fire shutter. This track for the sound-proofing should overlap the port opening 2 inches at the sides, and top and bottom. Into this track, which should have a clear space slightly over ¼-inch, a piece of ¼-inch transite board or similar material is inserted in place. The overall size of this board or baffle would be 14 inches square. In this transite a 5½" x 5½" opening is cut for the accommodation of a 6x6-inch genuine optical glass.

Extreme care should be taken that this opening in the transite board is cut only after the projectors and screen are in their exact operating location. To do this properly, first a light should be thrown on the screen, making sure that the projectors and screen are set exactly in proper position. Then the transite board should be inserted into the track, cutting off the light from the screen entirely. The projected light outline on this transite should be marked off by pencil or crayon, then after removing the transite from the track, one should mark off the 5½-inch-square an equal distance all around the line of the projected light area. After this 5½-inch-square opening is cut on the transite board, install a light-gauge metal frame on the two sides and the bottom of the opening, making sure that clear space is left for inserting in place the 6x6-inch optical glass, which is a little less than a ¼-inch thick. When this is done, the complete transite board, with 6x6-inch optical glass is inserted into the track, and the port opening is as sound- and air-proof as it is possible to make it.

With this arrangement the optical glass can be removed separately, or together with the transite board, by the use of a left hook on the transite. One good purpose this method serves is to stop completely cold conditioned air from rushing into the projection room and striking the lens of the projector and the face of the projectionist. Another advantage in having the optical glass inside the projection room, instead of inside the port opening, is that in case of breakage, the broken glass will fall inside the room instead of falling on patrons seated at the rear of the auditorium. Also, with the optical glass and transite in front of the fire shutter apparatus, there cannot be any interference with its proper closing in case of fire, or injury to the projectionist if it accidentally drops.

A question will naturally be asked as to the loss of light through the optical glass. Data obtained from reliable sources indicate that the loss of light from genuine optical glass is not quite 5%, regardless of whether the projected light beam strikes the glass at a right angle or at an oblique angle. Experience in the field discloses no difference noticeable to the eye in light intensity or definition on the screen when the optical glass is moved in and out of the projected light beam, either with or without the picture showing. However, the pro-jectionist will have to clean this optical glass from time to time. With it in a vertical position, however, less attention is required than if it is installed at an angle.

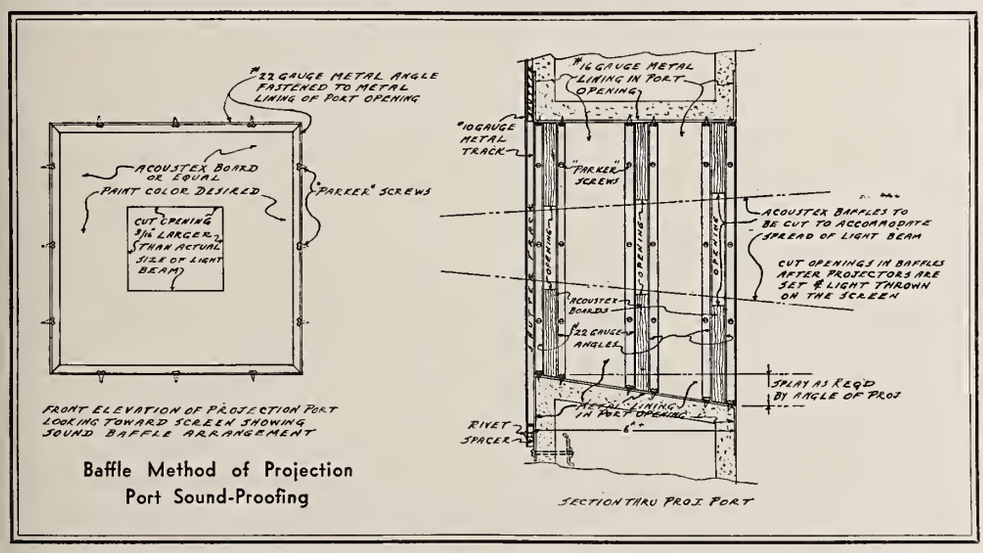
For sound-proofing the spot and lookout port openings, a good grade of polished plate glass can be used and installed in the same manner as the transite board in the projection ports or this plate glass can be installed at an oblique angle with a metal hood and hinged door at the top for use in removal of the glass. The main reason for installing the plate glass at an oblique angle, or slanted, in the lookout ports, is to prevent the incident light in the projection room from blinding the projectionist while he is viewing the screen.

¶ Sound-Proofing With Acoustic Baffles

Another method of sound-proofing the projection port openings is to use fireproof acoustic baffles inside of the openings in the wall. First, it is best to line the inside of the port openings with a substantial material to serve as a fastening base for these baffles, making sure that the bottom of the openings are splayed as required by the angle of projection. This lining in the ports can be of No. 16 gauge metal, making a rigid, permanent and fireproofed installation. The material for the baffles can be some mineral (fireproof) acoustic board or tile material.



The number of baffles to be used will depend on the thickness of the projection room wall. For a 6-inch wall, the number of baffles used will be 3, spaced about 2½-inch on centers. Of course, the more baffles that can be installed the better will be the finished job, and if the thickness of the wall is more than 6 inches, the number of baffles will increase accordingly.

Before installing these baffles care must be taken that the projectors and screen are in the exact operating location so that the projected light beam can be marked off exactly at each baffle. As can be seen this method is more critical than with the use of optical glass 6x6 inches square, as each opening in the baffles must be cut accurately according to the spread of the projected light beam as it goes through the port opening. Each opening in the baffles should be about 3/16*-inch larger than the actual light area at that particular baffle to allow a little leeway for possible slight shifting of the light beam.* However, too much leeway in the openings cannot be allowed, as the sound-proofing qualities of the baffles will be reduced.

Each baffle should be held in place by metal angles made of No. 22 gauge, ½x½-inch stock, and these angles be fastened to the metal lining in the port opening with Parker screws. Before the installation of these baffles the exact location of each should be marked off on the lining, then the acoustex board be cut to the size required for each particular location. For marking off the opening to be cut for each baffle, light from the projectors should be thrown on the screen, then each baffle be placed by hand, alternately, to its intended permanent location, and the projected light area be outlined by pencil at that particular point. When the holes are cut in the baffles, the permanent installation should start at the baffle farthest from the inside of the room then worked inward.

With this baffle arrangement, 100% sound-proofing cannot be expected as a certain amount of air and sound will come through the openings; however, there will be a saving of the 5% of projected light (more or less) lost with optical glass.

In finishing the baffle boards, a flat black or green paint should be used on both sides in order to cut down light reflection. Another thing that it is well to do is to fill in the spaces between the baffle boards with some fireproof acoustic material, such as rock wool, if the efficiency of the sound-proofing must be improved.

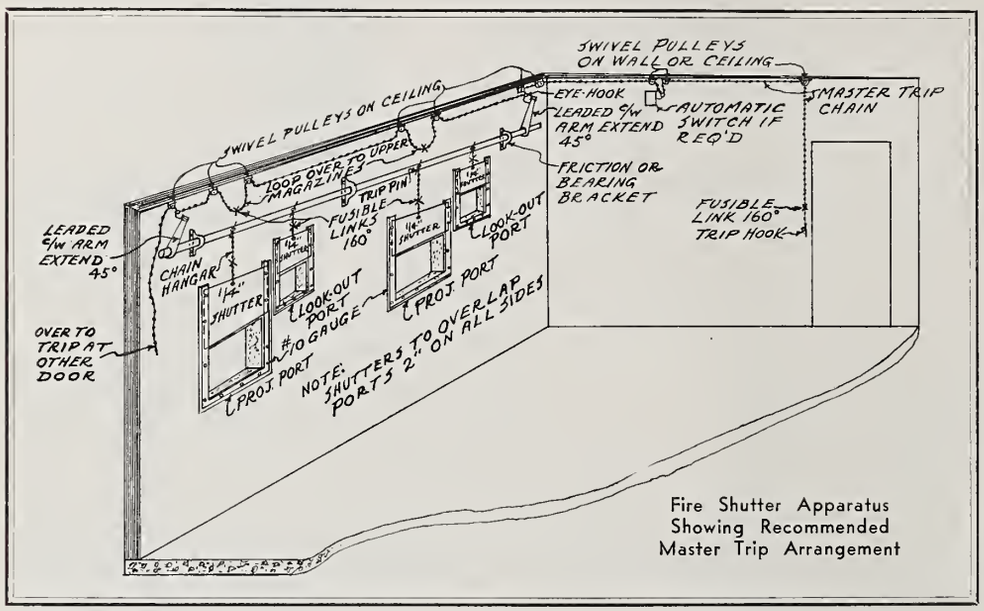
thought than is ordinarily given must be given to the proper operating installation of fire shutter apparatus, since this equipment must be ready at all times to do its work instantaneously and positively.

The main purpose of the fire shutters over the port openings is of course to prevent smoke and flame flashes from being seen by the audience, so as not to cause a panic in case of fire in the projection room. Fire shutter apparatus therefore must be made of strong fire-resisting material and arranged so that it will work both automatically and manually for the sake of the lives of hundreds of people that would otherwise be imperiled.



Every locality has its own inspection department enforcing city or state code regulations, while the National Board of Fire Underwriters recommends practices in fire shutter installations in order to reduce damage claims. Nevertheless, at the present time there are no universal standard regulations governing fire shutter and trip arrangement, and as a result no particular system can be said to be compulsory.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters suggests their recommendation for adoption by cities and towns as minimum requirements for safety. How well these regulations for fire prevention and protection in hazardous locations are followed determines, to an important degree, the insurance rates.

At the present time nearly all specified codes call for the fire shutters to overlap each edge of the port openings by 2 inches, and to be made of iron or steel ¼-inch in thickness, with each shutter arranged so as to slide vertically, without binding, in properly constructed grooves or tracks of No. 10 gauge steel or iron, and so as to fall, when released, by gravity, thus to seal the opening completely. The bottom spacer plate stops of the shutter track are supposed to have non-combustible material to help reduce the noise of impact as the shutter drops, and all fire shutter tracks are to be fastened rigidly to the wall by strong toggle or "through bolts," and where the port opening is quite large, requiring a heavy shutter, this shutter should be counterweighed so as not to tear itself loose from the wall by the force of impact when dropped.

Master Trip Plan

For the master trip arrangement of the fire shutters, a strong pipe of sufficient diameter to carry the load of all the shutters should be installed along the front wall of the projection room near the ceiling and directly over all the port openings. This pipe should have the required number of friction or ball-bearing wall brackets to carry the load properly and they should also be free inside from this pipe so to revolve.

Fire Shutter Apparatus Showing Recommended Master Trip Arrangement

Inserted in this shaft, or pipe, should be a smooth "trip" pin directly in line with the center of each port shutter, and over each pin a small ring, attached to a copper-coated sash chain on which the shutter is fastened, should be slipped on. Each chain hangar for use in holding the shutter normally in place, should have an approved fusible link inserted in the chain which will melt at a temperature of 71° Centigrade, 160° Fahrenheit. The use of a sash chain for holding the shutter open is recommended, due to its long life and durability, as against the use of a fine combustible cord, which deteriorates in time, is affected by temperature changes, and might even break when it has to support the weight of the heavy shutter equipment. The advantage of using the cord is that it will "let-go" more quickly in case of fire, but if the fusible links are placed properly in the chain they will, in all probability, fuse just as quickly. Another bad feature of using the cord, especially in the overhead master trip, is that there is a possibility of transmitting a flame over the cord to a section of unburned film which would otherwise escape the fire.

At the ends of the control pipe, or shaft, counterweighed arms about 18 inches long should be permanently "sweated" on. The use of hanging weights at the ends are not advisable as they can be accidentally "knocked-off," injuring a person, and they also can ruin the finish of the walls by "bumping" against them; moreover, they must be "rehung" every time the shutters are tripped.

Path of Master Trip Chain

The master trip chain, for tripping all shutters automatically, by the fusing of links, or mechanically by hand, should be arranged to run from a trip hook at one door—if there are two doors to the projection room—up to a swivel pulley near the ceiling, then over to a swivel pulley directly over the arm at one end of the control shaft, extending at about 45° from the wall, through an eye-hook in the arm; then over the ceiling to a swivel pulley directly over the back of the upper projector magazine; then down to and through a ring fastened at the catch of the magazine up and over to the other upper magazine; then over through the other arm at the end of the control pipe; and finally through a series of swivel pulleys to a trip hook at the other door.

If only one door is used for exit from the projection room, one end of the master trip chain can be tied-off permanently.

The trip chain should have fusible links at the trip hooks at the doors, and a fusible link near each ring at the upper magazines.

A good trick in conjunction with this trip arrangement is to use an automatic switch with a spring on the handle which is held in compression in the "off" position when the fire shutters are opened and trip chain tied-off. This automatic switch can be installed to control electrically the exhaust fan, emergency lights, etc., in the projector in case of a fire, when the trip chain is released and the handle "snaps" back into the "on" position.

PROJECTION SOUND REPRODUCTION THE SCREEN

A Theatre System for Television

Describing the equipment and operating method used by RCA for large-screen performance

THE TELEVISION system installed in the New Yorker theatre in New York, for demonstration during a fortnight in May, of theatre television, comprised seven units of equipment and was operated by five theatre employes. It was planned for what is considered the "A" market for theatre television at present—namely, theatres of over 2,500 seats located within 20 miles of metropolitan centers.

Within a radius it has been found possible to transmit television by telephone wires—provided the line has no branches and is properly "corrected" at both ends. The program reaches the theatre over such lines from a source which may be either the actual point of pickup or a coaxial cable or radio receiver in touch with the point of pickup.

One of the main features of the opening demonstration was the Overlin-Soose middleweight championship fight the evening of May 9, at Madison Square Garden. First the fight was shot at the Garden by a mobile Television unit. Television cameras caught the light impulses and parabolic (long-range) microphones caught the sound. Together these light and sound impulses were conveyed by telephone wire to NBC in Radio City. From there they were relayed to the New Yorker over a balanced telephone wire, a special wire for carrying television and sound signals.

At the theatre the signals were unmixed, the light impulses being directed to the projector and the sound impulses to loudspeakers by means of two control consoles in the balcony. The sound system consists of 16 loudspeakers set up in different positions throughout the auditorium. The research staff devised the arrangement of the speakers so that the man at the control console could give direction, or "place" the source of, the sound. For instance, if the operator saw from the screen that the sound was coming from the right, he would bring the loudspeakers on the right into play.

The projector, which looks like a steel drum, is 34 inches in diameter and 34 inches long. Inside it is the kinescope, a big television tube built to handle 60,000 to 70,000 volts which are supplied by a high voltage transformer that stands near the projector. At the back of the barrel-shaped projector is a concave mirror 30 inches across. This reflector takes the televised images as they materialize on the face of the tube and casts them through a rectifying and magnifying lens to the screen, 60 feet away. When they reach the screen, the images are 15 by 20 feet.

In its present form the equipment requires sacrifice of 20-30 balcony seats, since the television projector must be located in the front balcony, although indications are that projection room installation will become practicable in the near future. The existing, front-balcony equipment is built low. Patrons in the third row of seats in a balcony of normal pitch can see over it without difficulty.

Four units are placed in the balcony, the projector assembly, an amplifier unit, a transformer-rectifier combination, and the "receiver" which takes the program from the telephone line.

Projector Assembly

The reason balcony installation must be used at present is as follows:

The projector assembly contains the cathode ray tube or kinescope in which the image is formed. The tube has a 7-inch screen looking backward to a 2½-foot parabolic reflector. From that mirror the image is reflected through a singe condenser lens 2½ feet in diameter, which projects the picture to the screen. Being a single lens it is uncorrected, of course; but fuzziness at the edges of the picture is avoided by the fact that the 7-inch screen in the kinescope is carefully curved to compensate for spherical aberration in the condenser. The constants of this optical system are designed for a throw of exactly 60 feet, and in that respect it is capable of only slight adjustment. Mounting the equipment in the projection room waits upon design of a new optical system capable of projection over a longer throw.

The unit containing this projection equipment also includes one of the television control amplifiers, the horizontal scanning amplifier.

Second Balcony Unit

Located in close proximity is the second balcony unit, the vertical scanning amplifier, in its own cabinet. Adjacent to both these units is the kinescope transformer, having an output of 70,000 volts and a rectifier which converts that output to d.c. for operation of the kinescope. The transformer and rectifier are one assembly and constitute the third unit of the equipment in the balcony.

The fourth balcony unit is the "receiver," which is merely a small amplifier that takes the signal from the telephone line and strengthens it before passing it on to the other equipment that is installed in the balcony.

These units, as said, occupy the space of approximately 25 seats in the first two rows. They are wired to the telephone line, and also wired to a standard 120-volt a.c. supply.

The fifth additional unit installed in the New Yorker is the television screen, which is flown in front of the normal screen. It is unperforated, with a silvered rather than a white surface.

The sixth and seventh units are subdivided into several items. They comprise the equipment for television sound, and consist essentially in normal sound amplifiers and in speaker assemblies identical with those ordinarily used in theatres. Since the television screen is unperforated the speakers are not located behind it. In the New Yorker, some speakers are mounted below the television screen; others are placed at either side of the stage and in the auditorium. Manual switching of these speakers was utilized to add panoramic or stereophonic sound effects to the television program.

The Sound System

The sound equipment was wired to a standard power line and to a separate telephone which carries the sound of the television program into the theatre.

Controls for operating the equipment were located at the television projector where the scanning and brightness of the picture can be governed in much the same way as with a home television receiver, and where the focus on the screen can be modified to some degree if necessary. In practice, these controls need little attention; the equipment is turned on and runs as long as the program continues coming over the wire.

Sound controls covering volume and the panoramic effect obtained by switching to different banks of speakers, were located backstage with the sound amplifiers.

In agreement with the theatrical unions, the New Yorker theatre utilized five employes: a projectionist, stationed in the balcony; a stage electrician, stage property man, stage carpenter, and union porter.

OTHER DISCUSSIONS OF INTEREST TO PROJECTIONISTS

From time to time John J. Sefing will deal with subjects related to projection and sound, especially installation and structural affairs, in his "Ways & Means." In this issue he discusses port sound-proofing and shutter arrangement.

IT TAKES ONLY A SECOND TO SEE THE difference

● The new "One Kilowatt" High Intensity arcs really pour daylight on the screen. Projection is vastly improved because of the much higher intrinsic brilliancy of these arcs — 100 to 120% higher than Low Intensity. A comparison will convince you.

Every small theatre needs and can afford this modern high intensity projection light. Ask your dealer for a demonstration.

F. H. Richardson's COMMENT

Equivalent Focus and Other Lens Matters

RECENTLY a letter arrived from a projectionist who was preparing for, or had just taken an examination. He seemed stumped at some of the questions, the first of which was, 'Find the equivalent focus of a 7.5-inch biconvex, and a 7.5-inch meniscus lens. Now the term "equivalent focus" is used to designate just that — the equivalent focus of a compound lens having more than one optical element. It should never be used in conjuiction with a single lens, and if this question was to be so interpreted, it is then fair to say it is a trick question and intended to catch the examinee.

F. H. R.

Optical Tables and Data for the Use of Opticians, by S. P. Thompson of London, published by E. & F. N. Spon, Ltd., 57 Haymarket, London, expresses all that this projectionist (and any of you others) would need to know, in their reference on page 53. It reads:

"If two lenses are placed some distance apart, it is known that the combination is equivalent to a single lens differing in thickness and power from either of them. That is to say, so far as focal lengths, etc., are concerned, it is possible to find a single lens which shall have the same power as the combination. But the single 'equivalent' lens would possess defects of spherical and chromatic aberrations, the avoidance of which is one of the objects to be attained by combining lenses together.

J. A. Schenk of Bausch & Lomb, to whom I referred the examiner's questions, has replied with as follows with respect to the other problems set forth:

"Two Thin Lenses in Contact: In this case the resultant power is simply the sum of the two. Thus a lens of plus 3 diopter combined with one of plus 2.25 diopter, gives it equivalent to a single lens of plus 5.25 diopter. Or a lens of plus 6 diopter combined with one of minus 3.5 diopter, gives, as a result, a single lens of plus 2.5 diopter.

"Two Thin Lenses at a Distance Apart: The rule is that the equivalent lens will have a power equal to that which the two would have when close together, less an amount equal to the product got by multiplying together the powers of the two lenses and the distance between them expressed as decimals of a meter.

"Or, in symbols, the resultant power is $= P_1 + P_2 - P_1 P_2 w$; where P_1 and P_2 are the same powers of the two lenses, and w the width or distance between them. Example: Let the two lenses be $+ 3^D$ and $+ 5^D$; and let $w = 25$ mm. $+ .025$ meters. Then the power of the equivalent lens will be $= 3 + 5 - (15 \times .025 = 8 - .375 = 7.625$ diopters."

The latter part of the above quotation proceeds to tell how to arrive at the equivalent focal length of two thin lenses, both when held close together or when separated by some measurable distance. The formula becomes more involved in the case of motion picture condensing lenses, when the thickness of the lenses themselves must be taken into consideration. I scarcely believe the examinor intended the projectionist to enter into such lengthy discussion, therefore I feel the examiner asks individual questions concerning first, a 7.5-inch biconvex lens, and a 7.5-inch meniscus lens. doubtedly he intended the applicant to answer that "equivalent focus" is a term associated with combination lenses similar to the projection lens, and in the case of the individual condenser lenses the focus may be measured by the simple expedient of imagining a distant light source against a convenient wall and measuring the distance the lens is held away from the wall when this image is sharpest. I feel this simple arrangement is ample for any practical demonstration of information necessary to a projectionist.

The second question has to do with chromatic aberration in an elliptical mirror. If the mirror is true ellipse and of first surface, such as a metal mirror, there would be no chromatic abberation at all; however, such a mirror made of glass, with the silver on the rear, may have slightly different planes of critical focus for the various wave-lengths of light, this being a function of the thickness of the glass involved. However, the difference is so minute that I believe again, for all practical purposes, it is negligible and the projectionist would be justified in saying no chromatic aberration is encountered with elliptical mirrors.

The third question has to do with the sixth edition of my Bluebook of projection, pointing out an inconsistency resulting from a typographical error. We all know that in one instance a lens with a plane on one side, and a concave surface on the other, would be referred to as a plano-concave lens; and another, the two sides of which would have concave surfaces, would be called a double concave or bi-concave lens, whereas that lens which combines both a concave and a convex surface, the concave having the longest radius of curvature, is referred to as a meniscus lens. Certainly there is no occasion for any other interpretations.

Suggesting Improvements In Projection Practice

FROM AN old-time correspondent comes a letter of interest, first because, instead of finding fault with his equipment, his manager and the theatre in which he works, he has only words of praise; also because he offers suggestions for the betterment of projection, and even though all may not agree with these suggestions, they represent constructive thinking about the business from which he gets his living. He writes:

"Greetings once again from 'The Land of the Sky' [Brevard, N. C.]. It has been many moons since I last wrote you, but I have never missed reading your articles in BETTER THEATRES with great interest. Many changes have occurred in our projection equipment since I last wrote you. Then we were using Powers 6B projectors, and De Forest sound, and I was having many a headache because of film scratch.

"About four years ago we installed complete new projection equipment consisting of Western Electric sound, Simplex E-7 projectors with large cast metal base, and low-intensity reflector arcs. The picture we get is so steady it almost seems cemented on the screen, and my trouble with scratched film is definitely a thing of the past.

"On June 26, 1939, we opened another theatre up here, we have tried hard to make it just as a theatre should be. In line with your teachings, the projection room is nearly on a level with the screen. The room itself is large, roomy and well ventilated, being 20 feet wide, 15 feet high and 10 feet deep. We have placed everything necessary to projection within easy reaching distance. The projectors are E-7s with the new "one kilowatt" Simplex high lamps, with Series 2 Bausch & Lomb lenses. Simplex sound is used and naturally we have the big heavy bases, too. Our rewinds are both automatic and hand, and in the new house we use 1/8-inch iron, supported with 3/4-inch pipe for frame and legs for the frames of the rewind table, which is 18 inches wide and 10 feet long.

"Some time ago you suggested that we projectionists send you ideas for changes and improvements. Here is my list:

First, the matter of change-over cues. There should be a difference in the shape of the motor start and the light change cue; for instance, a circle for motor start, and a star for light change cue. But the most important change needed is this: Instead of having cue marks in four succeeding frames, have them staggered. This can be accomplished by having a circle in the first frame, skip one frame, a circle in the third frame, skip two frames and place the third circle in No. 6 frame, etc. If this were done it would not be necessary to force the eyes to stay open in order not to miss the cue. Many times I have missed the motor cue, due to batting my eyes!

"Many are careless about the white circle which is supposed to be around each cue mark. This is very bad in technicolor prints for you rarely find these prints with all cues visible.

"The present manner of making cue marks—four in succession—is like trying to dodge a bullet coming at you, and I feel that the successive frame arrangement, also lack of definition, are the main reasons for scratching of cue marks by projectionists.

"Another annoyance is the lack of frame distinction. In fadeouts and dark scenes it is impossible to tell where frame lines are and consequently we find a good many misframes. In a very few prints we find small notches to show division, but the most are straight and opaque. I am sure every projectionist would welcome such a change.

"Another objection I have is the fade out on the end of a reel. M.G.M. is the only producer, in my opinion, that makes reel end fadeouts correctly. Others are too short, too long or are marked wrong. It seems the producers have forgotten the power and effect of the fadeout. It should be at least 8 feet long. D. W. Griffith was a smart man. He played a large part in raising the movies from a toy to a legiti-mate business, and the invention of the fade-out and closeup were instrumental in this.

"Green prints are something that certainly need attention. Many prints are ruined on old or ill-designed machines because the emulsion is not hard or 'cured' enough, and when a lubricant is placed upon them it eventually spreads all over the print.

"I am nearly done, but there is still the matter of Title Leaders on some shorts—I mean the name of the subject (not the one the audience sees, but the one for projectionists only). All technicolor, one-reel shorts have no name on the leader. It is necessary to run 25 or 30 feet of film off onto the floor to find out the name.

"I read of so many managers that fail to supply adequate repairs to their propectionists for their equipment. I must be pretty lucky, for my employer asks once a month if there is anything I need—and I have darned near ideal equipment, too!

"More power to you, Dad, and may we have more and longer articles in BETTER THEATRES."

There, boys, is a letter that is a letter, and I was as glad to get it as I am sure you will be to read it.

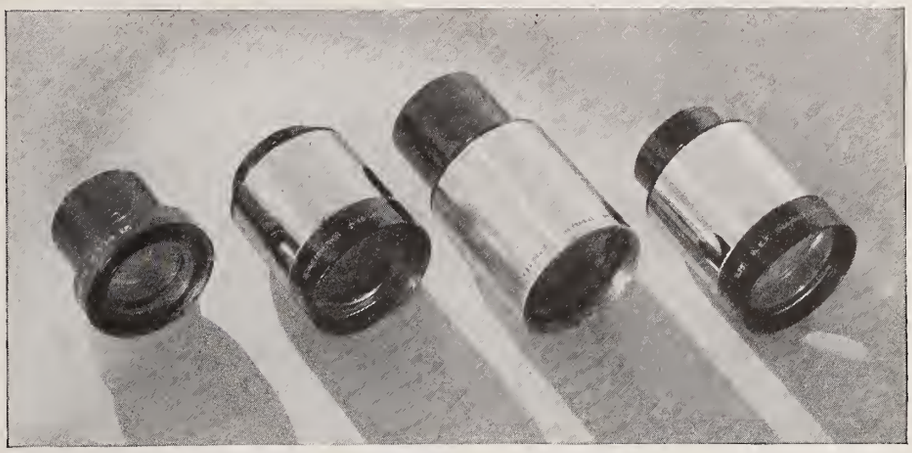
Thanks for Remembering

IT IS my desire to express, from the bottom of my heart, thanks to the many persons who have written friendly and encouraging letters during the course of my illness, which has lasted for several months. When a fellow is ill a few words of kindness and encouragement go further than most doctor's prescriptions to pull him back along the road to health.

I have had many, many kind letters from many, many friends some of whom are far up along the ladder of success in many fields and literally hundreds of letters from brother projectionists which are so sincere and warm that I could not give up the fight if I wanted to. Thanks To You All!

While it is impossible to quote the many letters, I will publish one of the first to arrive and which I shall keep for the rest of my days. Not many words were used, but it warmed my heart to the bottom.

"To F. H. Richardson, #3 Tudor Lane,
Scarsdale, New York:



Dear Rich: The projectionists of the Loew's State Theatre, New York City, have not forgotten you and never will.

Signed by: Larry Jones, Wally Byrne, Nils Hoiness, Patsy Ciambrelli, Max Kessler, Thomas Burhans."

A Trip and Projection Highlights Along the Way

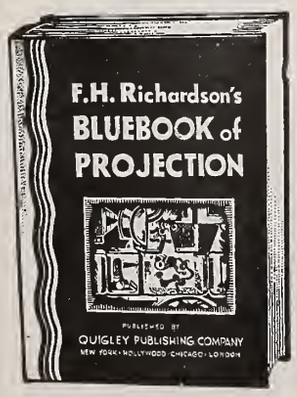
WELL, THE old man is not dead yet! There have been times in the past six months when I could hear the flapping of wings on one side of me and smell brimstone on the other, but so far I have been able to tell both sides they can go chase themselves. And just to discourage them from waiting around ready to

FOR BETTER PROJECTION

BAUSCH & LOMB
SUPER CINEPHOR LENSES

Today's audiences have become more and more critical of picture quality. Whether the film is black and white or color, they expect crisp definition and brilliance that rivals the actual scene. That is why leading theaters equip their projectors with Bausch & Lomb Super Cinephor Projection lenses.

The new Super Cinephor made on an entirely new formula, utilizes glasses with special properties and high transmission developed for it. Its aperture ratio is thereby increased from f:2.3 to f:2.0.



Added to this high speed is a further gain in light transmission due to the coated lenses. This Bausch & Lomb feature cuts to a minimum light losses due to reflection from air to glass surfaces. Thus a remarkable gain in light transmission and image brilliance is attained. By eliminating scattered internal reflections, greater detail and contrast are provided.

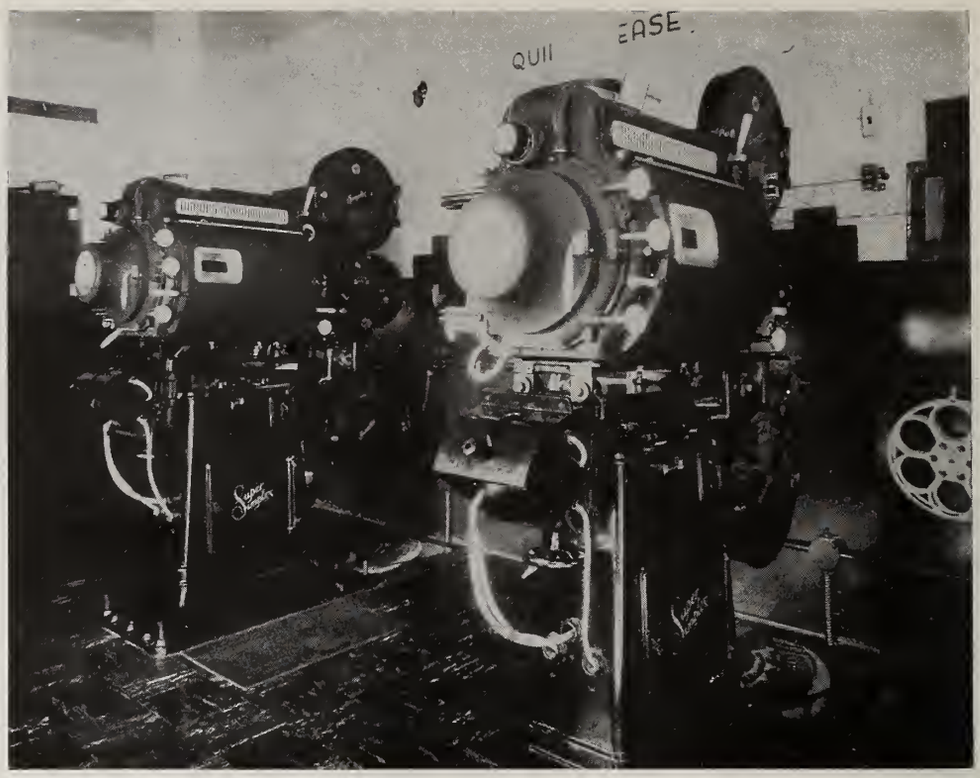
pick me up, Friend Daughter and I decided a short vacation was in order. Piling our toothbrushes and soap into several suitcases we departed, via auto, for a visit with our good old-time friends, the Otto Nelsons, in Dayton, Ohio.



Otto Nelson, you will remember, dates from 'way back yonder in motion picture work. He became connected with the National Cash Register Company before the first cash registers were put on the market. One might say Otto started from scratch in the motion picture field, and this start was an accident.

It is an interesting story. J. H. Patterson, founder and former head of National Cash Register, spent a few months touring Europe. With him he had several cameras, but in shipping them back to Dayton, he lost trace of the best of the lot. All efors to locate it were of no avail, and eventually the steamship company settled for it.

Here's where the accident comes in. The lost camera was delivered to N.C.R. without record. It somehow reached the tool room in Dayton, where Nelson worked, and was tucked away under a bench. The tool department was moved three times and this crate, contents unknown, was moved with the department. Curiosity finally got the best of Nelson. He opened the crate and found the camera, which, since he had never even taken a snapshot in his life, he knew nothing about. Finally, however, he got it together just as Mr. Patterson happened along. Patterson naturally was pleased that it had been found, and since Nelson was fooling with it supposed he knew how to use it and told him to go take a picture of their main building.

The next hour was spent by Nelson in an attempt to find someone who could tell him how to take a picture. Finally a worker said, "All you have to do is to point the thing at what you want to take and push that bulb." This was done, and as luck would have it, the picture turned out to be the finest ever yet taken of the plant. From then on Otto was in charge of photography, which position led to supervisor of projection, which has played a very important part in the development of the N.C.R., in recreation, education of employes and in advertising. Last year, after 56 years of very faithful service, Mr. Nelson was retired when the company decided against retaining any one over a certain age—a fact which may cause J. A. Patterson to sleep uneasily in his last resting place. Incidentally, if any of you ever get a copy of the book which Otto plans to write now that he has the time, take my advice and read it. I have sat by the hour listening to his experiences and he had had some lalapaloosas.

We took two days going out, had a very pleasant visit and started home. I felt so spry I decided to make the whole trip in one day. Starting at 8:20 a.m. from Dayton, we arrived in Scarsdale, N. Y., at 12:20 a.m., a distance of 663 miles. We took the new Pennsylvania Turnpike, and

This is the projection room of the Will Rogers theatre in Charleston, Ill., sent in by Dale Armstrong, projectionist. The room is 14x20 feet, with a 9-foot ceiling. The concrete floor is covered with asphalt tile. The mechanisms are Simplex E-7, with 18-inch magazines, mounted on Super-Simplex bases. Lamps are Peerless Magnarcs, using 6½x8-mm. trim, drawing about 58 amperes, with 34-38 volts at the arc, supplied by a Hertner Transverter of 65-130 ampere capacity. The new Bausch and Lomb coated lenses, with spread of f 2, and focal length of 4.75 inches, are used with approximately 126-foot projection distance. The screen is 15½x21 feet, the projection angle 3°. Sound is "Mirrophonic," capable of 15-watt output, but this is being changed by adding another power amplifier to increase output to approximately 50 watts, undistorted. The men working in this theatre appreciate what they have, and do their best to keep it in shipshape order. Brother Armstrong says, "We are as cranky as old maids about the appearance and condition of our equipment. We have been ribbed many times because we wear boot moccasins on our shoes while working so as not to scratch the waxed floors, for with fifteen years of experience in projection we find that cleanliness and timely repairs make for better projection—and the best is what we strive for. We keep as reference books, which are always at hand, your second revision of the Sixth Edition of the Bluebook, Radio Physics, by Ghirardi, and Croft's Library of Electricity."

I'm here to say it is about the best thing in roads I ever expect to see. Upon approaching a tunnel one sees signs posted which say, "Reduce speed to 50 miles per hour!" They have a highway speed limit, though; it's 70 miles per hour! Which all goes to show you guys who want to send me lillies, you'd getter raise 'em from seed!

More Requests for Projection Room Views

A NUMBER of the men have written in during the past few months asking for more pictures of projection rooms. The lastest is simply signed "From a humble apprentice." It says:

"Each month I receive my copy of BETTER THEATRES and immediately turn to your page so I can read letters with helpful suggestions from the 'boys.' I believe it was about two years ago that the brother projectionists were sending in pictures of their projection rooms. I found these snapshots to be very interesting and often wonder why the men stopped sending them in. Surely everyone in the field is interested in what the other fellow's workshop looks like, and many good ideas are obtained from them for use in their own rooms.

"Take, for instance, the picture of the Alabama theatre projection room in Houston, Texas. Brother Nelson gave us a fine idea by showing the under part of his work bench, which is on casters and used as a truck in which to haul film. I know nearly all projectionists read your column and all to whom I speak are interested in such pictures.

"I am only an apprentice but hope that some day I will be a real honest-to-gosh, top-notch projectionist. I am certainly willing to work hard and study to accomplish that end. If this comes to pass and I do become first-rate in my chosen profession, it will be due very largely to your teachings, for which I duly thank you."

Well, son, it seems to me you are traveling the right road and will reach your objective if you really continue to "study and work hard," for that is the one and only way I have ever found to get ahead in this world. Your words of gratitude are indeed appreciated.

And now, you guys, what about those snapshots. They're easy to take these days, and they're interesting to many of your fellow projectionists.

Building for American Industry and Defense

ONE EVENING in May, Edward and William Bausch led a group of 35 employes of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, being honored by the firm in recognition of more than 50 years of service. All are still on the job; one has been with the company 57 years. It seemed a good occasion on which to make note of the growth of B. & L., which has not only been closely associated with the development of motion picture technology, but is now one of the great optical organizations of the world and an important cog in our national defense machinery.

John J. Bausch had been trained in optics but when he arrived in America, seeking a land of liberty after the German revolution of 1848, he had to get work as a wood turner. There wasn't anything doing in the optical line in the United States of 1849. Barring one unsuccessful venture in his regular vocation, he kept at wood turning until 1853. Then, with $60 borrowed from Henry Lomb, who also had quit Germany, he opened an optical shop in a little store in downtown Rochester. . . . And now look at the picture of the Bausch & Lomb plant today. Incidentally, the interesting story of the growth of this establishment, which has done so much to give America at last a place in the optical sun, is told in a little illustrated booklet which, I believe, can be procured from the company, unless it is out of print.

B. & L. plant today, covering 29 acres, employing 6,500

Edward Bausch is active as chairman of the board at the age of 87.

New Equipment Installed at Palace Theater

With the opening of the Jack Benny-Fred Allen-Mary Martin picture, Love Thy Neighbor, Palace patrons will enjoy new sound and new screen improvements in the theatre.

Installation of new projection machines in the booth, a new sound system throughout the theatre and a new screen of latest design was completed this week, and these improvements will be brought into complete use for the first time Wednesday

Elmer Zrenner, technical engineer for Interstate Circuit, supervised the installation of the improved equipment after having made a trip to New York to select the units. National Theatre Supply Company installed the equipment.

The new Simplex E-7 projection machines in the booth enable the motion picture operator to perform his duty more efficiently. In addition, the images are more clearly defined on the screen, the light is steadier, all blur is eliminated and the light is "whiter" and more brilliant than has been possible in the past.

The sound system has been improved and amplified by the addition of new speakers, built especially for the acoustical problems of the Palace. Sound is clearer and is uniform throughout the house. Research developments also have made possible richer tone in the musical numbers, a point that will be clearly demonstrated in the several songs in Love Thy Neighbor.

AMBITION and FURY

TRAGEDY walks with William Fox. It is tragedy for him and tragedy, too, for all of us of this adventurous world of the motion picture. He has come to a debacle of sullied ambitions in the epilogue of a career of high attainment, great name, great power—all won by real ability, rare daring, amazing courage and endless labour. Now it has come to nothing, to far less than nothing. His laurels are ashes and he is left with empty, futile regrets. The industry to which he gave so much, from which he took so much, has a burning scar on its tradition.

A little boy from the village of Tulchva in Hungary, nurtured in the moiling penury of New York's lower East Side, worked and fought his way to a living, to success, to dominance in a self-made empire of the motion picture. He held a dictatorial mastery of many men and many millions, ruled over perhaps as much as half a billion dollars. He came in time into dire controversy, avalanches of defeat and loss; ultimately admitted, declared himself bankrupt.

But dollar bankruptcy, no matter what its terms were, was not the real failure of William Fox.

That real failure was declared on the recent day when he answered "guilty" to an indictment for the bribery of a Federal judge.

The path of courage and energy and ambition came to its sordid end, it seems, that dark hour when a handful of thousand-dollar bills, folded into a newspaper, was passed in a Philadelphia areaway.

Moral bankruptcy had arrived.

His cup overflows with bitter tea.

FOR many the year of his relentless, driving, demanding career he cried persecution. None in all the warring world of the screen was so much in the courts, so insistent with charges of invasion of his rights, his property.

In the end, divested of his powers, he caused the writing of a book to damn contemporaries of the motion picture and his every contact with the world of finance. All men were scoundrels, larcenous foes engaged in conspiracy to rob William Fox. That is what he told Upton Sinclair, author, and that was what Mr. Sinclair wrote, in 1933.

When William Fox entered that plea of guilty, was it in repentance or expediency? Is he proving his persecution by doing it himself? He is dramatically equal to that, too.

It is even possible, if one were to seek to explore the processes of another man's mind, that William Fox, so egocentric, so convinced that anything less than rule of his world was for him martyrdom, would seek the only justice he could know—his own will—hence justice, even if he had to buy it.

One who lived and worked with less fury could not have climbed to such a peak from which to plunge so precipitously. The power which gives great speed makes big wrecks.

In a century and a half of the American judiciary, just two indictments for corruption of the Federal bench and the buying of judgments have come to the cold light of exposure. William Fox has now stood in court to say that he is responsible for one of them. He did that for himself, for the industry which gave him success, for America—for him the land of opportunity and fortune.

He did not need to do it. He did do it. Now everyone is sorry; none has profited. Society has from it all only losses to share.

THE FITZGIBBONS

THE succession of Mr. J. J. Fitzgibbons to the presidency of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., is important to all showmen as a signal recognition of merit and competency in showmanship.

Mr. Fitzgibbons, having been these several years in Canada as the operating lieutenant of Mr. N. L. Nathanson, is still to be remembered on this side of the border for his services in the old Publix theatre organization, functioning notably in New England and in Texas. That, in turn, reminds us that the rise of The Fitzgibbons in the north has been paralleled by the rise of The O'Donnell in the south, in that same Texas, in fact.

One excellent reason for this outgiving concerning Mr. Fitzgibbons is that, while putting in a word for him, we can also put in one for Motion Picture Herald. It is a most apparent part of the Fitzgibbons operation that he makes use of, and continuously causes his theatre managers to make use of, the service departments of the Herald, including Better Theatres, the book of the physical theatre and its housekeeping, and the Managers' Round Table section, pertaining to exploitation of the product.

Mr. A-Mike Vogel of that Round Table, looking over the editorial shoulder as this goes on paper, remarks, also, that the Fitzgibbons policy anent those exploitation pages, believing in giving as well as taking, encourages, most positively, contributions to those pages from his managers.

"It is amazing," observes Mr. Fitzgibbons, "that so many good managers can see and execute selling ideas for either a screen personality or a story, yet fail to realize the importance of publicity for themselves. When a manager fails to take advantage given to him [access to the Managers' Round Table pages, for instance—the Editor] he dissipates an asset of inestimable value to himself."

MR. WILFRED FUNK, publisher, got curious last autumn about why people buy books. He had ten thousand questionnaire postcards tucked into three books as they went into distribution, asking. The returns now reported say that 57 percent bought because of reviews, 23 percent by reason of word of mouth and 20 percent through advertising. Mr. Funk's survey did not and could not, however, discover how many of the reviews, or how much of the "word of mouth" took origin in advertising. "They Say" is an oracle of uncertain inspirations.

This Week in the News

High Price for Talent

AGENTS have profited more than any other Hollywood group from the new order of operations imposed upon production by the consent decree, Walter Wanger, independent producer, said Monday in Hollywood. Efforts of companies signatory to the decree to secure services of a maximum number of personalities so as to have the utmost resources available for making up the blocks-of-five required by the decree have resulted, according to Mr. Wanger, in a scarcity of talent which has enabled agents to sell "almost anyone" at high prices.

Consequently few personalities are available to independent producers, said Mr. Wanger, and these few at virtually prohibitive figures. One result of the "scramble for talent," he predicted, will be to make the product "more mechanical than ever" on account of studio concentration upon building up a supply of blocks at sacrifice of quality.

Silverstone Resigns

STOCKHOLDERS of United Artists have accepted the resignation of Murray Silverstone, general manager in charge of world-wide operations, Mary Pickford, U. A. co-owner-producer, announced on Wednesday in Hollywood. Mr. Silverstone will form his own unit to produce features for United Artists release. A meeting of the United Artists partners approved Mr. Silverstone's request that he be released from his present contract as soon as a successor was appointed.

Mr. Silverstone revealed that Miss Pickford was interested in, and would be identified with the new Silverstone producing company. Mr. Silverstone entered the motion picture industry from the staff of the New York district attorney in 1918. His United Artists association began as sales representative and later manager in South America, Australasia and London. He was appointed chairman of the executive committee in April 1938 and later became chief of world-wide operations.

Golf with Showmanship

PROFESSIONAL golf lessons at regular theatre prices were a new departure offered recently at the Warner Sanford, in Irvington, N. J., where in exchange for resultant publicity, a local "pro" cooperated in lessons from the stage to explain the various strokes and proper grips. According to Tony Williams, district manager, much attention to the lessons was had from among the golfers in that sector who were informed of the proceedings through a vigorous promotional campaign, which increased grosses appreciably at little expense.

How the Warnermen went about it and with what, is detailed among other reports from the field in this week's Managers' Round Table, which starts on page 59.

Sues Nazi Films

UFA, German films distributor in this country, will be prevented from distributing the now famous Nazi chronicle of victories on the Western Front, "Sieg im Westen," if the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, of New York, has its way. The League this week applied to the New York Supreme Court, Albany, for an order of mandamus, directing Frank P. Graves, the state's Commissioner of Education, to restrain dispensing, and even exhibition, of the film, until a license as a feature is obtained.

The League asserts the film is not a newsreel; therefore it needs to bear a license from the state's Board of Regents. The League further asserts success of its case will establish that such films are not newsreels; merely propaganda. It had protested, previously, to the State Department and to the Department of Justice, alleging German "newsreel" compilations are efforts to interfere with this nation's internal affairs.

"Sieg im Westen" is currently at the 96th Street Theatre, in New York's German district. It has also played in several other cities.

16 mm. Chaplins

THE FAMOUS Lone Star-Mutual two reel Chaplin comedies of 1917, subject of more copyright controversy and more contract issues than any other pictures in history, were involved in court action again this week when on Wednesday in Los Angeles Federal court, Festival Films, Inc., holders of some 35 mm. rights, sued Edward Cohen, operating Movie Parade Theatre, for violation of copyright by the exhibition of 16 mm. versions of the pictures at issue.

Festival Films, represented by Herbert Silverberg, is a subsidiary of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, which is a subsidiary of Guaranteed Pictures Corporation, which claims possession of all rights on the Chaplin pictures by a succession of transactions going back to the Lone Star Corporation which made the pictures.

The Lone Star Corporation, headed by John R. Freuler, made that first spectacular star contract by which Charles Chaplin was paid $670,000 for what was to have been a year's work. Mr. Chaplin, delaying for inspiration, spent eighteen months on the job. In the days of that contract there was neither 16 mm. nor television and the Chaplin contract took no cognizance of such media. Meanwhile all rights, of any nature, belonged to Lone Star, and under that contract, every version of every picture wherever or whenever exhibited required Mr. Chaplin's approval.

Fireside Chat Cost 30%

CIRCUIT leaders in New York receiving wired reports from their theatres in the field, Wednesday morning, following President Roosevelt's emergency radio talk, counted an average of 30 per cent drop in attendance. Scores of theatres throughout the country circumvented the conflicting theatre and radio time, by plugging in the broadcast on loud speakers in theatre lobbies, widely publicizing that fact in advance.

Not since President Roosevelt's first fireside chat to the nation on March 4, 1933, did the country stay by its loud speakers as it did for Tuesday night's message from the White House.

More than 500 radio stations, both independent and chain, broadcast the speech and a large number rebroadcast it at a later time. Short wave stations carried the talk with translations around the world.

Stephen Early, presidential secretary, Wednesday, estimated 69,650,000 persons in the United States heard the President's message, an all time high, he said.

Zukor the Realtor

SCENICALLY minded Adolph Zukor, whose first motion picture enterprise was the Engadine Corporation, named for a famously beautiful valley of his homeland, has turned again to the land and landscape. Now with Federal Housing Administration alliances, he is converting his 700 acre estate at New City, in Rockland County, New York, west of the Hudson, into a realty development devoted to smaller homes. It will be called Rockingham Park. It has been estimated that Mr. Zukor has over the years spent something more than three million dollars on the development of his estate. A great deal of it was for moving some brooks and pushing the hills around. His foreman, one Murphy, used to inquire every morning what changes of the landscape were in order for the day. That was when Mr. Zukor was commuting between Haverstraw and New York by speed boat. In those days his guest house at New York City was a motion picture institution, and on his courses many a pinochle player learned about golf.

CBS Unloading

PENDING disposal by Columbia Broadcasting System of its interests in concert talent management will return the concert field to independent management, away from the influence of broadcasters, for the first time since radio took over the concert field for the exploitation of its talent.

Anticipating further Federal Communications Commission anti-monopoly orders—such as those which recently ordered the National Broadcasting Company to sell its Blue network, and which criticized the activities of the chain broadcasters in music, lecture, and record fields—the Columbia Broadcasting System board of directors met in New York at mid-week to consider selling its Artists Bureau, with a vast array of talent, to the Music Corporation of America. The board was also to vote on sale of its Columbia Concerts Corporation to that corporation's minority stockholders.

Reported, but unconfirmed price, at mid-week, was $500,000, for the contracts of talent now held by the CBS Artists Bureau. It was said final decision would be made by the CBS stockholders.

The "artists"—including actors, lecturers, and band leaders—were to be shifted from one agency to another, in the deal, as baseball players are shifted. Whatever their objections might be, or those of the American Federation of Radio Artists, it was pointed out that the contracts of these personalities are assignable.

MCA thus far, has booked bands; the acquisition of the new talent places it among the country's foremost booking agencies.

Columbia Concerts Corporation comprises the largest concert management firms, who represent great stars of the music world: Yehudi Menuhin, Lily Pons and Richard Crooks, Lawrence Tibbett, Rose Bampton, among a score.

Officials of the Federal Communications Commission are scheduled to appear before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee June 2nd to discuss the desirability of an investigation of the network-operation regulations issued by the commission last April 3rd.

Churchill Wins

CONFIRMED by a letter, the Publicity Directors Committee of Hollywood in session with the "correspondents group," have agreed to "an effort to preview pictures in Hollywood for the press, in advance of other showings elsewhere." This, on May 24, was the outcome, for the while, of the issues raised by the Hollywood reviewers and correspondents for the national and international press, under the leadership of Douglas Churchill of the New York Times, sometimes known as "The Churchill of the West" to avoid confusion with the overseas situation.

It is somewhat unofficially said that the aim is to give the West Coast reviewers two weeks lead over previews and openings.

The matter of adequate differentiation between the interests and functions of the lay press and of the trade press and the priority interest of the motion picture exhibitor was yet to receive attention and action. MOTION PICTURE HERALD has editorially stated the position of the showmen, the exhibitors, who do not want to be told about pictures by their customers before the retailers have heard about them.

Paramount's Answer

PARAMOUNT Newsreel, in its last release depicting strike scenes at the Navy's shipyard in San Francisco, answered the criticisms of the Daily Worker and PM, newspapers in New York, that its news coverage of labor upsets in connection with defense production activity was biased, that Paramount News was purposely cutting labor scenes from its footage.

The Paramount release, which originally was filmed for 400 feet, was slashed to 50 feet by Navy censors, and in an introductory note to the film, the Paramount editors explained the reason for footage deletions, inserting at one point in the film a black lettered band stretching across the screen, informing the audience that shots were "Censored by the United States Navy."

Alperson at KAO

CHARLES W. KOERNER, general manager of RKO-Keith theatres, Wednesday, disclosed the appointment of Edward L. Alperson as general manager of the circuit's film buying and booking department. Max Fellerman's status continues as chief film buyer and booker.

Grierson Stays

REPORTS that the Canadian Government has been entertaining designs to abolish the National Film Board as a wartime "luxury," especially since there is another active office, the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, seem to have been spiked by John Grierson's recent statement that he is remaining at his post.

Mr. Grierson came to Canada from England before the war, on the Canadian Government's invitation to re-vitalize the Canadian motion picture scene.

He has put an end to all speculation with his announcement: "I'm staying on."

Talent Tastes

TWO thirds of the film actors questioned in Hollywood by Dr. Leo Rosten's Motion Picture Research Project criticized the kind of stories in which they appeared.

The actors criticize "propaganda," "trifling plots," "too much gag humor," "too much talk and not enough action" and "too little care." They also think our films lack the subtlety of foreign films.

The actors were asked, specifically, what kind of stories Hollywood should produce, what they thought about the originality of stories they play in, how the stories should be treated, what they thought of the "star" system, and what part they thought boxoffice results played in judging film content. Only a small percentage criticized the star system.

RCA GETS 'BIDS' FROM CIRCUITS FOR ITS WIDE-SCREEN TELEVISION

Formation of Coast-to-Coast Wired Network Seen Plan Behind Report of Request For 'Hundreds' of RCA Units

A bid from at least one of the largest motion picture circuits in the country for exclusive, nationwide rights to the Radio Corporation of America's new large-screen theatre television was reported in RCA quarters this week, barely a fortnight after RCA presented its large screen television pictures to the industry at a demonstration in the New Yorker theatre, New York. The film circuit was described as bidding for "several hundred" of the RCA units if it can have them exclusively for a coast-to-coast chain of television theatres. RCA has said theatre television sets would cost $30,000 apiece.

Fox West Coast-National theatres, headed by the Skourases, was mentioned in high RCA quarters as the author of an initial offer to buy or lease rights to the theatre television projector which reproduces either wired or broadcast pictures on a 15 by 20 foot screen.

Chase Interest Seen

Chase National Bank, of New York, owns a controlling interest in Fox West Coast.

It was recalled in television circles that the National theatres group had expressed interest in the possibility of wide screen television long before the first public demonstration at New York on May 9th, and are understood to have launched a study of television costs soon after the RCA equipment was demonstrated to the Federal Communications Commission at New York late in January.

More significance was added to the reports by the comment of George Skouras, head of Skouras Theatres in the east, after he had witnessed the New Yorker demonstration three weeks ago, when Mr. Skouras observed: "My opinion is that television has reached the stage of being box-office entertainment. The expense of the program is of no importance, if the product supply is available. Possible Government control, through the FCC, need not be alarming unless theatre television is used for something other than entertainment." (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, May 17th, page 15).

Sources of product, program types and the mechanics of a coast-to-coast television network at this time were not described, nor are they believed to have even been discussed at this early stage of the bidding. Presumably the circuit executives and bankers have surveyed product possibilities and are sufficiently confident of an early technical solution of the problem of long range television relay to be ready to make concrete offers for a "ground floor" position in the exploitation of television.

The Chase-National theatre interests are also closely associated with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, major producing unit for motion pictures. Observers note that the Fox studios, talent, and production experience could easily become a source of television product. In its promotion of the large screen television RCA has repeatedly emphasized the need for a product source outside of the equipment field and has repeatedly appealed to the motion picture industry, along with sports interests, to consider the formation of sources to supply theatre television receivers with topflight entertainment and sports pictures.

Executives at RCA were unwilling to discuss any bids or formally divulge the nature of any conversations with potential circuit customers. At Los Angeles, the National Theatres home office denied, through Andy Krappman, aide to Charles Skouras, that Fox West Coast was interested in RCA's televison on any basis at present. He advanced the claim that television is impractical for theatre use now because of production limitations. Mr. Krappman referred inquiries on any deal with RCA, to Spyros Skouras, "big boss" of National Theatres, who was not available.

Meanwhile other approaching film circuit television participations are promised via Paramount-Balaban and Katz Theatres, in Chicago, through Paramount's interest in Dumont Television, which B. and K. has been developing in Chicago.

Rialto to Use Scophony

The first American theatre to present large size television on its screen meanwhile appeared likely to be the Rialto theatre, "house of horrors," operated at Broadway and 42nd Street, New York, by Arthur Mayer. Last week Mr. Mayer and Scophony Television, Ltd., announced that the Rialto had signed a contract for the installation of a 6 by 8-foot receiver similar to the television apparatus installed and operated in the Odeon and Monsiegneur theatres, London, by Scophony before the war. Arthur Levey represented Scophony in the American deal.

Part of the equipment used in Britain has been shipped to this country and will form the nucleus of the installation at the Rialto. The apparatus will be altered to conform with standards agreed upon by the Television Standards Committee. Preliminary tests with home receivers at the Rialto, according to Scophony engineers, indicated that there should be no technical difficulty, or excessive electrical interference in the successful operation of the large size equipment. A regulation television antenna will be installed on the roof of the theatre to pick up programs directly from the air.

A teamsters' strike in New York delayed transportation of the Scophony equipment to the theatre. However, it was expected to be in operation within a week or ten days.

Mr. Mayer, who has operated the house with second rank features and first run horror pictures revealed that the theatre would pick up experimental programs telecast by NBC, CBS and other transmitters in New York until the fifteen hour a week minimum of operation recently approved by the FCC starts on July 1st.

What will happen with Rialto programs after commercial telecasting becomes permissible on a regular schedule after July 1st remains a question. Mr. Mayer has indicated that the Rialto will be willing to pay "reasonable" license fees for copyright material such as ASCAP or BMI music, or copyright royalties for dramatic vehicles or similar material.

Commercial Programs Free

Sponsors of commercial television programs, said to be anxious to give commercial messages widest possible circulation, will approve of theatres using their program, Mr. Mayer believes. Only for sustaining programs will theatres be asked to pay television fees, he predicted. Moreover, he indicated, there are legal assurances that the theatre or anyone else may pick up and exhibit regularly broadcast events. He said there had been no indication of antagonism from any of the three companies planning to start regular television programs in July. They are NBC, CBS and Dumont. The latter company, with theatre connections of its own through Paramount, the Balaban and Katz circuits, is said to have expressed encouraging interest in the Rialto's pioneering with public box office reaction to theatre television.

The question of theatre reproduction of programs telecast primarily for home reception raised a score of legal questions, however, which broadcasters, theatre operators, and lawyers were hesitant to approach. There was general agreement that they would remain a moot issue until a test case is brought by a broadcaster against a specific theatre charging invasion of property rights, or otherwise attacking the uncompensated use of telecast material.

A further complication appeared in whether television would rank with newsreels and news photographs

Precedents establishing the right to receive and use commercially programs or pictures broadcast at random over the air waves were few and none authoritative. Most lawyers held, however, that the sponsors of sports events, such as prize fights, baseball games or horse races would have a superior proprietary right over any televised picturization of the event, particularly if it were displayed commercially in competition with the event itself. It was observed, too, that the right of photographic privacy has been widely upheld in the courts.

Last year when NBC was engaged in an extensive program of experimental telecasting it received permission from Mike Jacobs, head of the 20th Century Sporting Club, to televise a fight at Yankee Stadium. A nearby theatre installed a television receiver in its lobby, and advertised that its patrons could see the fight for 25 cents. Mr. Jacobs protested violently but the theatre was not forced to halt the program or its advertising. Mr. Jacobs eventually refused to permit further telecasting of fights which he promoted.

THEATRE TO PRESENT RADIO PLAYS

Believed to be the first tie-up of its kind, the Keith's theatre, a Stanley-Warner house in Philadelphia, will sponsor a little theatre group for radio dramatizations. Starting Sunday, June 1st, a group of semi-professionals, directed by David Glenn, and to be known as the Keith's Theatre Players, will present a weekly series of radio dramatizations each Sunday, from 3 to 3:15 P.M., over WDAS, Philadelphia. Each broadcast will present a dramatized adaptation of the theatre's current attraction.

One broadcast period each month will be devoted to a motion picture contest. Three scenes from three outstanding pictures produced during the past decade will be dramatized and listeners asked to guess the picture titles. The first 25 correct answers will be awarded pairs of house passes. The programs will be produced by Dave Horowitz, assistant manager of the theatre, in association with Jack Goldman, manager of the theatre.

BLOCKS-OF-5, AND SCREENING MAY HAVE TO BE ABANDONED, SAYS YALE

Yale Law School, Analyzing Consent Decree Enforcement, Question Merit of Selling Practices Imposed by Document

Giving the industry, the United States Government and any other interested parties to the motion picture consent decree probably the most outspoken opinion to date of that new order imposed by the Department of Justice, authorities of Yale Law School declare the selling practices of the decree are "of questionable merit," that, "surely the possibility of abuse exists in the workings of the former practices," and, "it may be that the 'blocks-of-5' and 'trade showing' clauses will have to be abandoned, and new procedures devised in the light of future experience."

The Yale report was published this week by the American Arbitration Association, in its Journal, Vol 5, No. 2.

It is admitted, of course, that only a fair trial can determine "whether the artificial compromise developed as a curative will relieve or only aggravate the evils inherent in the distribution system."

"Does Not Go Far Enough"

Delving into an analysis of the enforcement of the decree as a part of its continuing study of the legal, legislative and economic aspects of American industry and Government, Yale Law School, in its Yale Law Journal, observes also that the decree's provisions against clearance, run and other forms of discrimination "are weak only in those instances where they do not go far enough and in the over simplification in denoting circuit buying power as the sole cause of favoritism.

"The decree is the product of negotiation and compromise by contesting parties, and therefore can hardly be expected to achieve a legislative standard of perfection," observes the Yale Law analysis, continuing: "It is broad in scope and highly experimental in certain of its details," stressing here that the merits or evils of the various must eventually prove themselves through experience in practice.

"It would be unfortunate to judge the success or failure of the decree as a unit," warns the report, "for the decree has been aimed at more than one channel of restraint. Moreover, in the establishment of the grievance machinery of disinterested arbitration (through the American Arbitration Association system), the decree has achieved a technical advance in anti-trust enforcement which may prove of greater value than any of the provisions more particularly related to motion pictures.

"From the standpoint of development of anti-trust law, perhaps the most significant single feature of the decree is the delegation of its primary enforcement to an independent arbitration tribunal under the aegis of the experienced American Arbitration Association. Power to invoke this remedy rests solely with exhibitor complaints not party to the original anti-trust action or in any way bound by the contents of the decree. By this procedure, the prohibitions of the typical anti-trust injunction which are usually difficult to enforce, have been converted into working devices for the protection of interests previously victimized by the various abusive practices. Without the inclusion of such a mechanism, efforts at relief short of complete divorcement could hardly have been effective in the face of a necessity of enforcing each violation by arduous and time-consuming contempt proceedings.

"It is questionable whether such arbitration could have been imposed upon losing defendants if the Government had won its suit. The Sherman Act gives the courts power to enjoin or otherwise prohibit illegal practices and it might be doubted if this could be extended to allow for organization and operation of arbitration machinery. But the use of the consent mechanism has apparently obviated these difficulties.

"Under the decree only the defendants who have consented to the arbitration procedure are obligated to arbitrate all claims brought against them. The right to initiate arbitration proceedings is unilateral and can be invoked only by aggrieved exhibitors; yet no such exhibitor is compelled to arbitrate any dispute which he elects to try directly in a legal proceeding under the anti-trust laws. If the exhibitor decides to arbitrate, however, he will be allowed to do so only if he agrees in advance to accept the award of the tribunal.

"Not only have the legal interests of the immediate parties to the arbitration been fully protected, but the rights of all other persons, directly or indirectly affected by any arbitration hearing, have been similarly secured. They have been granted the absolute privilege of intervening to become a party on agreeing to abide by the arbitrator's decision. Furthermore, the awards, where violations of the decree have been indicated, have been carefully drafted so as not to interfere with existing contract rights of any such outsiders. Both clearance and run awards have been made operative only in respect to subsequent contracts. No private enforcement of any nature is prescribed for violation of the prohibition against licensing pictures to circuit exhibitors for theatres located in more than one exchange district. On the other hand, where run discrimination has been shown, the award, 'divorcing' the 'guilty' theatre from its circuit for purposes of all future contracting, operates directly against the exhibitor recipient of the favoritism without seriously affecting the position of the defendant distributor.

"While arbitration, as a general method of enforcement seems highly advantageous in the present situation, a serious problem is raised by the time lags and risk of expense inherent in the organization of the particular arbitra-

AAA Calls Decree "Greatest Single Inter-trade Undertaking"

The American Arbitration Association, which conducts the arbitration system for grievances under the motion picture consent decree, this week paid tribute to that document as "probably the greatest single undertaking in our time to build inter-trade relations.

"As the decree succeeds, other industries, in just as perilous a condition, will benefit. Equally important is the fact that the Decree lifts a huge economic burden from the Government and the motion picture industry. The Consent Decree is part of the new technique of defense, which so unites a people in their mutual trust, confidence and cooperation, that these war techniques will fail.

"Whether the experiment succeeds or not, it cannot fail to strengthen one of the American basic freedoms. That is the legal right to settle voluntarily our own disputes. The Arbitration Law enacted by Congress in 1925 gave this legal right to Americans. The Consent Decree strengthens immensely that right, for it is the Government itself and the court which affirmatively grant it specifically to one of the greatest of American industrial groups.

"The Decree, in effect, is a grant of authority to business not only to police itself, but to experiment with its own problems. Should this experiment succeed, it may well free business from many future restrictive regulations and restore much of its initiative and faith in developing and controlling itself.

"Here we had a leading American industry and our national government at odds. In a few months the industry has moved from a situation where millions of dollars were being spent to fight, to one where a half-million dollars are being spent to keep peace.

"The men who wrote this Decree, whether it succeeds or fails, wrote a historic document, for under it our Government and the motion picture industry have found a way of composing their differences and of going forward together. Instead of prosecuting, Government is cooperating; instead of dictating, Government is offering freedom; instead of drastic legislation, guiding principles are laid down. And business, on its side, has met the Government half way. Today you have friendship instead of enmity between the Government and this vast industrial group,—a friendship demonstrated by the enthusiasm with which the industry offered to the Government the entire facilities of the Motion Picture Arbitration Tribunals, which it is spending a half-million dollars annually to maintain, for free use by the National Defense Mediation Board or any other government agency having need for such facilities."

LAW JOURNAL ON DECREE

tion scheme proposed in the decree. It is axiomatic that the possible awards must warrant the risk of loss or exhibitors will not resort to arbitration. The great gains achievable in any successful proceeding, and the improbability of securing sufficient or rapid relief through direct court action, insure against any paucity of clearance or run actions; but the same cannot be said of certain lesser rights 'guaranteed' by the decree. It is doubtful whether exhibitors can be expected to risk the burden of costs of arbitration where a distributor has illegally conditioned the licensing of pictures to theatres in one exchange district upon the simultaneous licensing of the pictures for theatres located in other exchange districts, since the distributor, if found guilty, must merely pay a nominal sum into the general arbitration fund, and the complaining exhibitor receives no direct relief. Similarly, the 'right' to cancel short subjects, offensive pictures, or additional blocks of features forced on the exhibitor as a condition to the lease of other desired features, is of doubtful value if the primary arbitraiton may extend well over a month before any opinion is announced. As no exhibitor can be expected to wait for a month prior to discovering what pictures he has available for playing, it would seem advisable to amend the arbitration rules to provide for expedited hearings of such 'forcing' cases. In other instances the award may have to be made more appealing to the exhibitors; or the Government be given power to invoke the arbitration machinery.

"While the arbitration machinery and rules are still in only skeleton form, and will have to be amended and expanded from time to time according to the provisions of Section 22(6), the most important technical problem remaining to be clarified is the ultimate enforcement of final arbitration awards. Presumably such enforcement would be through application to the court for a citation of contempt against the non-conforming party. But whether such an application against a consenting defendant must be brought by the Government as one of the parties to the decree, or by the exhibitor who made the original complaint, is yet to be decided.

Government Not Dissociated

"Although the Government has delegated the primary enforcement of the terms of the decree to complaining exhibitors, and postponed for the time being any further action leading towards divorcement, it has not dissociated itself entirely from the operation of the decree or the control of restraints in the industry. Instead, a permanent sub-division has been organized in the Anti-trust Division to supervise the workings of the decree and determine the necessity for future Government action. This group is aided by requirements in the decree that written notice be sent to the Division of all changes in theatre ownership or control by the consenting defendants, and by permission granted the Government to examine on demand the books and documents of the defendants relevant to the decree, including complete data on trade showings, licenses contracted, and records of all arbitration awards entered against the distributors and the steps taken to comply with them. Furthermore, the proceedings before the various arbitration boards will give the Government access to valuable information as to the situs of actual instances of restraint should the Division decide to inaugurate future suits. Thus a not inconsequential result of the decree will be the supplying of the Government with information about the mysteries of the industry otherwise rarely available. The knowledge of this by the defendants may itself exercise a prophylactic effect upon future abuse of power.

"The three defendants which did not consent to the decree are now somewhat ambiguously situated, as they prepare to defend against the continuing Government suit. Owning no theatres, the threat of divorcement means little to them should the Government win its case, and they therefore stand to lose much less than did the consenting defendants. They might even improve their competitive position if the larger producer-distributor organizations were deprived of their remunerative exhibition facilities. On the other hand, block booking is of great importance to both Universal and Columbia. Both of these companies could ill afford the added expense of several new selling 'seasons'; both might have to engage in extensive unprofitable financing to secure the additional working capital necessary if they were to accumulate five completed pictures prior to contracting for their exhibition. All three companies stand to gain sizable profits by operating on an annual contract basis, in the form of increased licensing by unaffiliated exhibitors desirous of securing an assured backlog of product and thus placing themselves in a better position to bargain for the various small blocks offered by the consenting producers. Consequently, it is understandable why the three unaffiliated defendants should have determined to remain aloof from the decree.

Government Obligated

"The Government, however, is not only faced with the dilemma of proceeding against the intransigent defendants or confessing the weakness of its original case, but has expressly obligated itself in the decree to secure selling restrictions on block booking and blind selling equivalent to those imposed upon the consenting parties. This may be difficult for the Government to achieve, for the remaining defendants appear to be in a good strategic position to meet any subsequent Government attack. They are unaffected by the integration problem and control too small a percentage of the business of the industry to substantiate any charge of monopoly. The amended complaint, however, charges defendants with conspiring with the large circuits to discriminate against the small independent exhibitors, and each separate defendant is charged with illegally restraining trade by entering into contracts imposing compulsory block booking and blind selling upon exhibitors. It is possible that the Government may secure the necessary evidence to show collusion between the defendants and the more powerful chains, and it is not inconceivable that the prosecution can persuade the Court to overrule Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Pictures, and declare block booking and blind selling illegal per se.

"Even should the Government be successful in its subsequent trial of the 'little three,' it is of course not certain that it could induce the court to grant more than an injunction against the illegal practices. Should their right to block booking be finally denied, however, the defendants might well agree to accept arbitration. Certainly blocks of five pictures with arbitration would seem preferable to retail licensing by individual features."

New Detroit Newsreel House

A newsreel theatre is being built in Detroit to be operated by the Michigan Newsreel Company, of which Herbert Scheftel is president. The house will seat 500, and is being equipped with RCA Photophone sound and hard-of-hearing aids.

Edward Arnold Heads Charities

The permanent all-charities committee of the motion picture industry last week elected Edward Arnold chairman, succeeding Samuel Goldwyn, who resigned after a year in the post.

An executive committee empowered to act in behalf of the guilds in all industry charities' activities was appointed, consisting of the following: Mr. Arnold, for the Screen Actors Guild; King Vidor, for the Screen Directors Guild; Ralph Block, Screen Writers Guild, and Bert Allenberg, Artist Managers Guild. Mr. Goldwyn was named to represent the producers on the committee.

The executive committee voted to assist the United China Relief, as the first official act of the group.

Appeal Luncheon Set

Reports of contributions already received, and a review of the further steps necessary for the attainment of its quota will be the purpose of the luncheon meeting of the Amusement Division of the United Jewish Appeal, scheduled for June 3rd, Tuesday, at the Hotel Edison in New York.

The meeting, originally scheduled for Tuesday, May 27th, has been postponed because of conflict with the industry golf tournament.

David O. Selznick has accepted the chairmanship of the Hollywood United China Relief committee and reported that plans have been completed to reach the fund quota goal for the Hollywood area, James G. Blaine, national campaign committee chairman, announced in New York last week.

Mr. Selznick has served as a member of the national campaign committee of United China Relief since the launching, seven weeks ago, of its national campaign to raise $5,000,000 for relief work in that country. Other members of the national campaign committee are James G. Blaine, chairman; Eugene E. Barnett, vice-chairman; Pearl S. Buck, William C. Bullitt, Paul G. Hoffman, Thomas W. Lamont, Henry R. Luce, John D. Rockefeller, 3d, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., Robert Gordon Sproul, Charles F. Williams, Wendell L. Willkie.

Mr. Selznick launched the campaign in Hollywood during the week of May 18th to 25th, which was officially proclaimed by 14 governors and more than 200 mayors throughout the country.

In behalf of the campaign Shirley Temple and Claudette Colbert made special radio appearances over the Columbia network, Tuesday night. The Hall Johnson Choir was heard during the program which was presented from Hollywood immediately preceding President Roosevelt's "fireside chat." For the occasion Tyrone Power was master of ceremonies.

Steinbuch Resigns from Loew's

Everett Steinbuch, who recently returned from a ten-week leave of absence at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., has resigned from Loew's State theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, and is leaving the motion picture field to enter governmental work. He has been appointed a deputy collector in the Federal Bureau of Internal Revenue by Frank Gentsch, and will cover the Cleveland territory.

New Interstate Theatre

Interstate Circuit's 18th motion picture theatre for Houston Tex., was announced this week by Al Lever, Houston manager for the company. The latest house will seat 900 and will cost about $60,000.

STOP 'SCARING' EXHIBITORS FROM ARBITRATION, ALLIED WARNS MAJORS

New Statement Charges Lawyers and Technicalities Are Being Used to Frighten Complainants; Decree 'Faults' Analyzed

Discredit cast by distributors on the arbitration system as set up by the consent decree, may result in a more determined effort by the Government to curb the majors, predicts Allied States Association, in a special decree statement from headquarters in Washington.

Outlining benefits and faults in the practice of the decree, Allied criticizes "heads of major companies" who have frightened off exhibitors from filing arbitration cases, involving procedures with "batteries of high-power lawyers" and "ringing-in technicalities which cloud the simple issues at stake."

Based on an Allied survey made of independent exhibitors' experiences to date of decree practice, and a study of trade paper accounts of exhibitors' experience in non-Allied teritories, Allied reports a "rumor that a systematic effort is being made in some non-Allied territories, especially those in which the local exhibitor organizations are dominated by the affiliated circuits, to poison the minds of the exhibitors against the arbitration system and to persuade them not to file their claims."

Cites "Adjustments"

The bulletin says, "Consenting distributors are adjusting many grievances before claims are filed, particularly those relating to some run. However," it adds, "there have not been many adjustments of clearance grievances for the reason that numerous diverse interests are involved."

Criticizing the "inherent weaknesses" of specific sections in the consent decree, Allied blasted Section 8, on clearance, and Section X, on discrimination. "The dividing line between clearance and run is by no means clear. Exhibitors to be on the safe side have requested awards abolishing all clearance on the ground that, under the facts of the case, any clearance would be unreasonable. Such claims," charges Allied, "have met with technical motions, supported by lengthy briefs, on the ground that they really involve questions of run rather than of clearance and that therefore the arbitrator is without jurisdiction."

Allied charges that "chains are still acquiring theatres," and points out the ineffectiveness of Section XI to prevent the consenting defendants and their affiliated chains from expanding in the exhibition field during the three-year test period."

The bulletin declares, "The future of the decree hinges more on whether it curbs the expansion of the defendants in the exhibition field than on any other point. If the present policy of permitting the affiliated chains to run wild continues, the utter worthlessness of the decree will be demonstrated and the struggle will be renewed."

Allied claims it appears to be the policy of the consenting distributors to offer some run to all theatres applying therefor, including drive-ins. In one case it is claimed the terms offered were prohibitive; but in Section VI there is a remedy for this, since the terms must "not be calculated to defeat the purpose of this Section."

"To the extent that exhibitors with long-standing grievances have obtained relief by voluntary action of the distributors, the decree has been beneficial. Such adjustments negative the claim that the comparatively few cases filed proves that the exhibitors did not have many grievances.

"The weakness of these settlements is that they do not make a record on which to judge of effectiveness of the decree and are not enforceable. One exhibitor was wise enough to secure national protection for his settlement by having it entered as a consent award. That is a wise procedure.

"Another reason assigned for the slowness in filing claims is that the exhibitors are bewildered by the complicated provisions of the decree itself and the many technicalities that have been raised by the distributors in contested cases.

"Section X is a glaring example. It was branded by the General Counsel of Allied at the hearing before Judge Goddard as a cross between a highly complicated statute of limitations and a railroad time table. (Abram Myers is Allied's general counsel.)

Interpretation Varies

"Although Section XX indicates that Section X will not be in force until after August 31, nevertheless it is susceptible of the interpretation that controversies can be arbitrated under it now, but that the awards will not be effective until the new selling system comes into operation. This has caused great confusion and has led some exhibitors to believe that they can arbitrate discrimination cases now," Allied charges.

"Section X covers the most serious of all abuses. It is hedged about with so many conditions that it will be effective in only a limited number of cases. There should not be any doubt as to when an exhibitor can arbitrate under it. Certainly the time should not be delayed any longer than absolutely necessary. It is greatly to be hoped that the Appeal Board will soon have an opportunity to pass on this question.

"The relationship between Section VIII (clearance) and Section X (discrimination) has been thrown into hopeless confusion. Exhibitors to be on the safe side have requested awards abolishing all clearance on the ground that, under the facts of the case, any clearance would be unreasonable. Such claims have met with technical motions, supported by lengthy briefs, on the ground that they really involve questions of run rather than of clearance and that therefore the arbitrator is without jurisdiction.

"This is the worst kind of pettifogging, not calculated to promote confidence in the arbitration system but rather to mislead and confuse well-meaning lay arbitrators without learning in the law or experience in the motion picture business. The proper course in such cases would be to hold a hearing and for the arbitrator to make such award as he felt was just. It might be limited to reducing clearance, in which case the arbitrator would be within his unquestioned power. If he went beyond that, his action would be reviewed by the Appeal Board on the basis of a record.

"The absurdity of the tactics pursued by the distributors is made manifest when one considers that even in criminal procedure, the most technical branch of the law, one may be charged with a high offense (first degree murder) and convicted of a lesser one (manslaughter). Therefore, whatever the claim made, the arbitrators should not attempt to pass on narrow questions of jurisdiction but should enter just awards, which awards may conceivably be entirely within their competence to enter.

Weaknesses Cited

"No one has ever claimed that the decree afforded a remedy for all the ills of the industry. There are many grievances as to which it would be futile to file arbitration cases.

"Not only does not the decree touch upon numerous grievances against which the exhibitors have complained in the past, but its provisions are inadequate properly to remedy many of the grievances to which they expressly relate.

"These weaknesses have been pointed out by Allied on numerous occasions and need not be reperted here.

"However, it is fair to add—this being based on experience—that the General Counsel of Allied in reviewing cases submitted through the regional associations has been forced to advise against the filing of complaints in a number of otherwise meritorious cases because they did not fit into the narrow specifications of the decree. This is especially true of discriminations cases which should be remedied under Section X. These cases are ineligible for filing for such arbitrary and unsubstantial reasons as: (a) The theatre in question was not in existence on the day the decree was signed; (b) the exhibitor operates six instead of five theatres; (c) neither he nor a prior operator of the theatre made a demand in writing between the magic dates specified in the decree; and (d) he did not operate the theatre one year prior to the signing of the decree.

"Added to all this is the questionable effectiveness of the awards prescribed in certain classes of cases, more especially those under Sections V, VII, IX and X. A number of exhibitors are torn between invoking the milk-and-water remedies of the decree and instituting suits under the Anti-Trust Act for damages. The many pending and prospective lawsuits must be taken into account before concluding that the failure of the exhibitors to file more arbitrations means that there is no ground for complaint."

ANTI-BLOCKS BILL KILLED IN MICHIGAN

The Snow anti-blocks-of-five bill died in the Michigan Senate committee Friday, May 23rd, as the deadline for reporting bills expired. Senator Earle W. Munshaw, committee chairman, said the committee took no action. The bill previously had passed the House with a nullifying amendment. The only similar measure passed to date is in Minnesota, while an anti-blocks-of-five bill was killed in Georgia.

'OUR'S THE ONLY INDUSTRY HELPING DEFENSE WITHOUT PROFIT': SCHAEFER

Head of Coordinating Committee Wires Harmon, Reporting on Progress at AMPA Luncheon; Free Short Subjects Listed

Members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their final luncheon session of the year at the Hotel Edison in New York on Wednesday heard Francis Harmon, coordinator for the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense deliver an analysis of the industry's contributions to the national defense. Leaders of the industry's national coordinating committee and of the five sub-divisions representing various branches of motion picture enterprise joined the Advertisers in what Vincent Trotta, president, characterized as the most important session in the group's 25 years history.

Mr. Harmon, who is also eastern head of the Production Code Administration, discussed activities of Production, Distribution, Newsreels, Trade Press, and Theatres divisions.

"Child of Democracy"

"The motion picture industry of America is the child of democracy. It recognizes its obligation to the system of government which has nurtured it and enabled it to become the most influential form of mass entertainment the world has known. Recognizing its responsibility in this crisis it will play a thoroughly constructive, active role in making its own contribution," Mr. Harmon declared in his keynote.

Howard Dietz of MGM, head of the Treasury Department's Film Promotion Program in behalf of Defense Bond sales, introduced Mr. Harmon.

A telegram from George J. Schaefer, national president of the coordinating committee, read by Mr. Trotta at the luncheon further defined the unique contributions of the film business to national defense. He said:

"Dear Vincent: On the occasion of the luncheon tendered Francis Harmon, coordinator of the Motion Picture Industry's Committee for the National Defense, I think it is proper that we should emphasize, at this time, that ours is the only industry that has completely organized itself in all its branches and ramifications, to cooperate and make itself available to our national government in the present emergency. . .

"The Distributors, exhibitors, newsreels and production divisions have joined hands, with the purpose of bringing about the greatest possible results. The production division has produced, and is producing, important material for all branches of the service, and has done an outstanding job. Above all, ours is the only industry that has undertaken the work assigned to it without one cent of profit.

Mr. Harmon described the following films as now available for free exhibition in theatres throughout the United States, under the auspices of the all-industry committee.

"POWER FOR DEFENSE," produced by National Defense Advisory Commission; 984 feet; running time 10 minutes. The picture was one of the first distributed by the Motion Picture Defense Committee. It covers power resources of the Tennessee Valley and how they are being used to run factories making vital defense material. A documentary style is employed. 300 prints available.

"CALLING ALL WORKERS," sponsored by the Social Security Board, and produced by National Screen Service; 155 feet; running time two minutes. The film describes the need for trained workers in the defense program and urges all skilled and unskilled unemployed workers to register with the Federal Employment Agency. 2,000 prints available.

"AMERICA PREFERRED," produced by the Treasury Department, 372 feet; running time four minutes; released May 20th; the film is a patriotic appeal to the public to purchase defense bonds and savings stamps.

"WHERE DO WE GO?" produced by United Service Organizations for National Defense, Inc.; 150 feet; running time 90 seconds; for release June 1st. The picture is designed to publicize the nation-wide drive of the United Service Organization to raise money to establish 360 service clubs adjacent to camps, naval stations and defense industries throughout the United States and overseas bases. It illustrates the USO program of providing individual counsel to soldiers, sailors and marines on personal problems, religious services, social events and facilities and guidance for group recreation.

"ARMY RECRUITING TRAILERS," there are 12 of these one minute trailers to stimulate recruiting for three year enlistments in various branches of the Regular Army. They are released at weekly intervals. The titles, numbered consecutively are: No. 1, "Infantry"; No. 2, "Air Corps"; No. 3 "Flying Cadets"; No. 4, "Coast Artillery Corps"; No. 5, "Armored Force"; No. 6, "Flying Cadets"; No. 7, "Flying Cadets"; No. 8, "Field Artillery"; No. 9, "Foreign Service"; No. 10, "Signal Corps"; No. 11, "Medical Department"; No. 12, "Quartermaster Corps." Three hundred prints available of each title.

Treasury tags, varying from 26 to 65 feet, urging the public to buy defense bonds and saving stamps. Seven sets of 300 tags are available and will be attached to features going into general release this month.

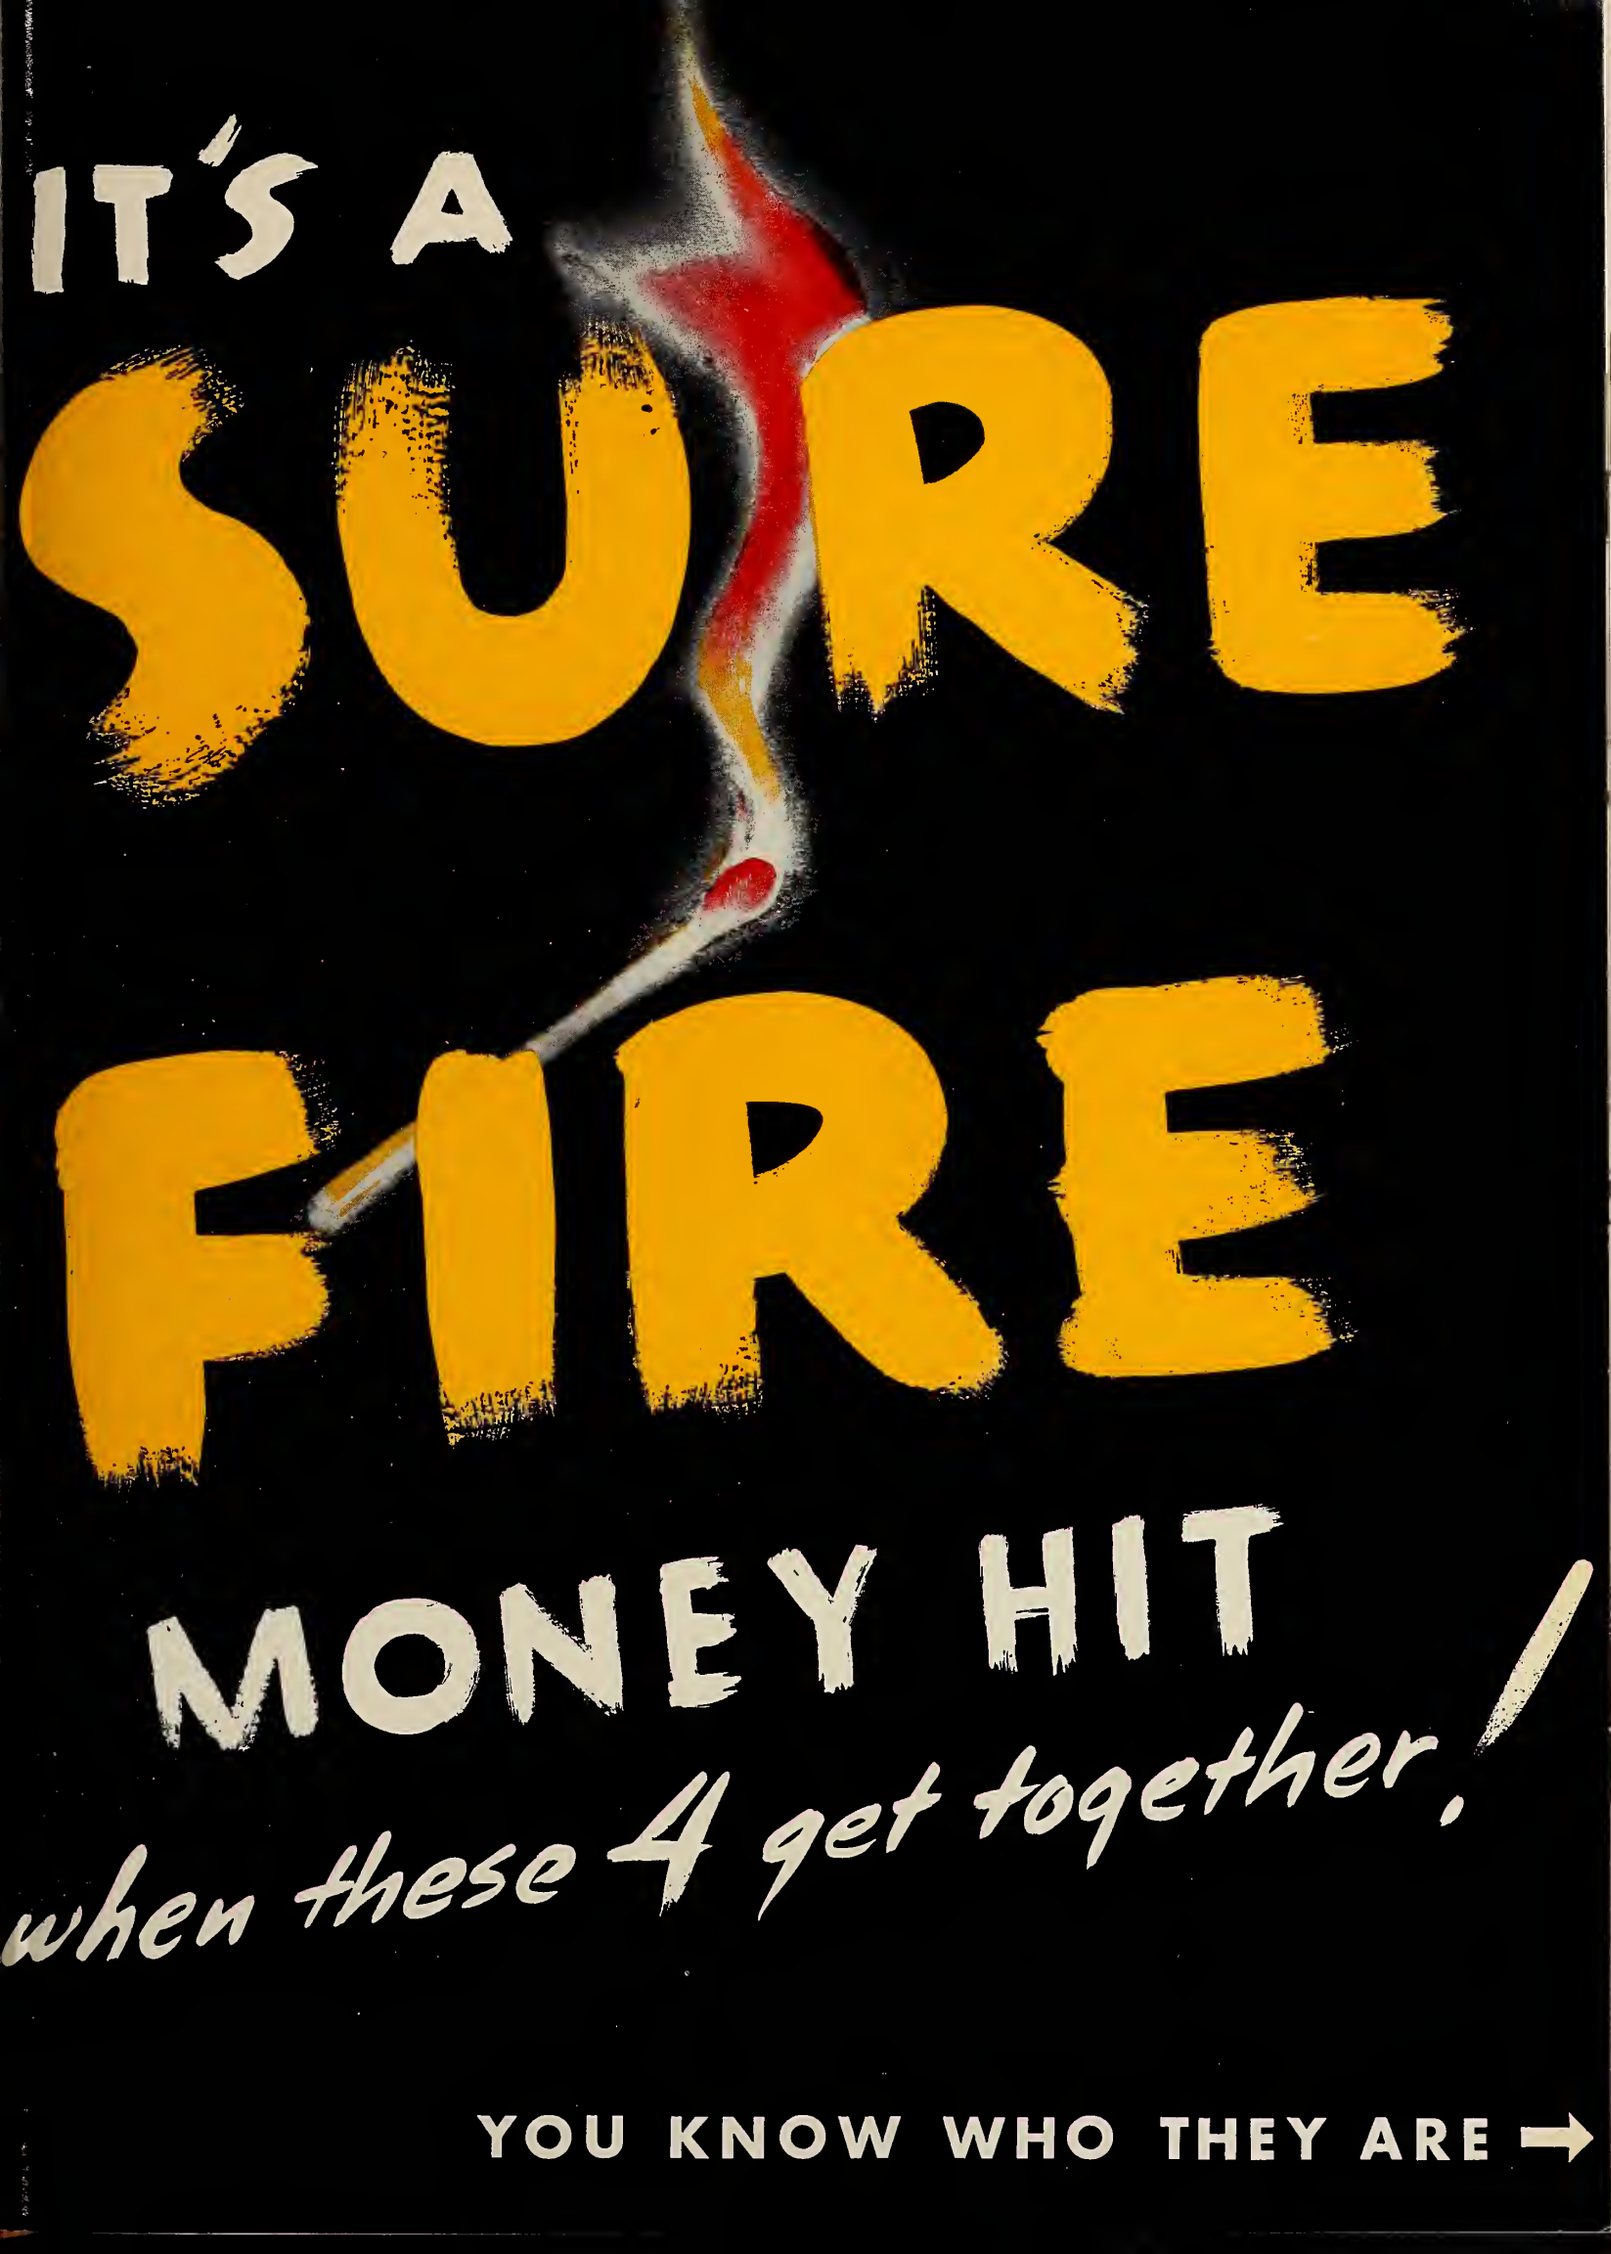
Seven lists of 31 exchanges have been drawn up by the committee and each in rotation handles the distribution of one of the committee's subjects. Film Carriers, Inc., representing 26 trucking services deliver the films without charge to 85 per cent of the theatres exhibiting. The remaining 15 per cent of the cooperating theatres receive the pictures by mail without charge. The U. S. Army and the Social Security Agency have been instructed to supply postage for the project, Mr. Harmon revealed. W. A. Scully is chairman of the Distributors Division.

Three trailers prepared by the advisory commission to the Council of National Defense have also been received by the Motion Picture Committee and after approval by the Program Division headed by R. B. Wilby will be added to the distribution list. Other subjects are in preparation, Mr. Harmon added.

"Films in a Democracy"

Mr. Harmon told the AMPA gathering of 300, attended also by all of the committee chairmen of the M. P. Committee for Coordinating Defense, "Most of us who are connected with the industry take so much for granted that some times we are prone to forget how large a contribution the motion picture is making through its regular provision of current entertainment. Within the past week a study was completed titled Motion Pictures in a Democracy, based upon feature pictures and short subjects released in 1939, 1940, and 1941. You will be interested, I am sure, in learning that 68 entertainment films were listed which make a contribution to the knowledge of America's history and traditions; 43 films of a biographical nature tended to increase appreciation of the great builders of the nation; 77 films underscored the responsibilities resting upon the present generation for preserving American and world democracy; 45 pictures dealt with family life in a democracy; 13 showed the tragic effects of racial and religious prejudice; 12 underlined the importance of conserving our material resources; 10 pictures the benefits of better housing and improved recreational facilities; and 15 others dealt with local and national projects of importance.

"In 21 entertainment films released during the past two and one-half years, one or more problems involving labor relations were presented; 12 picturized social evils of one kind or another; 20 dramatized some angle of juvenile delinquency; 40 presented factors related to the control of crime.



To date 10,000 theatres have signed pledges prepared by the Theatres Division headed by Joseph Bernhard, Mr. Harmon revealed, and will show all pictures distributed by the industry committee. At least 2,000 more houses are expected to sign in the near future.

Special attention was devoted in the address to the Newsreels Division, headed by E. B. Hatrick, for its coverage of national defense news in the army and industry and for its major contributions to the program of inter-American goodwill. In 1940 one-sixth of all news clips related to defense, Mr. Harmon pointed out, and at present over 25 of the weekly issue covers matters of vital interest to the national welfare. Newsreels were large contributors to the success with which the Selective Service Act was put into operation, according to Mr. Harmon, who said government officials were unanimous in their tribute to film cooperation in depicting the army training program.

The Production Division, located chiefly in Hollywood and headed by Y. Frank Freeman, was characterized by the coordinator as one of the most important units in the entire committee.

FREEMAN PLEDGES "EMERGENCY" AID

Chairman Y. Frank Freeman, of the Motion Picture Production Defense Committee, issued a statement Tuesday night in Hollywood following President Roosevelt's declaration of an unlimited national emergency, asserting "The Motion Picture Production Defense Committee, composed of representatives of the three great creative guilds, the Screen Actors Guild, Screen Writers Guild, as well as the Artists & Managers Guild, the Association of Motion Picture Producers and labor, crafts, and other fields of film endeavour, reiterates its united determination to do everything within its power and within the abilities of those who work in motion pictures in Hollywood to do its part in the present national emergency proclaimed by the President of the United States."

FOUR NEW ARBITRATION CASES IN A WEEK ATTACK FILM CLEARANCE

Two in Cincinnati, One in New York Name 'Big Five'; Arbitrator Rules Testimony on Contracts Is Confidential

Four new cases were filed with local arbitration tribunals this week. In each instance clearance was involved and all of the "Big Five," Paramount, Warners, Loews, Inc., RKO, and Twentieth Century-Fox were named in the complaints. The first two cases were listed at Cincinnati by a Columbus, O., operator and are the second and third arbitrations for the Cincinnati tribunal. At New York the local board's thirteenth case was started by a Somerville, N. J., independent.

Philadelphia's sixth case filed Tuesday also attacked clearance.

F. W. Rowlands, operator of subsequent run houses at Columbus, O., filed the second complaint with the Cincinnati tribunal for his Main Theatre in East Columbus. He names all five consenting companies and the Neth circuit's Eastern theatre, three blocks from the Main. Mr. Rowlands asks that the 21-day clearance of the main be reduced to a maximum of seven days.

Second Complaint Filed

In a second complaint, Cincinnati No. 3, Mr. Rowlands also named the Neth circuit and all five consenting distributors and asked a reduction of Neth's Markham theatre's 21-day clearance over his Parsons theatre. Mr. Rowlands asks that a maximum of seven days clearance be set.

The thirteenth New York case was filed on May 23rd by Selig A. Posner, operator of the Playhouse at Raritan, N. J. He names all five consent decree signers and asks for a reduction of the 21-day clearance held over his house by the Cort theatre at Raritan.

Philadelphia case No. 6 was entered on Tuesday by Edward I. Singer, president of the Hill Theatre Corporation, against Warners, Paramount and RKO charging that the 7 to 14 day clearance of the Sedgewick theatre over the Hill was unfair and unreasonable. He said Paramount and Warner Brothers had consistently favored the Sedgewick with special 14-day clearances.

Two motions to dismiss complaints on the ground that they were on matters not subject to arbitration marked hearings in the field this week. Attorneys for distributors moved to have complaints ruled out by arbitrators at hearings in Los Angeles and Philadelphia. Hearings were also held at New York on Case No. 2; at Pittsburgh on Case No. 3; and at Portland, Oregon, on that tribunal's first case. The Portland hearing was limited to one day.

New York's second case, the Esquire theatre, Great Neck, L. I., versus the Skouras Great Neck Playhouse and Paramount, M-G-M, 20th Century-Fox, and RKO continued into its seventh day of hearings on Monday after a day of secret testimony on contractural relations between the complainant, distributors, and the theatres. The hearing was postponed until June 6th. George P. Spiegelberg, arbitrator, at the Monday session on the request of all parties ruled that the testimony on contract terms was confidential and closed the hearing to all but the affected parties. More witnesses were expected to follow the presentation of documentary evidence when the hearing reconvenes.

FIRE DEPARTMENT ASKS COOPERATION

The cooperation of all theatre operators in Philadelphia to maintain its high record of being first in the country in safety and fire prevention, fire marshal. In view of the fact that there have been a few fires recently in theatres in that city, despite the care being taken by exhibitors, he suggested additional precautions

Appointments of arbitrators announced this week by the AAA included judges for cases in Charlotte, N. C., Pittsburgh and Buffalo. At Charlotte Guy O. Bagwell will arbitrate the complaint of the Patricia theatre, operated in Aiken, S. C., by H. B. Ram seeking clearance from all five. Hearings will begin on June 10th.

The clearance case of the Biordi Brothers, operators of the Majestic, Elwood City, Pa. (Pittsburgh No. 3), seeking clearance from RKO, Fox and Warners will be arbitrated by Horace F. Baker. Hearings were postponed from May 29th to the period between June 3rd and June 15th.

Richard H. Templeton, former U. S. attorney at Buffalo will arbitrate Case No. 4 before that city's tribunal on June 4th. In the complaint N. M. Konczakowski, operator of the Marlowe theatre seeks clearance from all five. He names the Shea Niagara as an interested party.

Hearings in Los Angeles

Hearings were held on Monday on the first Los Angeles Case, Mission Playhouse, operated at San Gabriel by O. W. Lewis, versus "all Five" on clearance. Mr. Lewis asks that his 28-day wait after the Pasedena first-run theatres be reduced. The Alhambra Amusement Company, United West Coast Theatres Corp. and James J. Edwards of the Edwards circuit participated in the hearings as interested intervenors. Herbert Cameron, attorney, and counsel for the State Railroad Commission is arbitrator of the case.

Attorneys for the majors asked Mr. Cameron for a dismissal of the complaint on the grounds that it did not now come within the jurisdiction of Section VIII of the Consent Decree and the rules for the arbitration of clearance disputes.

On Tuesday Mr. Cameron dismissed 20th Century-Fox from the Mission Playhouse case, asserting that the distributor through its control in National Theatres, which operates Fox West Coast theatres, was interested in the operation of the rival theatres with whom Mr. Lewis seeks a clearance adjustment. Warner Brothers, as a producing unit, was also dismissed, leaving Vitagraph, Paramount, and Loew's. Hearings were continued until June 3rd.

Arguing that the availability of prints in a given area often governed the extent of clearance periods witnesses for the distributors testified on Monday that the Mission and many other theatres throughout the United States paid much less for film rental than the print cost because print use is staggered to allow numerous theatres to use the same film for exhibition, spreading the cost and making it proportionately less per theatre.

It is estimated that on the ordinary Class A picture at present between 300 and 400 prints are manufactured. Starting with a raw stock price of $.0085 per foot the cost of finished prints are variously estimated at between $.0105 and $.0130 per foot. Features are currently averaging between 8,000 and 12,000 feet.

The Philadelphia tribunal's fourth case was heard on Monday. After an all-day session, arbitrator Roland J. Christy, local attorney, held under advisement disposition of the clearance complaint, filed April 21st by Bryant Wiest, operator of the Hollywood theatre, Elizabethville, Pa., against MGM seeking the same availability as the Theatorium Theatre in Lykens, Pa., operated by R. J. Budd.

George P. Aarons, counsel for United MPTO, representing Mr. Budd, asked that the complaint be dismissed.

James E. Snyder, Elizabethville attorney representing Mr. Wiest, submitted testimony to the effect that Elizabethville is a better town than Lykens and that the Hollywood is a better house than the Theatorium.

The first hearing in the Pacific Northwest under the consent decree arbitration formula concluded at Portland last weekend before Joseph K. Carson, Jr., arbitrator, and he took the case, a some run complaint under advisement. P. R. Henderson operator of the Rialto theatre, Albany, Oregon had complained that MGM, RKO, 20th Century-Fox, and Warners refused to sell him pictures forcing him to play inferior and dated product. Mr. Henderson testified that the firms named had repeatedly refused to grant him "some run".

Louis M. Amacher, MGM branch manager at Portland testified that the Rialto application for a contract had been turned down by the Metro home office because of "unreasonable" stipulations. Pete Stewart, Branch manager for Vitagraph-First National at Portland, Warner distributor, told the hearing that his company had acted in "good faith" in contract discussions with Mr. Henderson but that they had failed to reach an agreement on prices. Mr. Stewart called Mr. Henderson's bid "unreasonable". Charles Powers manager for 20th Century-Fox and Mark Cory, of RKO also testified.

Mr. Carson, former Mayor of Portland, accepted briefs at the Friday hearing and announced that his decision would be made within thirty days.

New York's fifth case, the Central theatre, Pearl River, N. Y., against all five, on clearance was postponed at the initial hearing Tuesday until June 11th. Francis Adams Truslow, arbitrator, gave attorneys until June 5 to enter briefs.

New York No. 8, in which the Majestic theatre, Paterson, N. J., asks clearance from all five decree signers, will be heard June 9th. W. P. Cavanaugh is arbitrator.

At New Haven Frank H. Wiggin, arbitrator of the first case there postponed hearings on the clearance complaint of M. Cascioli, operator of the Forest, West Haven, from May 26th to June 3rd. The Big Five and Rivoli and West Haven theatres are defendants.

Cincinnati Case No. 1, the "some run" complaint of Willis Vance, Newport, Ky. independent was postponed this week by Judge Stanley Matthews, arbitrator from May 28th to June 5th.

Philadelphia's third case, the clearance complaint of Rose Hexter, operator of the Breeze Theatre, Philadelphia, was postponed for a second time because of an industry convention. Scheduled to be heard by arbitrator Calvin H. Rankin on Wednesday, it was postponed to July 9th because George P. Aarons, counsel for the exhibitor, has left for the coast to attend the MPTOA convention.

INTERSTATE, TRI-STATE IN 'COUNCILS OF WAR'

Hoblitzelle, in Texas; Branton, in Iowa, Call Managers to Discuss Trade Problems

How theatres may be organized more thoroughly to aid national defense is a problem now being studied by exhibitor leaders and the Government, Karl Hoblitzelle, head of the Interstate circuit, told approximately 250 managers and other officials of that circuit and the Texas Consolidated circuit, at the organization's biennial convention, which opened Monday in Galveston, Texas, and continued through Thursday. Mr. Hoblitzelle spoke Monday.

Other speakers on that day and days ensuing were: Robert J. O'Donnell, the circuit's general manager, who emphasized and lauded the participation by showmen in community service; A-Mike Vogel, chairman of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Managers' Round Table, who decried the neglect of showmanship, pointing out that it is showmanship that must extricate film industry from its troubles; John R. Moroney, general counsel to the chains, who noted that each individual's effort, had an effect in the circuits' operations; Raymond Willie and William O'Donnell, in charge of theatre operations, who remarked the success of various ideas to increase patronage; Jack Chalman and Charles Meeker, who discussed advertising; Richard Stout, of the legal staff, who outlined effects of the consent decree.

"Missing" Customers Discussed

In addition to the Hoblitzelle talk, the O'Donnell, Chalman, Meeks, and Willie addresses were heard Monday, on which day also the Gallup poll, which found 32,000,000 persons not regular theatre customers, was the subject of a managers' forum in the afternoon.

Mr. Hoblitzelle told the managers, "The theatre is the medium through which the aims and ambitions of the national Government can be brought most forcibly to the public. Building the morale of our own people is important and we are going to measure up to the task ahead."

Mr. Stout's talk was delivered on Tuesday. Mr. O'Donnell also described the consent decree's applications to Interstate and Texas Consolidated operations. On that day, also, there were discussions of advertising, neighborhood theatre service, Army camp activities, and booking problems.

Mr. Vogel was the guest speaker Thursday. He remarked that exhibition had arrived at an occasion "when at long last, there is unanimous agreement that showmanship, neglected and rebuffed, is to be called upon to do the job where industry has weakened.

"For years," he continued, "voices in the wilderness have proclaimed that, despite advances in production, technology and story values, there could be no final definition of an entire job well done—unless the same attention, if not more, was paid to how the picture was to be sold at the boxoffice."

The Managers' Round Table chieftain advocated "exploitation on every picture, big or small." The lack of it, he asserted, "over the years has had important bearing upon our present woes."

Mr. Vogel suggested one reason grosses were declining might be that the customer was too familiar with the mechanics of today's theatre promotion and he suggested this was because of too much routine in execution, too much sameness, too many budgetary restrictions.

Mr. Vogel paid tribute to the theatre manager as a "key" in successful films. He defined one as "the fellow who has an undying belief in the motion picture as the world's greatest entertainment, and who enthusiastically accepts his part in keeping it so; who eats, breathes, and sleeps motion pictures, who accepts the theatre as his only love."

Among guests from distribution companies and other circuits were Leonard Goldenson, head of Paramount theatre operations, and Harry Gold, vice-president and Eastern general sales manager of United Artists.

It was the circuit's third convention in Galveston.

Tri-States Meets At Des Moines

G. Ralph Branton, general manager of the Tri-States circuit at Des Moines, Iowa, presided at a two-day meeting of Tri-States officials and theatre managers held at Hotel Fort Des Moines in that city May 19-20. The meeting was called a "Council of War" to combat an unusual slump in box office receipts the past month. Other problems discussed were the theatre policies for the coming season, particularly in regard to operations under the consent decree.

It was emphasized that extra work must be done to sell the public on the thought that motion pictures are the best and most economical entertainment available for all classes.

The public position of the managers was stressed and Mr. Branton urged them to take part in civic affairs in the towns in which they are placed and to try to become a leading factor in the affairs of the community.

In order to encourage the managers to greater effort a new 10-week drive that is to start May 29th was announced by Mr. Branton. A $100 prize is to be given every week to the manager who makes the greatest gross increase over the average weekly gross in 1940 and a check is to be mailed each Monday to the winner. A grand prize is to be given the theatre manager who has accomplished the most over the 10-week period. A. H. Blank and G. Ralph Branton are to be the judges.

Claude F. Lee, Paramount public relations man, attended the meeting and was the chief speaker at the evening banquet, at which Mr. Blank and Mr. Branton presided. Out-of-town guests were: Manny Brown, Paramount district manager of Denver; M. A. Levy, Twentieth Century-Fox district manager, Minneapolis; R. C. LiBeau, Kansas City, Paramount district manager; James Winn, Warner Kansas City district manager.

Mr. Lee advised the managers that they must create the impression that their theatres live in the community, not on it, in order to make a success of their business. He said the motion picture industry had failed miserably to do the job of public relations necessary to protect our business against the attacks of anti-movie agitators, moralists and other groups interested in the destruction of our industry.

"Industry executives who accept leadership must conduct themselves and their personal affairs in a manner which will reflect credit on the industry," he said. "Competitors in this business must wash their troubles across a conference table—not in the public press."

"We have been so busy with the mechanics of producing, selling and exhibiting pictures that we haven't stopped to make friends along the way," he continued.

"In the past, circuit heads have been prone to rate managers at what they could promote for nothing to gain immediate results without stopping to count the final cost in terms of public friendship. Happily the trend is now the other way and industry executives are recognizing that the theatre must take its proper place in the community. No longer can we resort to unethical methods of advertising, indecent flesh shows and salacious types of advertising.

"The industry's chief source of public relations must be the theatre managers themselves. It is a fallacy and pretense to believe otherwise."

Court Urges Showdown On Sunday Show Issue

Suspended sentences stand on the Forrest county, Mississippi, court docket following disposal this week of nine cases involving alleged violation of the Mississippi state law prohibiting the showing of pictures on Sundays. County Judge William Haralson in suspending sentences and fines he recently imposed on three defendants on nine counts, said "it has been agreed that local motion picture show operators will not attempt again to show pictures on Sundays until the subject has been submitted to the state Legislature at its next session."

Judge Haralson declared himself in favor of a local option statute in the state which would permit communities that want Sunday movies to have them by referendum approval.

Robert Sigler, Ben Bullock and Lewis Hammack, all connected with operation of the Royal theatre on Sabbaths, were each fined $25 on appeal from the city police court. In addition, six other counts against managers of Saenger theatres in Hattiesburg were passed to the files.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has awarded Honor Roll Buttons to Alex Sayles of the Palace theatre in Albany, N. Y., and L. B. Sponsler and Woody Hilsbeck, of the Liberty in Fort Scott, Kansas, for their exploitation campaigns of "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary" and "Land of Liberty," respectively.

Marcella Napp Joins Morris

Marcella Napp., formerly in charge of casting and talent negotiations for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has joined the William Morris Agency in charge of the development of new film talent.

Hackel Joins Monogram

A. W. Hackel of Supreme Pictures Corp. will make two pictures for Monogram release next season, it has been announced in Hollywood. The pictures scheduled are "Murder by Appointment" and "The Man with Many Faces."

John Hanna Joins P. R. C.

STEPPED UP PRODUCTION FOR DECREE SALES STILL THE PLANNING KEYNOTE

Studios Announce Plans for Month; Republic Lists '41-'42 Program at Regional Meeting; 20th-Fox To Convene in July

Stepped up production, anticipatory to the consent decree's methods of selling films in blocks of five beginning September 1st,—continues the keynote of new product developments.

Warners reported a record 6,000 persons to be employed next month on some 15 films; Columbia likewise reports 11 films under way at present, and an increased number of short subjects set for the new season, numbering 144; Republic made its awaited product announcement, at a regional sales meeting in New York Tuesday, and after a similar regional in Chicago late last week; a new producing company entered the lists, in New York, last week, the Liberty National Pictures Corporation, sponsored by M. H. Hoffman; and Twentieth Century-Fox executives were to confer again at the studios, on new product and the decree, before the annual sales convention, and John Joseph, Universal's publicity and advertising director, made his appearance in New York, for conferences on new product and its York, for conferences on new product.

Paramount at present has no plans for a sales convention, executives say, but the selection of the first two blocks-of-five will be made at an executive meeting in June.

Twentieth Century-Fox Meets in July

Twentieth Century-Fox will hold its annual sales convention at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York on July 9, 10 and 11, according to an announcement made Tuesday by Herman Wobber, general sales manager.

Approximately 350 district managers, branch managers, salesmen and bookers of the company's 37 branch offices in the U. S. and Canada will attend.

The last Twentieth Century-Fox Convention to be held in New York was in 1934. Since then the convention cities have been Hollywood, Chicago and Kansas City.

Columbia will have a 1941-42 program schedule of 144 subjects, of which 104 will be single reel comedies, the company revealed on Monday, in New York. A further breakdown discloses that 30 will be two-reel comedies, four serials, six "International Forums." There thus will be ten more two-reel comedies than in the current season.

Jack Holt will star in the serials, titles of which are: "Holt of the Secret Service," "Captain Midnight," "Pirate Gold," and "Perils of the Royal Mounted."

The two-reel productions will be made up of eight "Three Stooges" comedies; 18 All-Star comedies; and four "Glove Slingers." The single-reel subjects will consist of: 16 Color Rhapsodies; eight Columbia Phantasies cartoons; eight Columbia Fables cartoons; 12 Columbia Panoramics, a new series; six "This Changing World," also a new series; 12 "World of Sports," narrated by Bill Stern; eight Cinescopes; 10 Screen Snapshots; eight Columbia Tours; six Columbia "Quiz" reels, and 10 Community Sings.

The company, with 11 features this week before the camera has found it necessary to lease stage space at five additional studios.

"BETTER SHORTS NOW"—ROUSH

"Slipshod production, cheap talent, and 'sausage factory' methods" almost ruined the short subjects field several years ago but the "progressive optimism" of those now in this branch of the industry is saving and aiding it. This is what the annual conference of the 4-Star Clubs and Young Reviewers of the National Board of Review were told Saturday, in New York City, by Leslie Roush, Paramount short subject director. He added that his company's short budget had been stepped up 40 per cent, and the best possible talent employed in every production phase.

Sigmund Neufeld, supervisor of westerns for Producers Releasing Corporation, has purchased nine stories by Johnston McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro." Their titles are: "One Way Trail," "Romance of Roaring Valley," "High and Mighty," "Frontier Frameup," "Cowboy Afoot," "Cowboys Never Walk," "Caliente Kid," "Whelp of the Fox," "Saga of Smoky Farm."

Western stars to appear in these are Buster Crabbe, George Houston, and Tom Tyler. These are in the following series: "Billy The Kid," "Lone Rider," and "Frontier Marshal."

Arthur Greenblatt, the company's general sales manager, has been on the Coast, during his national tour of exchanges. He discussed the new program, with George Batchellor and Mr. Neufeld, the company's producers.

Republic's 1941-42 Program

The Republic production schedule for the first quarter of the 1941-42 program includes eight features: "A Lady for a Night," "Mountain Moonlight," "Hurricane Smith," "Navy Blue Eyes," "Argentine Holiday," "Pardon My Stripes," "The Devil Pays Off" and "Gobs in Blue." There will be seven westerns: Gene Autry and Smiley Burnette in "Sierra Sue"; Roy Rogers and George "Gabby" Hayes in "Jesse James at Bay" and "South of Santa Fe"; The Three Mesquiteers in "Empty Saddles" and "Gauchos of Eldorado"; and Don Red Barry in "Death Valley Outlaws" and "The Apache Kid." There also will be a 12 episode serial: "King of the Texas Rangers" with Slingin' Sammy Baugh.

The second of Republic's regional sales meetings was held at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, Thursday and Friday, May 22nd and 23rd, having been preceded by a similar meet at the studios in Hollywood the first part of last week.

James R. Grainger, who presided, was host at a luncheon the first day to several prominent theatre executives. Herbert J. Yates said that radio names would continue to be spotted in forthcoming film productions from the Republic studios.

Among those present at the meeting were: L. V. Seicsnaydre, New Orleans; William N. Snelson, Memphis; Harold Laird, Tampa; Roscoe Gann, Atlanta; J. H. Dalton, Charlotte; A. C. Bromberg, Atlanta; Nat Steinberg, St. Louis; J. Frackman, Milwaukee; W. Marriott, Indianapolis; Will Baker, Chicago; Sol Davis, Oklahoma City; F. R. Moran, Des Moines; Carl Reese, Omaha; Gilbert Nathelson, Minneapolis, and Bob Withers, Kansas City, all branch managers or franchise holders of the company.

Though announcement of new product was expected, Mr. Grainger decided to withhold this information until the New York regional sales meeting, scheduled Tuesday. At that meeting, again with Mr. Grainger presiding, the new product was announced, as follows:

Liberty National Pictures Corporation, formed by M. H. Hoffman last week and announced in New York, will make 26 films for the 1941-42 season, he said. Under franchises, from 12 to 18 additional features will be made by independent producers, and he added it would not limit its producers to low-budget pictures. Hollywood headquarters temporarily are at 9124 Sunset Boulevard. New York offices are in the RKO Building, Rockefeller Center. A sales manager will be appointed shortly, Mr. Hoffman said.

In announcing his company to the trade, Mr. Hoffman remarked that he and the financial interests backing him made a "thorough survey" and found that "whereas there may be enough costly productions to fill the requirements of a limited number of Class 'A' theatres, the great majority of independent theatres . . . as well as some circuits, definitely have not enough so-called 'bread and butter' pictures" and that "it also seems quite definite that the double bill is here to stay."

Universal's Last Regional

Universal held the third and last of its regional meetings for branch operations and accounts executives last week at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles.

Attending from New York were branch operations manager F. T. Murray and contract playdate manager J. J. Jordan.

On hand from the exchanges were: Thomas McMahon of Denver; Charles McBride of San Francisco; Nicholas Lamantia of New Orleans; E. H. Smith of Salt Lake City; H. F. Anderson of Portland; A. M. Kallen of Seattle, Edward Cooke and Harold Whitman of Los Angeles.

Matthew J. Fox, the company's vice-president and assistant to Nate Blumberg, president, is expected to leave the studio next Monday for a summer season in the East.

All payroll records at the Warners studios will be broken during June, the company has disclosed. More than 6,000 persons at that time will be working on a record summer schedule. Fifteen features will be in work by the middle of the month. These are:

"They Died With Their Boots On," "One Foot in Heaven," "Background to Danger," "Hot Nocturne," "All Through the Night," "Kings Row," "Knight of Malta," "Rhapsody in Blue," "Shadows of Their Wings," "Yankee Doodle Dandy," "The Gay Sisters," "Carnival in Rio," "The Constant Nymp," "Captain Horatio Hornblower," "The Man From the FBI," and "The Man They Couldn't Kill."

It is added the short subjects department will exceed its previous production record with 84 one- and two-reel subjects scheduled for the new season.

The company has added eight writers recently, this making 50 now employed on the lots. Twenty-three are on term contract; 18 on week-to-week basis.

There are 33 stories being worked on.

COURTS, LEGISLATURES ACT ON CHANCE GAMES

Massachusetts Rejects a Bill to Ban Giveaways; "Askit Basket" Wins in Nebraska

The Massachusetts legislature, reversing its previous stand on chance games, last week rejected by a vote of 78 to 58, a bill which would have banned these games. The original vote to prohibit games was by a margin almost as large, 76 to 63. The Senate voted 19 to 18 to permit the passage of the bill prohibiting the games but this will have no effect now since the measure would be killed in the House when returned there.

The first giveaway idea to win before a court in Lincoln, Neb., was an "Askit Basket" idea at the Nebraska theatre, which was brought into court by County Attorney Max G. Towle on the grounds that it was a lottery violation. Judge E. B. Chappell, of the district court, after deliberation, decided it was not a violation. "Askit Basket" is a quiz program, with the payment in prizes for the correct answers made in groceries. Judge Chappell said Nebraska defined a lottery as that which has chance prize and consideration. He claimed "Askit Basket" was without the chance feature because every patron had a chance to participate and win in direct ratio to his intelligence and ability.

Every other giveaway which has faced a court in the Lincoln area had been found to be a lottery.

The Omaha Motion Picture Exhibitors Association has asked the Nebraska supreme court for a rehearing on a recent decision holding that Prosperity Clubs violated an injunction banning Bank Night.

War on in Cleveland

On April 23rd, the Cleveland Police Department put into effect the order for the cessation of all Bingo games in that city. Previously, Thomas Clothey, assistant safety director, issued orders to Police Chief George Matowitz to notify Bingo operators at churches, clubs and all other places to remove all paraphernalia and shut down. It was estimated that more than 50 places were affected by the order.

A few days later chance games offered by some theatres in Cleveland became the target of investigation by the Safety and Law Department. The investigation was launched after representatives of 15 veterans and fraternal groups went to city hall to protest the ban outlawing Bingo, and complained that theatres were allowed to operate identical games without interference from police.

Mr. Clothy said the police department would be ordered to list all motion picture theatres offering prizes and a description of games played with view to having the Law Department determine whether the games were legal.

On May 13th chance games were discontinued at the Northio Palace in Hamilton, Ohio, where a country store was conducted, with donations of groceries and foodstuffs to patrons. The Rialto, a sister house, however, will continue the operation of the games.

Although the number of city-licensed chance games reached an all-time high in Cincinnati during March, receipts were comparatively low, Police Chief Eugene T. Weatherly reported to City Manager C. O. Sherrill, from whose office playing permits are issued. The report shows 282 parties, with a total attendance of 294,971. Gross was $205,096.47; prizes, $49,726.39, leaving a net of $155,370.08 to the sponsoring organizations. The average net cost per player was 52.7 cents.

Comparatively, the February figures were 259 parities; attendance, 279,358; gross, $206,505.68; prizes, $49,803.80, and net, $156,701.68. Average net cost per player was 52.5 cents.

A Calloway County grand jury at Murray, Ky., recently returned an indictment against the Columbia Amusement Company of Murray and Paducah, Ky., charging them with the unlawful operation of a lottery and a gift enterprise, in connection with the operation of Bank Night at a Murray Theatre.

The action was the first in the state since Assistant Attorney General Jesse K. Lewis of Frankfort, Ky., declared that Bank Night, Bingo and free drawings were held in violation of the state constitution. The case is scheduled for the August term of the Calloway Circuit Court.

Clean-up in Buffalo

One of the first things Buffalo's (N. Y.) new police commissioner, Austin J. Roche, says he is going to do is put an end to Bingo playing in that city. "I am satisfied Bingo is illegal, that it is gambling," said Commissioner Roche after a conference with District Attorney Leo J. Hagerty. "I intend to take steps towards closing every Bingo game in Buffalo."

Commissioner Roche said he had conveyed to the district attorney information on Bingo operations obtained by undercover investigation and had received the prosecutor's pledge of full cooperation in any drive to eradicate the game. He also revealed that the district attorney was to present complaints aaginst Bingo to the grand jury with a view of obtaining indictments. Former Mayor Frank X. Schwab's Old Vienna theatre is understood to have been "thoroughly investigated" by Commissioner Roche's department. About a year ago another Bingo investigation was conducted by the Commissioner's predecessor and several arrests were made. All the defendants pleaded guilty except Mr. Schwab, who chose a trial by jury. The jury disagreed and since then the status of Bingo has been undecided.

While there are numerous theatre Bingo games operating in Buffalo, Mr. Schwab's theatre is acknowledged to be the most liberal. For a fee of $1 customers see a motion picture and receive a free set of Bingo games. Since he charges only for the picture show, usually older films, Mr. Schwab has declared his enterprise is cultural as well as legal. To prove that his Bingo is free, patrons may sit at tables outside the auditorium and play for nothing.

In Des Moines, Ia., last month, a petition signed by 1,200 persons was presented to the City Council asking an ordinance regulating Bank Night in Des Moines theatres. The petition asked that theatres be required to destroy all present registration lists and re-register persons who wished to participate in future weekly drawings. During the recent session of the State Legislature, a bill designed to regulate Bank Night was introduced but was killed before adjournment.

In New York City the appellate division of the supreme court has denied the motion of the Walter Reade circuit to appeal from the judgement rendered against it in action brought by Edward Goldstein, Bank Night distributor, against Mr. Reade for payments due under Bank Night contracts. Original judgment was handed down last December.

Major Bowes Quits Capitol Theatre

Effective Sunday, June 1st, Major Edward Bowes, vice-president and managing-director of the Capitol theatre on Broadway, New York, Loew Circuit's flagship theatre, will resign. He has been connected with the theatre since its opening 22 years ago.

The resignation, announced by Messmore Kendall, president of Moredall Realty Corp., which owns and manages the Capitol, was necessitated by the increasing demand on Major Bowes' time by his radio work. Mr. Kendall said the resignation had been accepted "with great regret."

The Loew theatre organization are large stockholders in the theatre and furnish the bulk of its pictures. The theatre will continue to be managed by Herman Landwehr under the direction of the president.

Broadcast Discontinued

It was said in order to relieve Major Bowes of further demands on his time the Sunday broadcast of the "Capitol Family" radio program will be discontinued for the summer months. This broadcast originally was known as "Roxy's Gang" and was conducted by the late Samuel L. Rothafel. It was taken over by Major Bowes when Mr. Rothafel left the Capitol to take charge of the Roxy theatre.

When the Capitol building plans were being formulated in 1918 Major Bowes joined Mr. Kendall. The theatre was opened in 1919 as one of the first film "palaces." Stage shows flourished at the theatre under the Roxy and Bowes' regimes, and hundreds of famous stars played there under the Bowes direction.

Original directors of the Capitol, in addition to Major Bowes and Mr. Kendall, included the late Senator T. Coleman duPont, George H. Doran, publisher; William Braden, prominent mining man; Robert W. Chambers, author; George Armsby, banker; James F. Bell, president of Washburn-Crosby Mills Corp., and Frank H. Hitchcock, former Postmaster General.

Major Bowes later became manager of Station WHN, New York, in addition to his other activities, and on this station he originated the Major Bowes' Amateur Hour.

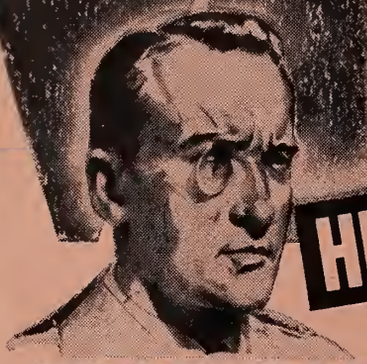
Bowes was born in San Francisco in 1874. His first job was as an usher at a National Education convention; then he worked as a $3 per week office boy for a real estate firm. He continued in the real estate business and was active in the reconstruction of San Francisco after the earthquake and fire. He came to New York with John Cort and Peter McCourt, and owned and operated the Cort Theatre here and the Park Square theatre in Boston.

Early in his career he was associated with the Selwyn Co. in play production and was a vice-president of the old Goldwyn Pictures Corp. and a vice-president of M-G-M until 1935. He was married to the late Margaret Illington. He is the author of a collection of poems.

Bruen Not with Shearer

Hugh Bruen, west coast theatre operator and executive, is not connected with the B. F. Shearer equipment company as reported. Mr. Bruen continues to operate theatres in Seattle and Whittier, Cal.

Haggott Gets Guild Post



John Haggott has been named general production assistant to Lawrence Langner and Theresa Helburn, co-administrators of the Theatre Guild in New York.

SLUMP IN TICKET RECEIPTS BRINGS EXHIBITORS EMERGENCY CONFERENCES

Operators Discuss Causes and Possible Remedies; Report Average Receipts Down 30%; Some Blame 'War Nerves'

Conditions of a waning box office response by a public mind preoccupied by war today arises as the No. One item of immediate attention in many sections from coast to coast.

Exhibitors in Pennsylvania call it "a business crisis."

Allied representatives of independent owners from 20 states formally complain that box office receipts are off up to 30 per cent.

Independent owners in the midwest, as elsewhere, publicly blame war uncertainties for "a box office slump."

Emergency meetings are being called to determine remedies, by state and national organized exhibition, by circuits and independents.

Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, the West Coast, St. Louis, Columbus, Albany, Portland, San Francisco—these and other places respond with reports of waning receipts.

Allied States board members are polling patrons in typical theatres throughout the country for answers to "what is wrong," inviting them to mention types of product they want.

Seasonal summer declines, accentuated this year by earlier warm weather, are influencing box office income, as is expected, but added to this, field reports indicate, are "war jitters," some Army camp competition, the draft, migration of locals to defense fields where earnings are greater, besides the usual day-and-night baseball, outdoor attractions, strikes, round-the-clock defense work, and all that goes with present-day exhibitor competition.

All-out defense work in the Boston sector was described as keeping customers from the box office. In Milwaukee, too, employment is up, but grosses are down. New Orleans also reported unfavorably. Not all places are complaining, however, the most favorable reports in this connection coming from Seattle and Washington, D. C., among a few others.

Plans to Improve, Is Pennsylvania Aim

Plans to improve business at the box-office and "the gravity" of general conditions today were discussed at a meeting of Eastern Pennsylvania Allied in Philadelphia last Friday. The meeting, attended by 55 Allied members representing 90 theatres, authorized the appointment of a "Policy Committee" to cope with "the impending box-office crisis." Names of members to serve on the committee are being held "secret" because of alleged necessity to "protect the men from reprisals," it being charged that "Past experience has shown that independent exhibitors are subjected to ruthless business reprisals whenever they attempt to combat distributor unfair trade practice, and, whereas, Independent exhibitors now face a business crisis of major importance aggravated by the box-office collapse, now, therefore, be it resolved: That a Policy Committee of six members of Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Inc., be appointed by the business manager to serve as a group of consultants to the business manager on matters of policy, and that the membership of the committee be secret to protect the members from reprisals . . ."

Sidney E. Samuelson is business manager of the organization. Other industry matters discussed at the meeting were the buying outlook under the consent decree, unfair trade practices of distributors in connection with the forcing of shorts, non-delivery of short subjects sold under a weekly payment plan without giving the exhibitor proper credit or cash refund, the general attitude of some of the local exchanges, undisclosed, toward independent exhibitors; and the tax bill under consideration by Congress.

Exhibitors of 20 States Hold a 'War Council'

Seventeen members of the board of directors of National Allied, claimed to represent independent exhibitors in 20 states, held a forum-survey in Cleveland last Monday and Tuesday at the Hotel Cleveland, to analyze the paradoxical problem of why movie grosses are declining in face of boom defense spending.

H. A. Cole, from Dallas, president of Allied, primarily called the meeting for a poll to check business conditions. Consensus of opinion was that theatre receipts are off from 20 to 30 per cent in all their sections.

Some of the reasons advanced at the round-table were that workers in defense plants were spending their increased earnings on such items as autos, new houses, paying back old debts, meeting higher living costs, etc., instead of on movies. Fear of a postwar depression and the possibility that amusement habits may be temporarily upset by the large number of conscripted leaving for army camps also were debated. General opinion was that conditions will improve after the country's defense mechanism is geared more smoothly.

Some representatives, giving the viewpoint of the smaller towns, asserted the slump was due to the trend of pictures being produced, it was reported. They felt many were too sophisticated and were turned out for only the metropolitan audiences, it was asserted. Others contended the defense drive itself was to blame, the extra hours required in armament production leaving the average theatregoer too tired at the end of the day's work to attend the theatre.

Abraham Myers, from Washington, Allied's general counsel, addressed the meeting during which the following 17 representatives reported on conditions in their territories: Sidney Samuelson, representing eastern Pennsylvania; Roy Branch and Pearl Spoth, Michigan; Jack Kirsh, Illinois; Fred Herrington, western Pennsylvania; Nathan Yamans, New England; Lee Newberry, New Jersey; Joe Trunk, southern Ohio; M. Bernstein, New York mid-state; H. A. Blum, Maryland; William Ainsworth, Northwest; Jack Kalafat, Henry Greenberger and George Erdman, northern Ohio; and Martin Smith, of Toledo, president of the Independent Theatre owners of Ohio. Martin Smith also officiated at another meeting, held by the Ohio I. T. O., in Cleveland Tuesday, when its 130 members also discussed the results of the main Allied meeting as to how they were affected in Ohio. Peter Wood, secretary of the I. T. O., which has headquarters in Columbus, attended.

OHIO SHOWS ITS TICKET TAX DROP

Despite vastly improved business conditions, which has accelerated purchasing power, failure of theatre attendance to keep pace in Ohio is reflected in a report released by Don H. Ebright, State Treasurer, which shows sales tax collections to be 31 per cent greater for the first four months of this year than for the corresponding period of 1940, while admission taxes increased only five per cent, with majority of collections coming from amusements other than pictures.

A partial percentage breakdown shows tax on automobile sales were 39 per cent greater, radios and musical instruments, 31 per cent, and jewelry, 31 per cent.

The retail sales tax is three per cent. Exhibitors pay three per cent on gross receipts.

Uneasiness Hits Theatre Receipts in Chicago

The unrest caused by world war conditions, combined with defense preparations hitting a new high, is responsible for the box office slump in the Chicago territory. This is the consensus of opinion of many large and small independent operators and circuit executives.

Jack Kirsch, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois, at a special meeting of the membership, last week, pointed out that a recurrence of the same uneasiness before the entrance of the U. S. in World War I is probably responsible for much of the wane in box office receipts today.

The public is holding back on spending due to uncertainties and a scared viewpoint on increased taxation, according to some opinions. It is also thought that the stepped-up defense program, makes it necessary for employees engaged in this work to put in so much overtime and holiday work that they have no time to attend theatres.

Small town managers complain that the defense program is taking away many patrons who migrated with their families to defense work centers for higher wages. This, combined with the draft, which seems only to have made inroads on small town attendance in this section, is the country town operator's biggest problem.

The slump started in the Chicago territory the first week in April, about eight weeks before the usual summer decline, and business is off 15 per cent to 35 per cent.

Drop on the Coast Hits One-Third

Admission receipts have dropped about 33⅓ per cent below normal recently for independent houses and only slightly less for the circuits because of a variety of reasons, a check revealed Monday. First-run totals are generally ten per cent under average currently, and are running below the figures for a similar period last year.

In addition to the seasonal slump occasioned by good weather and the start of the ocean fishing season, California theatre men give credit, or blame, for the decline to:

1. Unrest due to international uncertainty.
2. Disruption of community life by selective service.
3. Running of defense industries around the clock.

"There is less 'war' talk here than in the east, but nevertheless it hurts business," was the basis of general opinion.

Thousands have been hired by defense industries in Southern California, notably the aircraft factories. But two of the shifts, one starting at four p.m. and the other, at midnight, appears to make it almost impossible for those workers to attend shows.

Independent exhibitors in this area are the most severely affected, according to one such showman, who laid part of the blame on selling methods. "Circuits can run two percentage pictures on a double bill by converting one to a flat rental," he declared. "Thus a circuit can show 'The Great Dictator' and 'Nice Girl' on one bill, whereas independents can't. People in this area 'shop' for entertainment and independents can't offer bills like that."

The slump started around the beginning of May during an unseasonal heat wave which sent thermometers up to the nineties. Scores of thousands went to beaches, mountain resorts and every place else except motion picture houses. Theatres haven't recovered yet.

Northwest Reports on 'War' Reactions

The territory serviced by Minneapolis exchanges—Minnesota, the Dakotas and part of Wisconsin, reports it is hard hit, especially in rural areas, by removal of men for army training and by migration of skilled and semi-skilled labor to industrial areas which benefited more heavily by defense contracts.

In some cases, calling of the national guard has removed up to 500 younger men at once from a small city, curtailing ticket-buying.

There was a boom in Minnesota's iron ore industry, and other industries in urban centers were relieving the situation there and in fact promising to better summer business. Whether that effect will outbalance the loss to rural areas, however, has yet to be seen.

Advent of the recreation season when Minnesota's lakes and tourist centers are open further complicated the situation.

Some factors alleviated the threat in the Twin Cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul. The army's training camp at Fort Snelling is jammed, and many of the heavier industries have big defense contracts. These may help to offset the normal summer slump in business.

Situation in St. Louis Is Running Into Third Week

Nearly $300,000,000 in defense contracts have been let in St. Louis, but little proportionately has found its way into theatres' box office.

For three consccutive weeks now the grosses have been off—and in some instances, by no small margins. Product has been good, weather ideal and up to now, little competition from other entertainment enterprises. Consequently, the absence of lines at the box office has been puzzling to theatre men, who are only content in that the slump is general throughout the country.

Clarence D. Hill, manager of Columbia's branch in St. Louis, returned last week from a trip through the outlying territory to report business is improving in the rural areas, but bad in metropolitan districts. He advanced the theory that the 40-hour week has released thousands of workers who have fled to the country over the weekend, thus cutting the customary lucrative weekend business at the theatres.

One exhibitor said the depression once worried theatremen because so many persons were jobless and couldn't afford movies; now so many are working they haven't time to go to the movies.

Summer Closing To Affect Six RKO Theatres

Charles W. Koerner, general manager of RKO Theatres, in New York, announced Monday the closing for the summer of the following houses: May 29th, Grand, Columbus, O.; June 8th, Orpheum, Champaign, Ill., and June 26th, Palace, Chicago. Others already closed are the Orpheum, Kansas City, on May 18th; Albee, Providence, on May 21st and Strand, Syracuse on May 25th.

These are the same RKO Theatres that usually shut down for the summer months.

Upstate New York Not Satisfied

Despite an upswing in employment and a boom in spending money, theatre business has been bad not only in Albany, Troy, Schenectady and Utica, New York, but in the territory up to the Canadian border.

Such an apparent confliction calls for an answer and amusement men say the same thing: people worrying about the war are not in a mood to spend amusement dollars. When the war conditions and this country's likely entrance divide attention, other exhibitors say, theatres some in second.

Heavy defense expenditures, particularly in Schenectady, where General Electric is working 24 hours per day and at Watervliet, where the government arsenal is at top speed, have meant little or nothing to theatre boxoffices, exhibitors all report. About the only amusement money, if such it be, that defense employment is pumping out, according to businessmen, is in the form of new automobiles.

Under the circumstances, theatremen are looking to the fall for an upswing. By that time unemployment will be a thing of the past, it is expected, with 1929 payrolls heavily exceeded and the tendency to spend should be at hand.

Baseball, keen competition for theatres in this territory, is not drawing as well at Albany, Amsterdam, Gloversville, Utica, Ogdensburg and Rome as in the past despite the fact that night baseball was played earlier than in other years.

The mental attitude of the people is reportedly too uncertain and generally upset to predict any present upswing in business.

DEFENSE GETS BLAME IN SAN FRANCISCO

A strange combination of circumstances, involving national defense activity, is blamed by San Francisco exhibitors for a greater than seasonal slump in recent boxoffice returns. Situation involves recent police edict clamping down a two a.m. closing on all nightclubs and bars, giving the city the semblance of a "closed town." This has had tendency to scare away Friday, Saturday and Sunday spenders, now making big money in shipyards and other defense plants. Instead of having fun in the "big city," they are going to nearby Salinas, Monterey, and Sunnyvale, sites of huge Army camps, which are running wideopen all night. Unusual weather also has had bad effect on 'Frisco business this spring, ranging from unexpected late spring rainstorms to record-breaking heat spells, breaking thermometer records of many years' standing.

Weekend Percentages 'Menace' Split Weeks

High-percentage features on the Sunday-Monday turn 'menace' split week houses, the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio advises its membership after surveying the distribution of grosses and rentals through the week. P. J. Wood, secretary of the organization, observes that most exhibitors have underestimated the percentage of their weekly business which is accounted for on Sunday and Monday. The Ohio statistics indicate that on the average 51.1 per cent of the weekly gross, or 11 per cent more than the usual estimate of four-tenths, comes to the box office on these days.

Demands that exhibitors spot the high percentage pictures for Sunday and Monday mean that split week theatres are concentrating the outstanding pictures on these days, Mr. Wood observes. The Ohio ITO warns that "the theatre-going public is becoming more and more 'Sunday-minded' with the result that patrons are beginning to believe that the only time a good picture can be seen in a split week house is on Sunday." Marked increase in business on Sunday-Monday with an offsetting drop on weekdays when flat rental pictures are shown is raising the average film rental dangerously close to the operating margin in many Ohio splitweek theatres.

An ITO bulletin warns Ohio exhibitors that they had better take stock of the situation. An increase in taxes or the loss of many young customers to the military services, coupled with increasing rentals because of a "Sunday-minded" patronage insisting on high rent pictures, for the weekend may bring disaster unless theatre-owners are aware of how much their merchandise is actually costing them. The buckeye independents suggest a nation-wide survey to determine if Sunday percentages are generally rising.

Montana ITO Hits High Film Rentals

High film rentals were scored at the Spring meeting, this week, at Billings, of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of Montana. The exhibitors pledged continued support for the national defense program. Joseph B. Moore, president, outlined the consent decree. The Fall meeting will be held here on Sept. 17.

UNIONS LOOK FOR A NEW 'SHUFFLE' IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH PRODUCERS

Hollywood Local Members Stir Revolt After Indictment of Browne, Bioff; New Demands on Studio Employers Seen

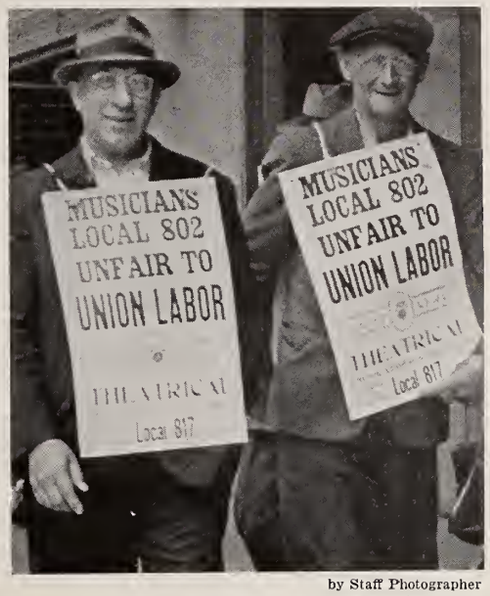
Business representatives of the ten IATSE studio locals, composed of approximately 10,000 workers, this week in Hollywood were to formulate their future policy with respect to negotiations with producers for new wage scales and conditions, their contemplated actions to take into consideration the indictment of their two international leaders, George E. Browne and William Bioff, in New York on extortion charges.

Confronting the business agents, too, is the problem of whether the smoldering anti-Browne and anti-Bioff sentiment of a number of members will arise to create an entirely new shuffle in the administration of the union's affairs, both here and nationally.

Divided on Procedure

Several hours after the news of the New York Federal Grand Jury's action last Friday, the local's business agents convened at the behest of Harold V. Smith, chairman of their informal group and representative of Sound Technicians Local 695, to discuss the situation. No action was taken at Friday's meeting, and another session was set for Monday.

The ten locals, all of which have presented demands for adjustments in wage scales and working conditions to the studios several months ago, had been divided in their projected method of obtaining what they want, some of them already having petitioned the International to remove their autonomy and negotiate for them, some of them having asked the International's help while retaining autonomy and others wanting to make their own studio deals.



Within the last few weeks, an indication of incipient rebellion was noted in the anonymous publication of the "Hollywood Merry-Go-Round," mimeographed sheet distributed about the studios which devoted itself to attacks upon the Browne-Bioff regime, calling attention to the bill of particulars filed by the government in the income tax evasion case of Bioff in the local federal court. The bill listed the various alleged items of income on which the government is basing its case.

An unusual departure from long standing IATSE practice of not going to the courts or governmental agencies with its troubles occurred when Studio Laborers and Utility Employes Local 727 last weekend filed charges against all major studios with the NLRB, of refusal to negotiate with it, discrimination, and discharge of workers illegally. This marks the first time that an alliance local has appealed to the labor board for aid in negotiations, Zeal Fairbanks, business agent of the local, said court action also would follow.

Direct cause of the NLRB action is the still burning jurisdictional fight with Studio Utility Employes Local 724, General Construction and Building Laborers of America, one of the six unions in the studio labor basic agreement of which the IATSE is a former member. Following the 1937 strike in which the Utility Employes Local 724 participated, the newly created IATSE Local 727 (one of five formed from the dissolution of Studio Technicians Local 37), swallowed about half of the utility employes' membership.

Since then, although Local 724 is in the basic agreement, a dispute over further demarcation of work has been more or less active. Local 724 has been given the work on destruction of sets and permanent construction, under the jurisdictional outlines of the basic agreement.

Meanwhile, in Washington, rulings from the Wages and Hours Administration, on the reclassification of workers, were expected shortly, after meetings between representatives of that division and those of labor and the producers.

UNION DISUNION—Pickets from the American Federation of Labor's International Brotherhood of Teamsters and Chauffeurs, last week and this paraded in front of the Music Hall, Roxy, and Strand film theatres, and before some legitimate houses. They were protesting refusal by the Musicians Local 802 to allow them to chauffeur vehicles carrying musicians to theatres, and to carry instruments from the vehicles to the stagedoor, at $10 per day and $20 per night.

Bioff, Browne Charged With Extortion

Indicted by a Federal grand jury in New York, Friday, May 23rd, for alleged extortion of $550,000 from four majors—Twentieth Century-Fox, Warners, Paramount, and Loew's, were Willie Bioff, West Coast IATSE leader, and George Browne, the International Alliance's president.

Bioff, obtaining $25,000 bail, was to have an extradition hearing next Thursday in Los Angeles Federal Court, before U. S. Commissioner David B. Head. His bail was reduced from $50,000. Mr. Browne, in Chicago, surrendered to a U. S. Marshal Tuesday, with $25,000 bail being asked by the Government.

The Chicago projectionists' union voted confidence in Browne, and backed his bail. Other unions in the area are doing the same.

The Federal indictment of Friday, reportedly an outcome of the income tax evasion trial and conviction of Joseph M. Schenck, former chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox, some weeks ago, was returned under the anti-racketeering law, and charged the two men with "force, violence, and coercion." It charged they had threatened strikes, and under those threats had extorted money from executives of the majors mentioned; money paid to them in cash. Of the money, approximately $400,000 was paid to them, in New York, in 1936, in $1,000, $500, and $100 bills, the indictment said.

Business agents of eight Alliance locals on Monday night directly asked Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Motion Picture Producers Association, for immediate start of wages and hours negotiations, thus going over the heads of the producers' regular labor contacts.

The $400,000, the Government indictment charged, was obtained under one specific threat to call a nation-wide strike. There are three counts, two substantive, charging extortion and amenable to the anti-racketeering law, and one charging conspiracy. Maximum penalties for each of the men, if they are found guilty of all counts, are 30 years in Federal prison and fines of $30,000 each.

Other film companies and persons than those named in the indictment made payments under duress to the pair, the indictment states, without naming them.

Faces Income Tax Trial

Bioff is also under indictment for failure to pay $85,000 income taxes in 1936 and 1937 and last week obtained postponement of his trial to September, after a telegram from Mr. Browne appointed him to an Alliance executive post to "prevent strikes from interfering with films for national defense."

That trial will now be postponed indefinitely so that the racketeering trial may occur first; and it is understood the Government will redraw its income tax indictments to include the extortion payments and any other payments which may be disclosed in the future. It was further understood the procedure will be to dismiss the present income tax indictment on which Bioff is free in $5,000 bail, and to have him appear again in court for a redrawing and new bail terms.

Though Bioff was appointed last week to head off strikes in national defense film work, and presumably was again an active officer of the IATSE, a checkup last week, shortly after the Browne telegram, disclosed he had not visited the Alliance Hollywood offices, nor established his own headquarters.

Surrendering in Los Angeles Saturday morning, and being fingerprinted, Bioff, vehemently telling newspapermen the extortion indictment was a surprise and that he had nothing to say. He did add: "I never extorted a dime from anybody."

Bioff last fall served almost six months of an unexpired 1922 Chicago jail term, which had been imposed upon him for pandering.

United States Attorney Mattheas F. Correa declined, on Saturday, in New York, to say whether Mr. Schenck would be called as a witness in the forthcoming extortion trial; nor did he name the other executives who presumably will be called.

Browne is a vice-president of the AFL- as well as IATSE president; and, at the last convention of the former, in New Orleans, he was appointed to supervise enforcement of a convention resolution against racketeering, introduced by the International Ladies Garment Workers Union.

He, like Bioff, had beginnings in theatre industry power, in Chicago. He succeeded the late, murdered, Tommy Malloy, as head of the city's projectionists, and later was made Alliance head. This was in the early 1920's; and shortly thereafter, Bioff made his appearance on the Hollywood scene, as an IA international representative and as a personal agent of Browne's. Both men successfully organized and strengthened the membership of their craft.

Representatives of 12 organizations met last week in Hollywood, to take preliminary steps for a studio union and guild committee, to replace the now defunct Hollywood Guild Council, the Conference of AFL Unions, and the Federated Motion Picture Crafts. They had been meeting with directors of the Screen Writers Guild, on discussion of the latter's fracas with producers over a new contract; and the idea was broached, for a new embracive, committee. Representatives of the organizations are to report to their groups the results of the discussion, for further action.

Meanwhile, the Guild's negotiating committee was to have met Tuesday, with the producers' committee, on the new contract, over which the writers had threatened a strike.

George Stevens is the new president of the Screen Directors' Guild. He was elected last week. Other new officers are Ernst Lubitsch, renamed first vice-president; Norman Taurog, second vice-president; William A. Seiter, secretary; and Tay Garnett, treasurer. Made an honorary member was Frank Capra, who retired from two years as president. The new officials are expected to press producers for contract revisions.

The Screen Cartoonists Guild was to walk out of the Disney studio Wednesday, after inconclusive negotiations of several weeks, during which a National Labor Relations Board hearings had resulted in the studio being declared unfair to labor, and in the studio agreeing to dissolve its Federation of Screen Cartoonists, an alleged "company union."

The strike vote was taken Monday night, and a Wednesday deadline set. The Guild wanted exclusive bargaining powers for cartoonists, and charged that the new organization of Disney employees, the American Society of Screen Cartoonists, was also a company union.

The strike prevented a trade preview of Walt Disney's latest feature, "The Reluctant Dragon."

Mr. Disney Tuesday told his employees the studio would remain open. The union asserted 500 of the 700 eligible to join had authorized the strike. Walter Spreckles, labor contact for Mr. Disney, said the studio wanted an NLRB election.

On Tuesday Leon Schlesinger announced signing of the three-year contract with the Guild. His studio, too, had been threatened with a strike.

Laborers Complain

The Studio Laborers Local 727, IATSE, last week complained to the NLRB, charging producers with refusal to bargain, and asking that it be designated sole bargaining agency for studio laborers and utility workers.

Local 306, New York projectionists' union, and strongest in the country, served notice Monday it would ask for extra workers in the Rialto Theatre, that city, when the theatre starts its projected television programs.

In Reading, Pa., Frank L. Diefenderfer, president of the city's musicians' local, has been reelected head of the Confcrence of Pennsylvania and Delaware Musicians. This will be his 15th year as such.

The Philadelphia chapter of the American Guild of Variety Artists has elected Jimmy Walker, president; Robert Mack, first vice-president; Frank Schluth, second vice-president; Richard Thomas, third vice-president; Gus Howard, fourth vice-president; Sid Raymond, fifth vice-president; Leonora Jaxon, recording secretary, and Shandor Clarke, treasurer. Dick Mayo continues executive secretary.

New England Owners Reelect All Officers

Officers of the Independent Exhibitors, were returned to office last week at the annual elections in Boston. At the same time, it was announced that a secret committee was being formed to pass on the various drives to which exhibitors are asked to subscribe. The committee, whose members will remain anonymous, will be appointed by the board of directors. The committee will check on all drives and those which, it is felt, are not legitimate will not be recommended to the exhibitors.

Officers elected include Francis C. Lydon, president; Max L. Levenson, first vice president; Wilbur M. Peterson, second vice president; Francis M. Perry, secretary; E. Harold Stoneman, treasurer; Nathan Yamins, chairman of the executive committee whose members include Edward Ansin, Leslie Bendslev, Kenneth Forkey, Thomas A. McNulty, Daniel Murphy, Morris Pouzzner, George Ramsdell, Samuel Resnik, Richard B. Rubin, Philip Smith, William A. Viano, and Walter E. Mitchell of Massachusetts; Richard Flora of Maine; J. E. Charbonnea and Warren Nichols of New Hampshire; Allard M. Graves of Vermont; and John B. Findlay and Martin Tuohey of Rhode Island.

Arthur K. Howard was re-elected business manager of the group.

Korson Feted

Approximately 150 industry members in Philadelphia turned out Monday, May 26th, for a testimonial luncheon for Louis "Pop" Korson, sponsored by the Philadelphia Variety Club at the Ritz Carlton Hotel. The event signalized the departure from the industry of Mr. Korson, who had been identified with the business both as an exhibitor and later as an independent exchange operator for the past 35 years. He once operated Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., in Philadelphia, in addition to his interest in Equity Theatres, Inc., acquired many years ago by the Warner theatre circuit. A gold watch was presented to Mr. Korson, who left the following day for California where he intends to reside. Al Davis was chairman of the affair.

Adventure Film Being Cut

"Kukan," Rey Scott's all-color story of China's struggle, is in its final cutting stage and is soon to be released nationally by Adventure Epics, Inc., 1560 Broadway, New York. Mr. Scott is reported to have travelled more than 15,000 miles to get the necessary material and scenes include the bombing of Chungking by the Japanese.

Bernie Kamber, who has been doing special exploitation work for United Artists, has been appointed permanent field exploiteer for the New England territory. He succeeds George Scher, who is now in the Army.

Murphy Resigns Post

Robert T. Murphy has resigned as city manager in Niagara Falls, N. Y., for Shea Theatres, headed by Vincent McFaul. Mr. Murphy has not as yet determined his future plans.

Arthur Ziehm will release four westerns, produced by Elkay Productions, and starring eight-year-old Buzzy Henry. The first, "The Phantom Pinto," is now ready for release.

Davis Finances 'Baffle' Inquiry

Following the revelation of the financial tangle which followed the collapse of his $70,000,000 empire, William Fox, former film executive, continued his testimony against J. Warren Davis, retired circuit court judge, and Morgan S. Kaufman, attorney and bankruptcy referee, in Philadelphia. Belle Fox, daughter of the ex-film executive, testifying in defense of her father, said she provided money for two unsecured loans her father said he had made the jurist during the Fox bankruptcy litigation. Judge Davis and Mr. Kaufman are charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the United States.

Mr. Kaufman, Tuesday, admitted lending $10,000 to Judge Davis' cousin during a period in which he was interested in four lawsuits before the jurist; but denied borrowing money from Mr. Fox.

The case was to go to the jury before the weekend.

Meanwhile, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which is conducting the inquiry into the affairs of the retired judge, produced financial transactions which were described as "impossible for Federal investigators to explain."

Tells of Meeting

The testimony was given by Whiting Willauer, former special Deputy Attorney General, who participated in the investigation. Mr. Willauer, when called by the Government to testify, told of a meeting in 1939 with Mr. Davis and his attorney, former United States Senator George Wharton Pepper.

"I told Senator Pepper," he said, "that we did not see where Judge Davis got the money to participate in these various financial transactions and that we would be glad to have Judge Davis present a statement."

The statement was introduced in evidence, but was not read.

On Monday, Mr. Davis took the stand in his own defense and testified that never in his life has he accepted "a dishonest dollar," and denied that he ever accepted money from Mr. Fox.

"As I recall," Mr. Davis said while on the stand, "Mr. Fox said that I met him with Mr. Kaufman and discussed his (Mr. Fox's) financial affairs on a Sunday. As a matter of fact, there has been only one Sunday in 15 years that I have been in Atlantic City," and continued, "for 40 years there has not been a Sunday that I have not taught a men's Bible class unless I was ill."

Mr. Davis told of two meetings with Mr. Fox in New York hotels. The first, in 1940, was after he said he learned of the Government's investigation into his affairs. He said he told Mr. Fox at that meeting that Government attorneys had said the Federal Reserve Bank in Philadelphia had kept the serial numbers of 10 $1,000 bills sent to an Atlantic City hotel and that five of the bills had been given to Mr. Fox's daughter.

Mr. Davis quoted Mr. Fox as replying that he knew nothing of the five bills, but would try to find out.

At a second meeting in March, 1941, Mr. Davis said Mr. Fox told him of conversations with Government attorneys. He again quoted Mr. Fox as saying he had told the attorneys the "truth," that he did not know Mr. Davis and that the investigators had then said: "Do you remember the Manton case? You will recall we let everybody off but Manton. We don't believe your story and if you want to save your wife and daughter, you had better go home and think it over and then come back and tell the whole story."

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

If thousands of women's lapels bristle with spiders, if their throats are encircled by wooden nickels, and their wrists and ankles dangle with grinning African masks, blame it on Martha Sleeper, the motion picture player who now is playing in Station WOR's daytime air serial, "We Are Always Young."

Miss Sleeper not only popularized the trend to odd gadget decoration of females—she literally made it. Made it out of a mixture of paper towels and instant-drying glue.

It all stems back to the days when the Sleeper children used to spend much time playing anagrams and Martha would end the games by molding little images out of chewing gum. Droves of crickets, bees, chickens and other creatures issued from the double play of jawbone and fingers.

When a motion picture producer saw a photograph of Miss Sleeper and cast her in his next production, thus starting her career, she did not stop her hobby. Down Sunset Boulevard, in Ciro's, The Brown Derby, and other Hollywood spots, Martha had the envy of cinema-city pretties. They would not believe that she had fashioned and made the rows of tarantulas that marched down her linen sun suits. They thought she was trying to keep the name of the store to herself.

Suddenly it hit her! If all the glamour girls coveted her gadgets, why wouldn't women the country over like it? At a Hollywood cocktail party she met a magazine publisher who liked her gadgets. He sent some examples to a department store buyer. Now girls all over the country own gadgets. Martha Sleeper is getting rich.

Plight of Alvin Hendricks, manager of the Varsity Theatre in Lincoln, Neb., is one unequalled to date in manager-critic relations.

He finds that he is in the bad graces of The Lincoln Journal's new movie critic, Dean Pohlenz, who took over the desk recently when Barney Oldfield became a captain and went into the army. The situation dates from the extreme youth of Pohlenz.

After much quizzing, Hendricks found out it dated from the day he locked the rear exit of the Varsity theatre against a bunch of juvenile pests who were always using the alley entrance to sneak into the house.

Pohlenz was one of the lads thus denied, all of which goes to show a manager must be extremely careful in his public relations, whether at the back or the front of the house.

There is the report, for example, of The Journal of the Film Industry, published in Bombay, which declares that, "Occasionally exhibitors are arrested by (Indian) State officials on trumped up charges if the exhibitors do not satisfy officialdom. The rulers themselves whisk films, complete with portable theatres, to any place they choose, without wasting one Royal thought that they are thereby inconveniencing public patrons who have at times had to wait in the theatres for hours pending return of the films after entertaining royalty. And all this without any compensation of any kind to the exhibitor, who must dance attendance to the pleasure of his Royal dispenser of fate. . . ."

Of passing interest to the motion picture industry is the Drew Pearson-Robert Allen story from Washington which relates how no man in our history—not even Teddy Roosevelt—has done more to break up monopoly than Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold. He has indicted aluminum, motion picture, oil and dairy corporations, labor unions, even farm and medical organizations.

At a crowded cocktail party in Washington, recently, Arnold stood beside a beautiful young lady.

"I wish," he said, "you and I were on a desert island."

"That," remarked Ernest Cuneo, "is a fine statement from one who has sworn death to monopoly."

In the Navy

Abbott, Costello Louder and Funnier

The comedy team of Abbott and Costello are louder, faster and funnier as sailors in this film than they were as soldiers in "Buck Privates." This production profits also by the presence of Dick Powell and by a more elastic budget yielding production numbers surpassing those seen in the army picture. The Andrews Sisters again deliver songs with a gusto matching that of the comedians.

Filmed at the San Pedro and San Diego naval bases with what impresses as all-out cooperation of the navy, the picture is full of sailors, sailor lore, sailor-type gags and, now and then, sailors on parade and elsewise. The long sequence with which the picture closes after piling up laughs which leave observers gasping for breath is staged aboard a battleship and with the same dashing recklessly in and out of fleet formation in a manner to give an old salt heart failure.

As in "Buck Privates," the comedy duo sessions between Abbott and Costello highlight the proceedings. Again they dip back into the staples of burlesque comedy—the money changing routine, the three shell game, many another—for material that is as effective, revamped and laundered for the screen, as in the heyday of sliding Billy Watson. Again Abbott is straight man to Costello's comic and again, in greater measure, the stubby, chubby entertainer with the squeaky voice and dolorous visage induces wave after wave of laughter that blots out whole sections of dialogue.

Powell portrays a radio idol who enlists in the navy to escape his feminine fans, Claire Dodd, a reporter who pursues him, Abbott and Costello, two sailors whose affairs become entangled in theirs and the Andrews Sisters, three girls who go along with or without reason.

Seven song numbers by Gene De Paul and Don Raye add much sparkle to the exercises.

Production by Alex Gottlieb and direction by Arthur Lubin rate high praise.

Men of the Timberland

Strong Action

A fast moving action picture whose meaty story is designed for fans of this type of entertainment, "Men of the Timberland," another in the Universal series starring Richard Arlen and Andy Devine, is laid in the North Woods logging camps where a criminal is attempting a gigantic lumber theft and denuding, illegally, a forest.

Supporting Arlen and Devine are Linda Hayes, Francis McDonald, Willard Robertson, Paul E. Burns, Gaylord Pendleton, Hardie Albright, Roy Harris, John Ellis, and Jack Rice.

The production mounting given by producer Ben Pivar and director John Rawlins includes much compelling scenery, shots of logging operations and other impressive sights. Stock shots, when used, are skilfully interpolated.

"Dick," a ranger, while investigating irregularities in timber cutting permits, uncovers a gigantic theft plot, and in the process of attempting to find the criminals several rangers are killed. Joining forces with "Andy," the leader of the loggers who is unaware of the criminal operations, the ranger solves the crime.

Boys in Uniform

Columbia herewith presents a modestly budgeted picture dealing with the lives of three boys, from different environments, placed under the strict discipline of an institution preparing them for Annapolis. The plot traces their "regeneration" in their ways of thinking.

Freddie Bartholomew, as the lad steeped in the Navy tradition of his family; Jimmy Lydon, as the youth from a reform school who is embittered about the service because of the injuries his father had received in a battle; and Billy Cook, as the rich youth placed in the school by his father, who wants him disciplined, have the principal roles. Supporting them are Pierre Watkin, Warren Ashe, Douglas Scott, Warren Lloyd, James Butler, Joe Brown, Jr., David Durand, Tommy Bupp, John Dilson and William Blees.

There is good, solid entertainment in the picture, although the story is none too original. Erle C. Kenton directed with a firm hand to make the most of budgetary confines.

Caught in the Draft

(Paramount)

Uncle Sam Recruits a Movie Star

Not since "Shoulder Arms," and maybe not then, have the experiences of a rookie in military service equalled this Bob Hope-Dorothy Lamour comedy in laugh-provoking power. Not a little of this effectiveness, demonstrated beyond question in the film's preview exhibition, is due to the fact that the rookie played by Hope is a movie star who gets into the service on a fluke and in spite of all-out efforts to keep out of it. Complications and incidents more or less akin to those presented in previous service comedies acquire new freshness and point from this circumstance.

Hope portrays a screen hero who, as detailed on page 110 of the Product Digest, on hearing that a conscription law is to be passed determines to marry by way of escaping service. Choosing as bride-for-a-year the daughter of an army officer, played by Miss Lamour, he seeks to withdraw his proposal when discovering he is over draft age as first reported, then to reinstate it when the age limit is reported changed to include him. In an attempt to stage an enlistment attempt at which he will fail, he finds himself enlisted by mistake and under command of the girl's father. From that point on the complications multiply at a pace defying brief narration.

Typical of the variations on the rookie theme accruing from the movie-star angle are the sequence in which newsreel cameras invade the parade ground to obtain shots of the screen idol in khaki and the arrival of the camp mail, all but one letter in the bag being addressed to the star. Outstanding sequences are those in which the rookie drives a tank under misdirection, deserts his post to retrieve a lost uniform and hides out in a hospital where he's mistaken for a patient, blows up in a studio episode when he discovers the gun he carries is loaded. There are many more, all directed with skill and keen understanding of comedy values by David Butler.

As has been reported, "Caught in the Draft" was midway in production and B. G. DeSylva's first of two pictures for Paramount when the producer was elevated to the post of studio production head. Professionals who attended the preview saw in the film much to confirm the wisdom of the promotion.

Previewed to a mixed audience at the Alexander theatre in Glendale, California, which roared in appreciation of the first comedy situation, arriving some 10 seconds after the first flash, and recaptured its breath and composure only momentarily and at long intervals from that point on.—W. R. W.

Million Dollar Baby

(Warner Brothers)

Money Makes the Merriment

A million dollars may be nothing to laugh at, under most circumstances, but it's a source of immense and sustained merriment in this good-natured and steadily pointed comedy. Handled in a manner to give amusement to all and offense to none, the film is suitable for exhibition at any and all places and times.

Produced by David Lewis and directed by Curtis Bernhardt, the picture divides emphasis and responsibility impartially between the principals, all of whom give sterling account of themselves. The pace is swift, the situations fresh and the dialogue smooth.

Priscilla Lane in the title role, Jeffry Lane and Ronald Regan as suitors, May Robson and Helen Westley in character assignments they handle expertly and Lee Patrick as a showgirl, turn in matched performances which yield, severally, abundant diversion.

The story, synopsized on page 109 of the Product Digest, pictures the experiences of a department-store salesgirl presented with a million dollars by a lawyer who declines to reveal the source of the money or to explain the gift. Effects of the gift upon the girl, her sweetheart, her friends, the lawyer, the donor and others are comic in the main, serious in part, interesting and entertaining in whole.

Previewed at the Studio City theatre, near Hollywood, to an audience composed in about equal parts of paying and invited guests, all of whom joined in such a chorus of sustained laughter as had not been heard in the area in months.—W. R. W.

The Voice in the Night

(Columbia)

Undercover in Nazi Germany

Here is another British propaganda production concerned with pictorial revelations of the Hitler regime as it affects the Feuhrer's fatherland folk. Particularly the film is concerned with the story of opposition to the dictatorial rule by means of secretive sabotage work being voiced to the country through the medium of an underground and outlawed radio network known as the "Freedom Radio." The program of action has been publicized before, especially in print, and the campaign may become more saleable on the screen in the light of recent events, particularly the Hess incident.

The picture is patently propagandistic in its viewpoint and purpose and its decidedness vitiates in part the final effectiveness. Such a undirectional approach has caused the elimination of all human interest items. There is not a light moment in the whole tense proceedings and a romance angle is made secondary and shadowy.

The plot follows the conversion of "Dr. Karl Roder" to the opposition forces to the Nazi government, a conversion not shared by his wife, Irena, famous as an actress and high in government circles. "Roder" is joined by a young radio mechanic, "Hans Glaser," whose fiancee has been despoiled by a government Gestapo agent. The pair establishes an underground radio station identified as the "Freedom Radio." A memorable sequence in the film is a mass meeting wherein Hitler, while addressing his audience, is cut off the air and the voice of the underground network is introduced. "Irena" sees her husband's viewpoint when war is declared on Poland and the couple die together when the police machine gun a performance of the undercover radio activity. However, "Roder's" confederates immediately air the announcement that the work of "Freedom Radio" will be continued.

Seen at an afternoon performance at the Globe Theatre in New York where an audience of generous proportions seemed to be in sympathy with the film's theme, being particularly outspoken via hisses and sounds of disapproval in the nature of "Bronx cheers" during the newsreel clip appearance of Herr Hitler. Applause was given to the finis announcement that the campaign of the "Freedom Radio" would be carried on.—Joseph F. Coughlin.

Adventure in Washington

(Columbia)

Reformation in Washington

A tale of Washington's Senate Page Boys is here unfolded by producer Charles Rogers as his second Columbia film, a tale in which the ideals of the Boys, and the influence of a Senator and a radio reporter, put a hard boiled youngster on the right path.

Herbert Marshall and Virginia Bruce, respectively, portray the Senator and the political reporter, and Gene Reynolds enacts the boy who comes to Washington against his will, and gradually absorbs the creed of the Page Boys. Discharged from his post because of eavesdropping and supposedly repeating political information, he betrays defense secrets, but returns voluntarily to clear the name of his sponsor-Senator.

The Page Boys are principally represented by Vaughan Glaser, Charles Smith, Dickie Jones, Tommy Bond, Billy Dawson and Charles Lind, and leading support is given by Samuel S. Hinds, Ralph Morgan and Pierre Watkin. The picture, directed by Alfred E. Green, interlaces the principal story thread with humor derived from the Boys' mischievous activities and with a patriotic closing sequence which brought applause from a preview night audience.

Repent at Leisure

(RKO Radio)

Marital Comedy

The old familiar story of a wealthy heiress marrying the struggling store clerk, forsaking money and social position for happiness, is again brought to the screen this time by RKO. Sometimes trite, director Frank Woodruff has not overstepped the story's limitations in reaching for sprightliness, but, rather, has brought to the screen, in keeping the plot within its bounds, an entertaining and humorous romantic subject.

Kent Taylor and Wendy Barrie are cast as the young couple who marry for convenience—he so that he may retain his position as clerk in a department store and she to free herself from the romantic advances of a titled nobleman. Abetting the stars' characterizations are George Barbier as the department store owner who encourages her to leave the European prince before the wedding, Thurston Hall, a competitor of the girl's father, and Rafael Storm, the prince from whom the girl flees.

Comedy and romance throughout are the main elements upon which the plot is built, while the dramatic sequences in which the marriage is headed for the rocks are of only minor importance to the story. Principally the story is a marital comedy, but unlike many of its predecessors of recent vintage, the situations and dialogue are kept unscathed by suggestion or innuendo.

Highlight of the picture, and one which will be of interest to women as well as men, is the revelation of the hectic life and competition which goes on within the confines of the nation's larger mercantile establishments.

Reviewed at the RKO Albee theatre in Brooklyn where an afternoon audience audibly expressed their enjoyment at the humorous dialogue and situations. Feminine squeals of anticipation rang through the theatre as an infant in the picture crawled toward an open elevator shaft and peered down as the elevator slowly descended upon its neck.—George Spires.

Time Out for Rhythm

Omnibus Musical

Notable chiefly for the number of names it offers for billing purposes, this Irving Starr musical, directed by Sidney Salkow, is at its best when Ann Miller is tap dancing and at its worst when the cast is toiling awkardly with a story about talent agents whose partnership is dissolved for insufficient reason and reestablished for less. It rates higher as an exploitation picture than as an entertainment film.

Exhibitors electing to stress the radio talent presented may capitalize on the presence of Glenn Gray and his orchestra, Rudy Vallee, who sings but once and that once in duet, Six Hits and a Miss and the Brenda and Cobina of the Bob Hope airshow. It is a mentionable circumstance that television figures in the story, but the factor is not developed realistically.

Allen Jenkins heads the comedy division, surprising by doing a bit of dancing, and the three stooges take over at several points for displays of their accustomed roughhousing. These are

Bangup Barry Broco Opus

The newest exhibit of Don "Red" Barry as a man of the saddle and holster is staged in a rousing and suspenseful line of steady action and results in a production that can stand as one of the best of this bronco buster's most successful output. From the opening scenes to the film's finale there is paraded a lineup of fist, firearm and gallop sequences that should please the entertainment heart of any patron with a penchant for robust outdoor productions.

Don is pictured as a member of the Texas Rangers whose current big assignment is to bag a gang of border gun runners. When the brother of his sweetheart and a novice ranger himself is killed because he knew too much of the mob's illicit activity, Barry is suspected of the job. "Red" is run out of the rangers and allies himself with the smugglers in order to gather evidence on the gang leaders. This objective is accomplished by Barry soon enough but not without evident obstacles, such as matching his wits and aim against the crooked clique.

Lynn Merrick is picturesque as the girl element and others figuring in the border incidents are William Haade, James Gillette, Dick Wessel, Tom Chatterton and Robert Strange. George Sherman in the dual position of associate producer and director demonstrates decidedly his talent for staging such western sagas. Photography splendily compliments in clear focus shots the fast pace of the film.

The Big Boss

Political Melodrama

Columbia, in presenting "The Big Boss," brings to the screen another of the film exposes of alleged crookedness in a state's legislature. Utilizing a sub-plot of two brothers, separated in early life, who grow up in conflicting environments, the production, by Wallace MacDonald, is swift-paced.

Otto Kruger, as the crooked politician, heads a competent cast including Gloria Dickson as the girl reporter aiding John Litel, the Governor, in uncovering and exposing the state's powerful but crooked political machine. The presentation is novel and entertaining.

As the picture opens Litel is seen as the younger of two brothers while Kruger is the older and more wayward of the two. Years pass, Kruger, following a run-in with the law, changes his name to "Maloney" and becomes the political boss. "Senator Dugan" (Litel) not knowing "Maloney" is a blood relation, accepts his help in a race for the governorship. When "Maloney" tries to establish the Governor's political policies he also runs afoul of the law by murdering one of his own henchmen. Later to keep the Governor from resigning, after he has found out they are brothers, "Maloney" gives himself up and keeps secret the relationship.

Miss Dickson as the girl reporter supplies the romantic subplot, while Don Beddoe, practically a Columbia trademark, is also seen in a reportorial role and offers the humorous element to the picture as well as abetting the characterizations of the featured players.

The Bride Wore Crutches

(Twentieth Century-Fox)

Newspaper Melodrama

Since the days when "Five Star Final" and "The Front Page" glamorized the newspaper business with their hard-drinking, rough-and-tumble reporter tracking down news, motion picture companies have time and again attempted to bring to the screen similar comedy and romantic melodramas. Few have attained the standards set by the originals.

Twentieth Century-Fox, in bringing to the screen another of the plentiful newspaper melodramas that crop up each season, has incorporated all the basic elements of the originals in "The Bride Wore Crutches," but the picture, nevertheless, falls short of the mark established by its more elaborate predecessors.

Directed by Shepard Traube, the story concerns a cub reporter, hired by the publisher's wife, who is fired by the managing editor for incompetence. Angered, he sets out on his own to track down bank bandits and prove his worth. With more luck than brains he uncovers their hideout, wins their confidence and later captures them singlehanded. In apprehending the criminals he shoots in the leg his female co-worker, whom he later marries. The bride wore crutches at the wedding.

Lynne Roberts and Ted North are cast as two reporters, she trying to save his job and he trying to win it back after he has been fired. Edgar Kennedy is seen as the police captain, while Robert Armstrong and Lionel Stander are the gang leaders. Others in the cast include Richard Lane as the hard-boiled managing editor, and Grant Mitchell as the hen-pecker newspaper publisher.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Still Holding

Although the number of films started and completed dropped from the previous week, Hollywood's production boom rode merrily on this week, with 50 pictures before the cameras, the greatest number to be shooting simultaneously in one week during the current season.

Eight pictures were finished and 12 started, respectively five and three less than last week, while the large number shooting counted four more and the number preparing 18 more than during the previous week. Being edited were 83.

Two short subjects were completed, although none were started.

The first full-length all-Chinese motion picture to be produced in the United States by a Chinese company, has been completed in San Francisco by the recently-formed Golden Gate Film Company. The firm is made up of Chinese businessmen, and the first film, "Golden Gate Girl," has San Francisco's Chinatown as the locale. The picture has an all-Chinese cast and stars Esther Eng. Moon Quan wrote and directed the film, which was premiered at the new Grand View theatre in Chinatown of that city.

Samuel Goldwyn has engaged Howard Hawks to direct Gary Cooper in the picture tentatively titled, "The Professor and the Burlesque Queen." Mr. Hawks will report to the Goldwyn studio in Hollywood June 1st to begin preparation. The director last worked for the producer in 1935 when he directed "Barbary Coast."

Simone Simon, after finishing her role in "The Devil and Daniel Webster,'" a William Dieterle production to be released by RKO, will resume her personal appearance engagements. She will first appear in Pittsburgh and later Philadelphia.

The Twentieth Century-Fox Studio Club's annual dinner and dance will be held June 15th at the Florentine Gardens in Hollywood.

SHORTS IN MGM SPURT

Taking its cue from the current production boom, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer short subjects department will release the record number of twelve films in June, the department has announced.

Included are two Pete Smith "Specialties", two Carey Wilson "Miniatures", an Our Gang comedy, two of the John Nesbitt "Passing Parade" subjects, two Crime Does Not Pay two-reelers, two cartoons and a Fitz-Patrick Traveltalk.

The studio is also starting an extended series of cartoons based on animals—one to feature the "Tom Cat" and "Jerry Mouse" seen in "Puss Gets the Boot" and another starring a Bear and a Burro, for which appropriate first names are now being sought. The latter series will be built around life in the Army, with the first, "Rookie Bear", now ready for release.

Roach Resumes

With start of shooting June 7th on "Niagara Falls," first of five "Streamlined Features" to be produced between then and year's end, Hal Roach will have materialized an idea cherished steadily and discussed with intimates throughout the years since double-billing became a virtually national custom. Now, as at its inception, the idea is to furnish exhibitors with a supply of pictures produced on feature scale and offering feature-type entertainment but ranging from 45 to 60 minutes in running-time. It is the Roach opinion, checked and rechecked with representatives of Exhibition and Distribution, that in their utility with respect to exhibitors' programming problems these pictures will be found to satisfy a long-felt, if not always analyzed, requirement.

Streamlining his studio setup for production of "Streamlined Features," the producer whose one- and two-reelers made box office history in the industry's youth has eight writers at work on the productions scheduled and three directors on staff. Streamlining his distribution procedure, he has arranged for the pictures to be leased on a flat rental basis in contrast to the established United Artists policy under which his "Topper" and other pictures have been sold.

"Niagara Falls," first of the pictures in the new pattern, is to be a comedy, as is "Thanks a Million," the second. His third, "All American Girl," will be a musical, the fourth, "Miss Polly," will star Patsy Kelly and ZaSu Pitts in the type of story their talents suggest, and the fifth, "Fiesta," will be a musical in Technicolor.

Points on which Roach predicates his confidence in the project include a conviction that a picture running 45 minutes, for instance, can be produced on a basis of quality surpassing that commonly achieved in a "B" picture running normal feature length, yet cost no more, possibly less, thus improving the tone of the exhibitor's total program while shortening its total running-time in the interests of faster audience turnover.

By shortening the running-time of the total program, it is reasoned, showmen now compelled to screen their "A" picture earlier than is commensurate with patrons' arrival habits, in order to present it a second time before midnight, will be enabled to time their main feature more satisfactorily for both screenings.

GENE LOCKHART has been signed by Edward Small Productions for a role in "International Lady."

BRENDA MARSHALL has received the feminine starring role in "The Smiling Ghost" at Warners.

JACK HOLT and TIM HOLT will appear together in RKO's "The Marines Are Ready."

RONALD REAGAN has had his contract extended by Warners.

U.S. SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS RIGHT OF STATES TO OUTLAW ASCAP FEES

Ruling Upholds State Laws Forbidding Music Royalty Payments to Organization; Court Disapproves Injunctions

The United States Supreme Court, at noon, Monday, in the Capital, upheld states' rights to outlaw the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, prohibiting ASCAP from levying, as a combination, any charges, fees or royalties upon broadcasters or theatre owners in the states of Florida and Nebraska, where test cases were made of state anti-ASCAP laws.

There are several other states where either similar legislation has been proposed or has been contemplated pending disposition of the two test actions.

The Supreme Court decided unanimously in both actions, which were similar and which tested laws of similar nature.

In some states, as now proposed in Wisconsin, for example, state measures require music brokers—such as ASCAP—to pay 25 per cent of all receipts it collects for the playing of copyrighted music in the state. Illinois and others have anti-ASCAP bills pending. South Carolina now expects to collect as much as $300,000 a year on new taxes on ASCAP, through a bill ratified last week. This and other states will require ASCAP to file titles of each separate song or music number of its membership, a voluminous record, and to keep that record up to date. California exhibitors are reported to be preparing to sue ASCAP to remove its royalty charges.

The Washington Decision

Holding that the right of a state to outlaw monopoly is not restricted by the Federal copyright laws, the Supreme Court on May 26 ordered the dismissal of injunction suits brought by ASCAP against the Florida and Nebraska "anti-ASCAP" laws, ruling that even a "threat" of enforcement is not adequate grounds for such a proceeding.

At the same time, the court rebuked the two District Courts which had granted injunctions, warning that "Federal injunctions against state criminal statutes, either in their entirety or with respect to their separate and distinct prohibitions, are not to be granted as a matter of course, even if such statutes are unconstitutional."

The opinions of the court, delivered by Associate Justice Hugo L. Black, discussed the Florida situation in detail, disposing of the Nebraska case with a brief comment as to how the two paralleled each other.

In both instances, ASCAP was successful in securing an injunction against enforcement of a state law aimed primarily at price-fixing combinations operating in the field of public performance of copyright music, on the ground that enforcement of the act had been threatened. In both cases, the court below found that threats had been made, that some of the sections of the act were invalid and that the invalidity of those sections permeated the whole.

And in both cases, the courts held, "the court below proceeded on a mistaken premise as to the role a Federal equity court should play in enjoining state criminal statutes."

The lower courts failed to note that the acts contained a provision that in the event any part should be found invalid the remainder should stand alone, Justice Black pointed out. Accordingly, as those sections of the act which aimed at unlawful combinations are complete in themselves and capable of standing alone, the ultimate determinative question is whether the states have the power to outlaw activities within the state of price-fixing combinations composed of copyright owners.

The high court dismissed the charge that enforcement had been "threatened," except that the state attorneys general had announced they would perform all duties imposed upon them by the laws. "A general statement that an officer stands ready to perform his duty falls far short of such a threat as would warrant the intervention of equity," the opinion commented.

Furthermore, it was pointed out, the Florida supreme court has not yet passed upon the statute and so has given no clue as to how the law will be interpreted. "Passing upon the possible significance of the manifold provisions of a broad statute in advance of efforts to apply the separate provisions is analogous to rendering an advisory opinion upon a statute or a declaratory judgment upon a hypothetical case," Justice Black said.

"Cases under the separate sections and paragraphs of the act can be tried as they arise—preferably in the state courts," he held. "Any Federal questions that are properly presented can then be brought here."

State Rights Defined

Reverting to the right of the states to enact such legislation, the court held that "unless constitutionally valid Federal legislation has granted to individual copyright owners the right to combine, the state's power validly to prohibit the proscribed combinations cannot be held non-existent merely because such individuals can preserve their property rights better in combination than they can as individuals.

"We find nothing in the copyright laws which purports to grant to copyright owners the privilege of combining in violation of otherwise valid state or Federal laws," Justice Black said. "We have, in fact, determined to the contrary with relation to other copyright privileges. But complainants urge that there is a distinction between our previous holdings and the question here. This contention is based on the idea that Congress has granted the copyright privilege with relation to public performances of music, and that with reference to the protection of this particular privilege, combination is essential. We are therefore asked to conclude from the asserted necessities of their situation that Congress intended to grant this extraordinary privilege of combination. This we cannot do. We are pointed to nothing either in the language of the copyright laws or in the history of their enactment to indicate any congressional purpose to deprive the states, either in whole or in part, of their long-recognized powers to regulate combinations in restraint of trade."

Since ASCAP has been shown to be an association within the meaning of the state law, he concluded "it is enough for us to say in this case that the phase of Florida's law prohibiting activities of those unlawful combinations described in Section 1 of the 1937 act does not contravene the copyright laws of the Federal Constitution; that particular attacks upon other specified provisions of the statutes involved are not appropriate for determination in this proceeding; that the court below erred in granting the injunction; and that the bill should have been dismissed. All other questions remain open for consideration and disposition in appropriate proceedings."

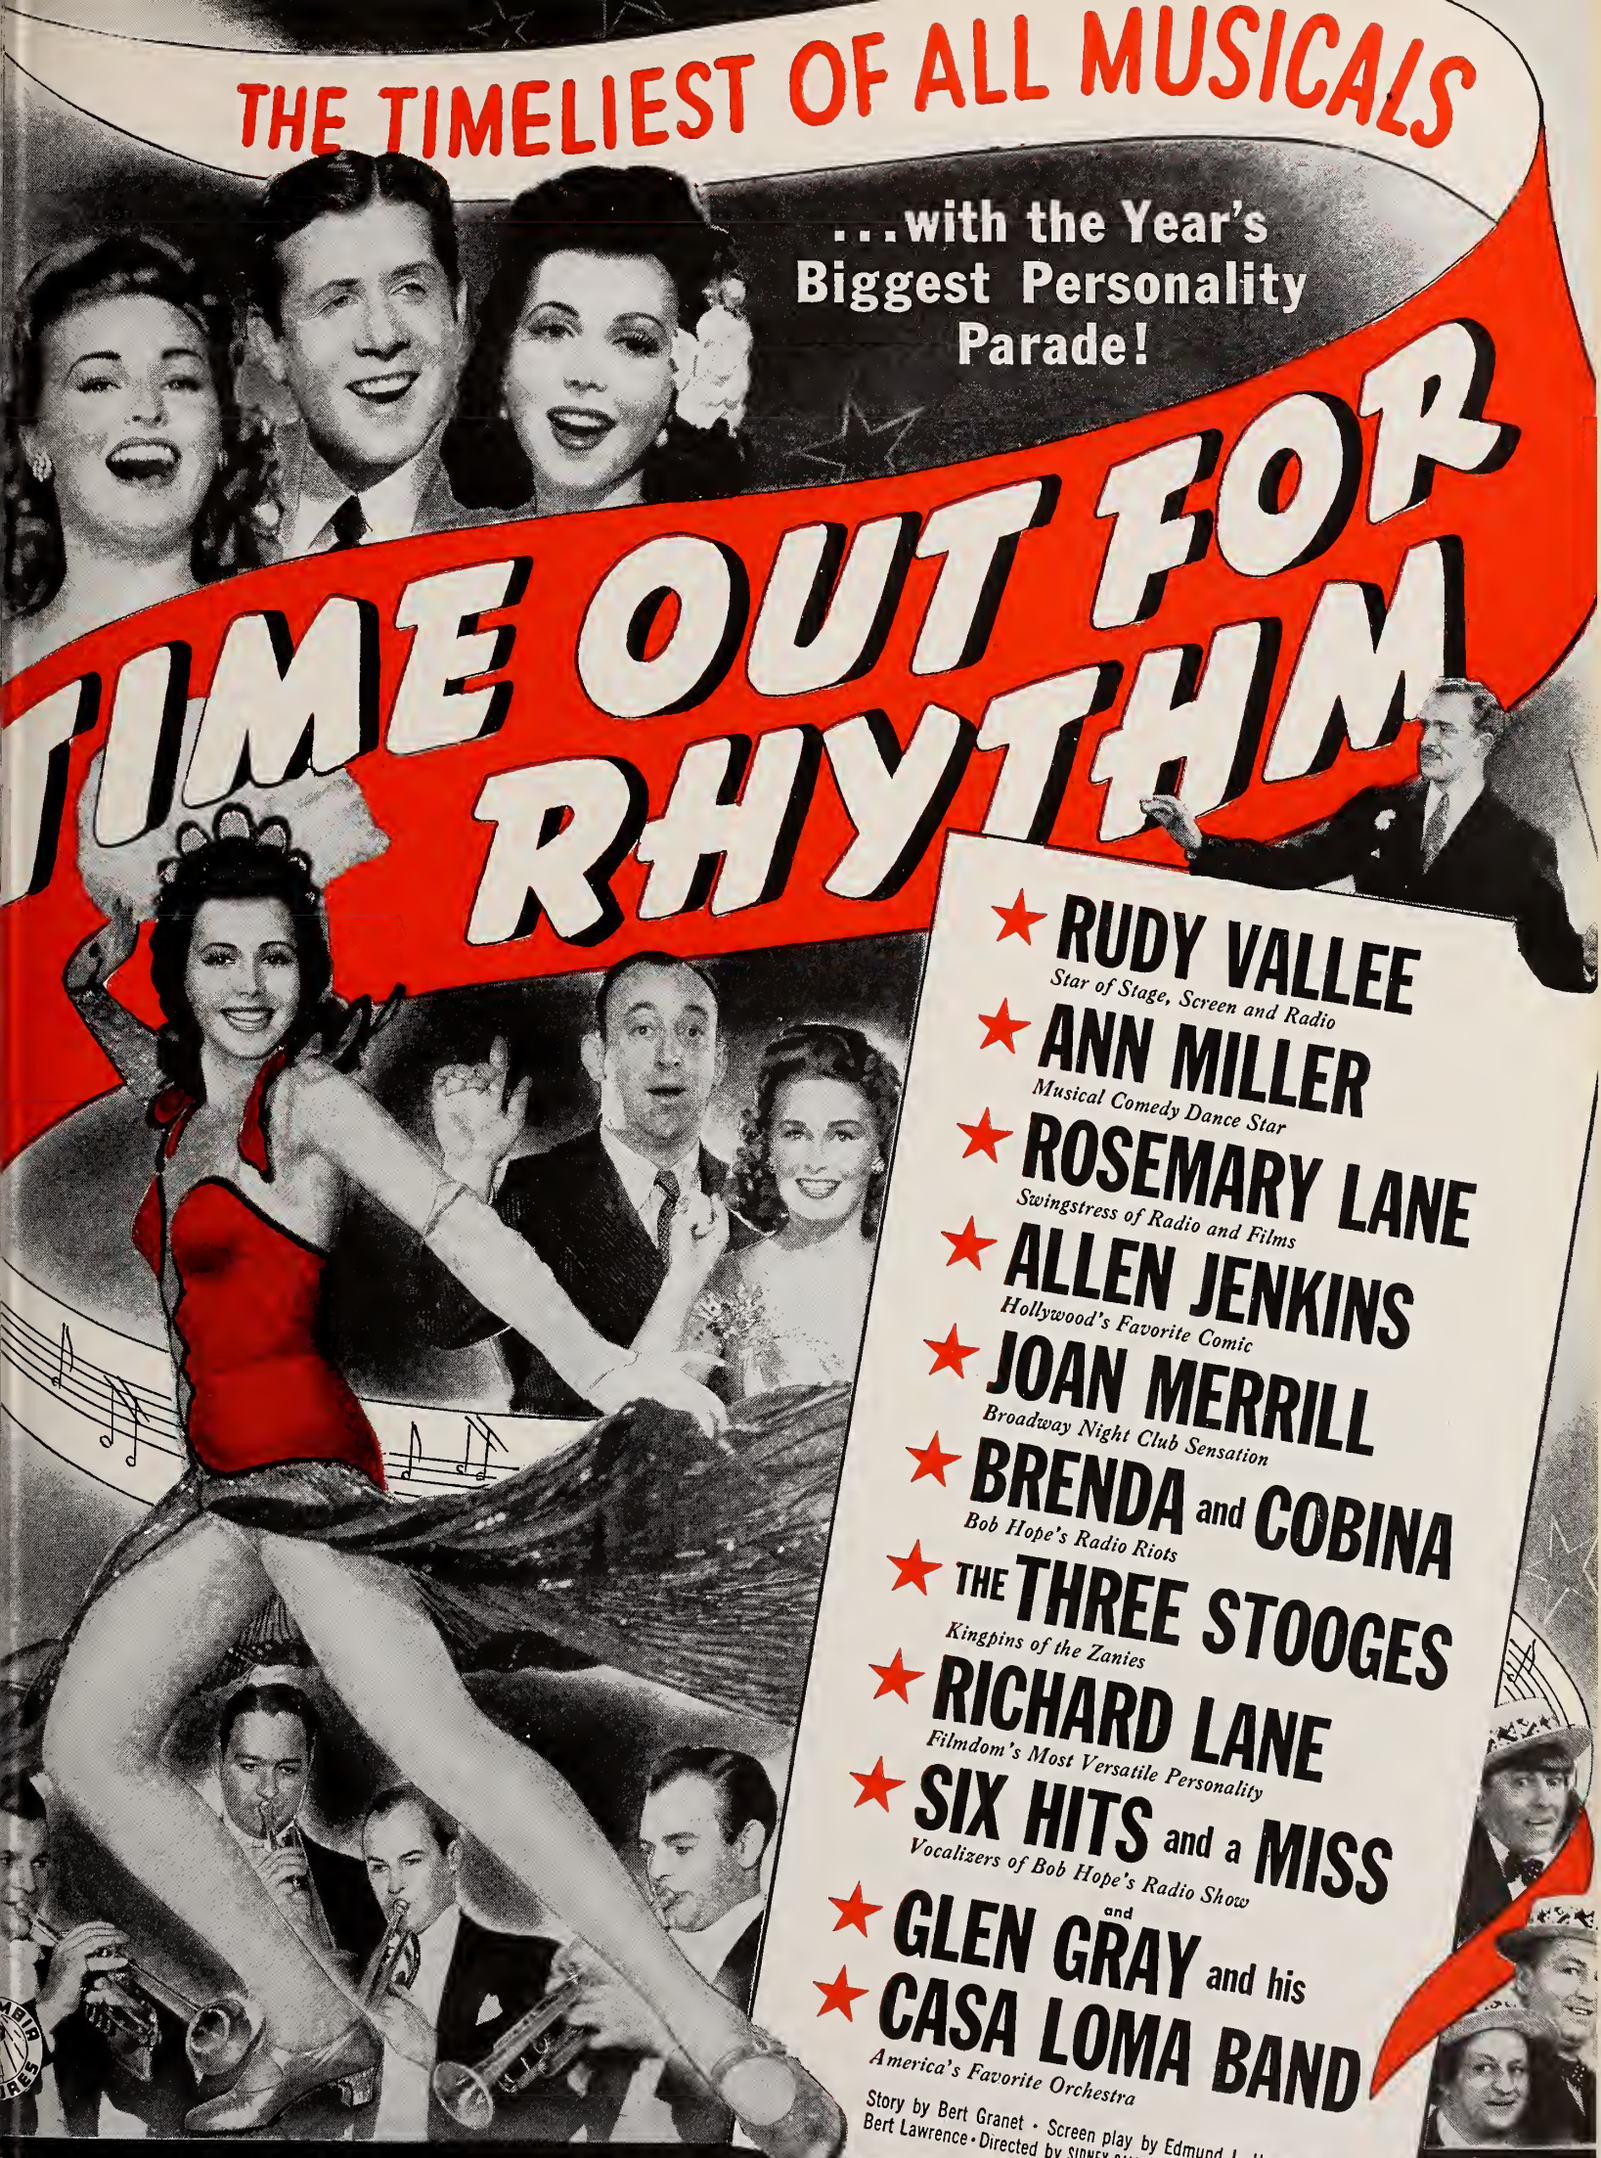
While there were no dissents from the opinion, Associate Justice Murphy took no part in the consideration or decision of the cases, because of his connection with ASCAP litigation while serving as Attorney General.

ASCAP-CBS Deal Still On

Discussions held during the past week between ASCAP and NBC and CBS, on new licensing agreements to return ASCAP music to the air, are being continued by the three parties in the historic music-control fight. The talks primarily concerned permissible deductions which the networks will be allowed from gross income, in order to arrive at the net income to be paid to ASCAP. It is indicated that neither ASCAP, NBC or CBS wish to drag out negotiations over the week-end and thus overlap the effective date of ASCAP's Federal consent decree, which is Monday, June 2nd. New complications may arise if that occurs, to hamper discussions once the decree becomes effective.

Negotiations thus far, which were resumed after Mutual signed a contract with ASCAP, center on the fact that NBC and CBS are determined to get better terms from the society than those given Mutual. In spite of ASCAP's stand that the terms of the Mutual contract represent the best it can offer, both the networks are working for a reducion.

Mutual's contract calls for three per cent on net proceeds for the first four years of the contract, and three and one-half per cent thereafter, until December 31, 1949, the expiration date.



After a meeting with NBC and CBS officials last week, E. C. Mills, chairman of ASCAP's administrative committee, and John G. Paine, general chairman, said they believed the Society was progressing towards a settlement with the networks.

ASCAP, however, is rejecting any suggestion to submit the proposed terms to arbitration and is taking the position that the networks must make the next move to renew discussions. If no voluntary action is taken by the broadcasting companies, it is indicated that the Department of Justice may intervene.

Next Monday, June 2nd, a special meeting of the Society's membership will be held at the Hotel Astor, at which time a vote will be taken to approve the Society's new by-laws. For the first time in ASCAP history, according to provision made by the Federal consent decree, the membership will elect a new slate of directors. If the by-laws are approved, twelve of 25 directors will be elected. Terms of six directors will expire annually thereafter; three of writer members and three publisher members, so that within a year the membership will have elected twenty-four of the twenty-five directors.

END FIRE HAZARDS, THEATRES WARNED

R. T. Spencer, acting chief of the Division of Factory and Building Inspection, in a letter to the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, warns that conditions in many theatres are not only in conflict with state laws but are extremely hazardous to patrons. He adds that all field inspectors of the division have been ordered to prosecute wherever necessary.

Illinois, Wisconsin, Florida Legislators Study New Bills

A half dozen bills are pending in the Illinois legisture which would seriously affect the industry in Illinois. All are in the lower chamber of the assembly, in various committees. The most far reaching is a bill to create a censorship board, the "Illinois Motion Picture License Commission," composed of three members appointed by the governor, and empowered to refuse a license for a picture which tends to incite crime or corrupt morals. Fees for previewing would be $3 for each 1,000 feet or fraction thereof and $2 for each additional copy licensed.

Another bill important to exhibitors proposes a state wages and hours law similar to the federal law regulating wages and hours of interstate workers, was killed Wednesday in the state legislature. The bill would have applied to theatres. The legislature already has killed other bills which proposed wages and hours control.

The bill causing most concern to exhibitors is a measure to levy a ten per cent tax on admissions. A large lobby is being organized to fight this bill.

Another bill is aimed at prohibition of double features. It would limit continuous showings to 135 minutes unless there is a 15-minute intermission every hour. A bill of this nature was approved by the legislature two years ago but was vetoed by the governor. A House committee on Tuesday recommended passage.

Two other bills applying to the industry would ban Ascap from the state and would license the operation of automatic vending machines.

Committee hearings are scheduled to be held this week on the amusement tax and the double feature bill.

Wisconsin "Jackrabbit" Bill

What is believed to be the first ordinance requiring a license for "jackrabbit" operators in Wisconsin has been enacted by the city council at Stevens Point. The new ordinance, repealing one adopted in 1917, provides for a fee of $1 per day for outdoor movies. It also assesses a license fee of $100 a year for theatres with more than 500 seats and 20 cents per seat for all houses under 500, while outdoor shows other than movies must pay a daily $10 fee.

Where halls are used for movies or entertainment features, a license fee of 20 cents per seat is charged and if benches are used, each 18 inches of space provided for seating will constitute a seat. No such license will be issued for less than $50. Such halls will also be subject to certain safety requirements in building and equipment, before a license is granted.

Another development in the outdoor movie field in Wisconsin is the granting of a temporary injunction to R. P. Williams, operator of the Sun at Brodhead, restraining Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Smith, former operators of the Sun, from showing outdoor movies in Bluff View park near Brodhead.

Mr. Willams, who seeks $1,000 damages for alleged loss of business resulting from the Smith showings, charges that when he purchased the Sun from Mr. Smith, it was agreed that Mr. Smith would not engage in the theatre business within a 15-mile radious of Brodhead. Mr. Williams acquired the Sun in 1938.

The Florida State Legislature, now in the final round of its 1941 session, has had a number of bills designed to "nick" a few pennies from purchasers of movie tickets, but so far all have failed to get past committee. This week a new idea appeared,—to collect for the state, the two "odd cents" left over after the federal tax had been paid.

The idea, as explained by the sponsor, seems to have developed from the "odd cents" breaks on racing bets. In figuring out the winnings on pari-mutual betting, if it comes out in "odd cents" the track has kept these "breaks" and paid off in even amounts. According to reports, these breaks add to over $200,000 a year.

The Indiana Supreme Court has ruled that new state fire marshal statutes do not repeal a city's power to regulate theatres, affirming a county court's decision against the Hollywood Theatre Corporation of Indianapolis.

The theatre filed an action for a declaratory judgment that the city ordinances for building code provisions and inspections were repealed in powers given to the state fire marshal. The trial court found that a few ordinances were covered by state regulations and repealed thereby, but that non-covered ordinances continue in force.

Opinion of the court said, in part:

"It is well established that the motion picture industry is subject to the police power in the interest of public morals, health and safety and that the buildings and the shows given therein may be regulated and the operators thereof required to pay license fees to defray the cost of inspection and such regulation.

"Strength of walls, floors and roof, placing of exits; plumbing, lighting and other details included in the city's code have to do with the safety other than from fire hazard.

Nashville Hearing Given Priority in Anti-Trust Suits

The decision long awaited in the Government's Schine circuit-"Little Three" anti-trust suit in the Buffalo Federal Court on whether the suit against them would be tried before that against the Crescent circuit and majors in the Nashville Federal Court—was resolved last week when Federal Judge John Knight, sitting in the Buffalo case, was advised by the Department of Justice attorneys that the Crescent case would go to trial first.

This confirmed warnings of the judge for several weeks that the calendar in his court would not permit the Schine case to come to trial before September.

The Nashville case is set for July 7th. However, observers say it will not be ready by then, and there will be postponement. In addition, it is possible the Department will drop the "Little Three," Universal, United Artists, and Columbia, from its defendants' list. This was suggested recently by Seymour Simon, assistant U. S. Attorney General, at a hearing before Judge Knight. The decision here, will come after study of the replies of those defendants, to Government interrogatories in the Buffalo and Nashville suits, and in the third of the "field" suits, that at Oklahoma City against the majors and the Griffith circuit. The defense answers in the Nashville case are due this week; they have already been submitted, in Buffalo.

If those three defendants are eliminated, the Government will then press the case against them in the New York Federal Court, a case which is residuary of the "key" trust case which resulted last year in the adoption of a consent decree by five of the majors with theatre affiliates.

Judge Knight on Monday reserved decision on a Schine motion for a bill of particulars and more details in the Government's amended complaint in the case against the circuit.

Common Pleas Court Judge Robert P. Duncan, of Columbus, Ohio, has enjoined the Olentagy Theatre, that city, from showing "Western Union," prior to June 1st, Sunday. The picture had been advertised for that house last Wednesday and Thursday, May 21st and 22nd. The Judge's ruling was in response to a suit filed by the Hudson Amusement Company, operators of the Hudson, a neighborhood theatre, to which the Olentagy was opposition. The suit named Twentieth Century-Fox, and charged violation of contract in selling away from the Hudson. The Hudson has 52 days' clearance over downtown first run theatres; the Olentagy, 67 days.

CANADA SHUTS DOWN ON ALL NEW THEATRE BUILDING FOR DURATION

Priorities Officer Refuses All Licenses for Construction of New Houses; Repairs Allowed; 20% Tax Regulations Issued

"We are not issuing theatre licenses," declared R. C. Berkinshaw, of Toronto, Priorities Officer of the Canadian Government, with respect to applications for permits for the construction of a new theatre in the Toronto district and several in Western Canada. "It is part of our new policy that theatre facilities are not be extended unless the applicant can show that his building is about half erected when he comes to us."

This statement referred to the order-in-council of the Government which prohibits the construction of buildings, which are not considered essential, for the remainder of the war, this being a move to conserve steel, building materials, labor and foreign exchange and to postpone as much work as possible until the post-war period when there may be an unemployment problem. According to data supplied by Berkinshaw, buildings and machinery for primary industries, such as steel plants and munition factories, and for farming, logging, mining and fishing as well as private dwellings have been exempted from the license requirement. It has been officially ruled that theatres do not come within the classification of necessity for the war. Extensive additions or remodelling projects in the case of theatres have also been barred.

Repairs Allowed

Permits will not be necessary, however, for repairs or improvements not exceeding $2,500 in cost for materials and labor, nor for installation of theatre equipment of which the installed cost does not exceed $5,000, it was said. A self-contained new building which will not cost more than $10,000 can also be erected without a license. The restriction applies alike to individual owners, builders, partnerships, corporations and associations.

As yet, no ruling has been made by Mr. Berkinshaw regarding a license for the replacement or reconstruction of a business structure, including a theatre, which has been extensively damaged by fire, explosion or act of nature, largely because this situation has not arisen. It is generally believed, however, that the Government will not prevent the rebuilding of a theatre which has been destroyed by mishap and thus stop the owners or proprietors from the resumption of business or a source of livelihood.

There also is nothing in the regulations, as announced, which would prevent the proper maintenance of theatre equipment in the interests of public safety nor in the replacement of furnishings which include seats, carpets, lighting fixtures or comfort facilities.

On the ground that a substantial amount of work had already been done on a new theatre under construction in Kitchener, Ont., for which a license was refused by the priorities branch of the Government, a petition and affidavit was forwarded by Bruce S. McLeod, one of the London, Ont., group which is building the theatre, and Mr. McLeod has now been notified that a license will be granted. The new theatre will seat 700, will have a smoking loge with accommodations for 200, and will cost approximately $65,000.

THEATRE MARKS 25TH ANNIVERSARY

The 25th anniversary of the Strand theatre in Altoona, Pa., owned and operated by Jacob and I. Silverman, was celebrated this week with Warners' "Million Dollar Baby" the attraction. The Strand, a 1,500-seat house, was said to be the first theatre in that section of the country to install Western Electric sound, paying $40,000 for the equipment and starting its new policy with "The Jazz Singer", a Warner release.

Silverman Brothers, in the motion picture business since 1905 when they opened a nickelodeon in Altoona, later expanded into Ohio as well as Pennsylvania, but have now sold all their holdings except the Strand, Logan and Blair theatres in that city. Bill Brumberg of Warners' central field exploitation division helped exploit the anniversary.

The opinion among Toronto theatre proprietors is that giveaways will be more of a necessity in subsequent-run situations than ever before under the Federal 20 per cent amusement tax conditions which resulted in an immediate proportional boost in admission prices all along the line.

"The public will be paying more for moving picture entertainment and patrons will not take into consideration that the theatres will not be getting any of the benefit of higher prices; consequently, they will expect more for their money. This can only be provided in the extra inducements of premiums," was the answer.

Any suggestion that the situation was opportune for a general agreement to abolish giveaways has been frowned away. It is considered that it would be suicidal to give the patron less than they have been accustomed to get at a time when admissions are being raised by reason of taxation. "By necessity, outside of the control of exhibitors, film entertainment is getting into the expensive class and you can't give less for the money," was one reply.

Finance Minister Ilsley has ruled that the exhibitor does not have to collect the tax from the purchasers of low-priced tickets or add the amount of the tax to any admission fee. The theatre could place the entire tax on one price of the admission scale if desired.

All theatres have adopted the policy, however, of spreading the Federal tax over the whole admission scale, even including juvenile tickets of 10 cents or 15 cents which, previously, had always been taxfree in Ontario except for a few months some five years ago when the Provincial Government jacked up the local amusement tax and removed exemptions, only to abolish the tax completely as a nuisance in 1937.

Meanwhile, Minister Ilsley has obtained House of Commons approval of an extension of the Dominion 20 per cent tax on film theatre receipts to other forms of amusements, with a provision for exemptions at the discretion of the Minister of National Revenue.

The extension answers one of the protests of Canadian exhibitors to the new tax, which went into effect Monday, May 19th. Theatre men had protested against the restriction of the levy to film houses only.

In all Canadian Provinces except one, the receipts of moving picture theatres during 1940 were in excess of boxoffice revenue during 1939, according to the preliminary report of the theatre business in the Dominion during the past calendar year. The sole exception was Alberta, the Prairie Province, which has long suffered from drought and wheat market congestion, where film theatre receipts in 1940 totaled $2,000,703, compared with $2,013,514 in 1939. Even in Alberta, however, the attendance for the past year was 8,122,186, against 7,775,491, indicating that exhibitors out there had lowered their admission scales to meet economic conditions. Substantial patronage increase suggests, however, that the time is ripe for better admission prices.

Ontario with its war industries and nominal unemployment stood out as the banner Province for the exhibitors accounting for $17,330,989 out of the country's grand total of $37,600,000 for theatre revenue in 1940. Ontario's showing was approximately 45 per cent of the total receipts. Theatre patrons in Ontario totaled 66,703,261, while the total paid admissions for the Dominion were 150,811,667. Ontario's theatre receipts in 1939 totalled $15,247,941 and the paid admissions were 59,686,373.

Receipts in other Provinces were: Quebec, $7,473,364; British Columbia, $3,962,446; Manitoba, $2,314,161; Nova Scotia, $1,828,185; Saskatchewan, $1,577,291; Alberta $2,000,703; New Brunswick, $987,487, and Prince Edward Island, $114,590.

Pascal Uncertain on Canadian Production

In Montreal this week, Gabriel Pascal declined to discuss his announced production plans for Canada, or to reveal the identity of his financial aides in the contemplated project, except to say that he liked Montreal's Latin atmosphere, being partly Latin himself. Instead of establishing at Toronto, as United Artists first announced in his behalf, Mr. Pascal indicates that he will probably plan to establish in Montreal, because he feels facilities are better there.

It was expected that Mr. Pascal and members of his party, including Harry D. Buckley, vice-president of United Artists; Martin Paggi, Mr. Pascal's sound technician; Charles Ross, lighting expert, and Arthur Gottlieb and Jack Goetz of the Du-Art Film Laboratories, would return to New York before this week-end.

Early this week reports from Montreal said that Mr. Pascal was considering the production of a film for the British Government, with some financial support from the British Ministry of Information.

MGM To Handle Own Canadian Film Sales

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will take over the distribution of its own films in Canada on June 1st under the same management, with Henry L. Nathanson, general manager of Regal Films, Ltd., continuing in charge, it was reported in Toronto last week.

It is expected that the corporate structure of Regal Films will be revised in line with the withdrawal of N. L. Nathanson as president of Famous Players Canadian, controlled by Paramount.

Paramount, under the new setup, will no longer be interested in Mr. Nathanson's half of Regal films.

Henry L. Nathanson has been in New York concluding arrangements for a new deal with MGM.

TEEN-AGES HIT GANG FILMS, 'SAP' ROMANCES

Camp Fire Girls Register Film Preferences; Family Type Series Prove Popular

A three-month survey, the first of its kind, indicating movie, magazine and radio preferences of the nation's high-school-age public, has just been completed by the Camp Fire Girls, Inc., in a thirteen-state poll which determined the entertainment tastes of 16,000 boys and girls.

Criticism of the gangster and "sappily-romantic" type of movie was lodged generally, and the popular cry was for more "realistic movies," based on every-day problems of the average citizen. In the small town areas, popular acclaim went to the Hardy, Jones and Henry Aldrich pictures. In the northwest, and particularly in northern Michigan, "Northwest Mounted Police" won top honors over "GWTW."

Unlike most surveys of public opinion, the Camp Fire Girls' poll was not keyed to distribution of standardized questionnaires, for the reason that individual initiative in reporting and presenting results was encouraged, rather than the scientific, statistical break-down of questions and answers.

"GWTW" Leads

The highlights of the poll contained the usual top honors in movie, magazine and radio entertainment. "Gone With the Wind" led the movie choice, with "Rebecca" and "Northwest Mounted Police" following. First in the magazine field were Life and Readers' Digest, with movie fan magazines in general ranking third. Top ranking radio entertainment were the Lux Radio Theatre, Bob Hope, Henry Aldrich and Jack Benny.

Investigation of the individual reports sent in by girls was described as revealing "an unusual interest and intelligent, discriminating entertainment tastes of the teen-age public."

Movie magazines came in for a good deal of razzing from many of the youngsters, who declaimed exaggerated "success stories" and wanted more truthful biographical news about their stars. Most of the boys and girls polled said they collected pictures of their favorite stars.

High-pressure salesmanship in exploiting pictures was decried, for as one youngster said: "All the movies can't be colossal!" Less Grade B pictures, more musical romances and continuance of duals were other features of the poll.

Mention of theatre owners and managers who cooperated in the survey was legion. In many instances, theatre men arranged for special previews for the survey committees, and in some cases thorough tours of the theatres were instituted, showing the girls the projection rooms, back-stage, and dressing-rooms in those houses where variety bills held sway.

In Indianapolis, the girls interviewed theatre managers for their action to block-booking and learned that in most cases it was favored.

In Spokane, Washington, a more thorough survey of the city was made to include business men, housewives and older boys and girls, which revealed that business men wanted more escapist movies over the week-end; that housewives preferred "down-to-earth" pictures; and that older boys and girls preferred movies that would "make them forget their problems."

Only one reference was made to the newsreels, and that came from a young girl in Ames, Iowa, who said: "Newsreels deal mainly with war, defense preparations, conventions, governmental and civic affairs and sports. Little space is given to peace movements, scientific discoveries or inventions, health care or vocational guidance."

Frequent references were made to "war propaganda" in films like "Comrade X," "The Great Dictator," "Foreign Correspondent" and others, and in those instances it was noted that the boys and girls found "propaganda" got in the way of story and plot development.

Judges of the contest included: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who was chairman of the committee; Robert Montgomery, Helen Hayes and Everett Weeks, editor of Atlantic Monthly.

Most of the children polled attend the movies on an average of once a week, and of the thousands surveyed only one girl made reference to box office prices, which, she recommended, "should be reduced." This would indicate that "money for the movies" is no problem to a large section of the teen-age public.

Educators To Study Ad Films' Value

The New England Educational Film Association is sponsoring panels of school and college teachers throughout New England to preview commercially produced advertising films and to pass upon their educational content and value. Establishment of these panels is already under way.

Films of this type are now widely used in education work, according to the association, because they are distributed free of charge. At present there are no adequate standards of acceptance on the grounds of advertising motives and accuracy.

Approximately 150 teachers with experience in audio-visual education gathered at New Hampshire's Dartmouth College last week, to organize the previewing panels and to decide upon specific criteria for approving commercially-sponsored films. The program was under the direction of R. Haven Falconer, director of Dartmouth College films and chairman of the association.

In addition to their previewing function, the panels will make suggestions to producers and advertisers on proposed films, in an effort to promote a more intelligent use of films as an educational and teaching aid. A number of industries have been consulted about the move. Approved films will carry the stamp of approval of the association and a small fee will be charged for the previewing service.

Educational Film Association was organized last year to promote the use of motion pictures in school and college education. It represents pooling of the film resources of Boston University, Dartmouth College, Harvard University, University of Maine, University of New Hampshire, the CCC of the First Corps Area and the Massachusetts Department of Education.

School Uses Films to Aid Discipline

Further proof that the motion picture can contribute effectively in the educational and recreational activities of school children, was demonstrated at the White Plains High School, it was reported by students who convened at the 4-Star Clubs meeting held on Saturday, May 24th, at the New York University School of Education.

The White Plains school authorities were faced with an over-crowding problem which necessitated confining hundreds of youngsters in a large, stuffy auditorium, each mid-day for a half hour, before the afternoon sessions began. Boredom, irritability and frequent departures from disciplinary conduct resulted. Student members of the 4-Star Club went into action.

Utilizing student funds, they rented March of Time reels, Sportlights, cartoons, travelogues and popular swing band shorts. The films were shown during the mid-day half hour, and the results were so satisfactory, that the principal of the White Plains school has given the 4-Star members carte blanche in handling a similar program next Fall.

Reporting on the success of their venture at the Convention, which was held for 4-Star Clubs affiliated as junior groups with the National Board of Review, the White Plains students say they "like the movies because it breaks up the regularity of the school day," and "because we learn something, in a pleasant way." Conservative educators please note.

Other Convention high-spots were discussions of propaganda films; presentation of prizes for the annual "Make Your Own Movies" contest; a showing of a "Quiz Kid" short; and a film feature review of Paramount's "There's Magic in Music," the picture made at the famous Interlochen, Michigan, Music Camp for young, talented music students, which was awarded the "film of the month" by Parents' Magazine.

Leslie M. Roush, producer-director of Paramount's short features, was the principal speaker of the day.

Circuit To Test Junior Admissions

Beginning May 30th, Tri-States Theatres of Des Moines, Iowa, will inaugurate a junior admission policy to be operated as a trial for 30 days. The new policy was decided upon at a conference held by Myron Blank and G. Ralph Branton with three Tri-States district managers, A. G. Stolte of Des Moines, Joseph Kinsky of Omaha and Herbert D. Grove of Davenport.

The present admission is 10 cents for all children under 12 years old. Over that age the full admission price is charged. The junior admission price is to be 21 cents plus tax for all children from 12 to 16 years, and will admit them for 26 cents at the A theatres where the admission is 46 cents, and 24 cents at the B theatres where 30 cents is charged.

NATIONAL GOOD WILL CONVENTION OF SHOWMEN

Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners will be hosts to the 21st ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, June 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 1941.

'Good Neighbor' Campaign Aided By Circuit Plan

George Skouras, head of the Skouras Theatres chain, last week inaugurated in New York metropolitan theatres, a two-week Pan-American good-will campaign, entitled "Americans All," features of which were special lobby displays of the products of Latin-American countries; special programs on which have appeared representatives of countries; and the interest, cooperation, and outright aid of local patriotic organizations, who stressed tolerance and amity. The idea was to test a plan to arrange for all theatres in the U. S. to participate in a similar national program in October.

The campaign was aided by the New York Daily Mirror, awarding prizes for the best photographs of a lobby display, and featuring news of such displays, and by other circuits of New York, and certain independent theatres. The national "I Am an American Day," May 18th, was tied in by the theatres and the newspapers, and signalled the beginning of the campaign, which was to end Friday, Memorial Day.

Nationwide Plan

Mr. Skouras, host with his associate, William White, Thursday, May 22nd, on a special trip for the trade press from Manhattan to the circuit's Fox Theatre, Hackensack, New Jersey—the lobby of which housed a display which truly impressed the guests and caused much favorable local comment—expressed a desire for national cooperation in the pan-American amity conception. That cooperation, he thought, might be propounded in a week in October, or perhaps more than one week, during which all theatres in the country would have special displays and guest speakers who would stress the common destiny of the nations of the Western hemisphere. He noted that some 10,000 theatres had already joined the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense, and thought that, inasmuch as American unity was certainly a factor in that defense, that that number of theatres would possibly join.

The theme of the Americans All displays was put by a motto placarded alongside a raised pool in the lobby of the Fox Theatre, Hackensack—a pool upon which were cut outlines of North and South America, and from which extruded an upthrust hand, bearing scales. The motto read: "God made us neighbors—let justice make us friends."

Other houses of the circuit conducted extensive programs, and in some cases had similar lobby displays, during the two-week period. The Rivoli in Hempstead, L. I., invited several speakers and honor guests for every night. They included local religious and civic leaders. The Beacon in New York City had a lobby exhibit on the "Good Neighbor Policy" and invited consular representatives from Panama, Mexico, Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Venezuela and Bolivia.

At the Academy of Music in New York the consul general of Poland, and Czechoslovakia, Congressman William Dickstein and a representative of the Fighting 69th were guests.

The Capitol in Portchester had "I Am an American Day," "Fraternal Night," "Civic Night," "Red Men and Pocahontas Night," "Labor Night," "Motion Picture Industry and Staff Nights," "Pan-American-Good Neighbor Night," "Veterans' Night," "Local Draft Board Night," and "American Legion Night," and "Merchandising Bureau Night," all with appropriate speakers and guests.

Fined $500 on U. S. Income Tax Charges

Charges of non-payment of amusement tax in violation of the internal revenue act, brought against two Minneapolis theatre operators, were dismissed Monday, May 26th, in federal district court in St. Paul. Judge George F. Sullivan dismissed the charges against Harry Katz and Harry Hirsch, operators of the Alvin theatre. The Follies Amusement Corp., however, which they head, pleaded guilty and was fined $500.

Judge Sullivan was told Mr. Katz and Mr. Hirsch had paid up $3,000 in arrears on their amusement tax bill. They had never failed to make some returns, it was pointed out.

The tax was run up when Mr. Katz and Mr. Hirsch last summer tested a film and unit stage show policy for several weeks at the theatre. Previously they had operated the Gayety, a burlesque house.

Early this year they reinstituted a burlesque policy at the Alvin, located on a class loop street, and did respectable business until spring weather curtailed boxoffice receipts, and they shut down for the summer. During this period they paid up much of the arrears left from their previous period of operation, and were still paying off when indictments were returned by a federal grand jury in a surprise move. They immediately paid off the rest of the tax.

Two Receive MGM Awards

Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer has awarded Honor Roll Buttons to U. K. Rice of the Carolina theatre in Winston-Salem, N. C., and Walt Jancke of the Pioneer in Lamar, Colo., for the exploitation campaigns on "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary" and "Land of Liberty," respectively.

Friedlander Heads Group

Irving Friedlander has been elected president of the Alliance of Motion Picture Machine Operators in New York. Charles Axelrod was elected vice-president; Peter Waxberg, secretary, and Morris Levy, treasurer.

Supply Company Formed

The Amusement Supply and Equipment Co. has been incorporated at Buckeye Lake, Ohio, near Columbus, with 50 shares of no par stock, by A. M. Brown, Peggy Poulton, B. F. McDonald and George McDonald. The company will furnish amusement and entertainment supplies to the wholesale and retail trade.

Howe Joins Turner's Staff

M. D. Howe has been transferred from the Walt Disney office in New York to the staff of Terry Turner, head of RKO Radio's field departments. Mr. Howe will work on "Fantasia" and "Citizen Kane." Harry Reiners has been called in from the Boston office to work with Mr. Turner's headquarters staff.

Keith Files for Merger

In Albany, N. Y., the B. F. Keith Corporation has filed papers of merger with Michael F. Walsh, Secretary of State, to merge with the Haton Theatre Corp. Papers were submitted by Prentice Hall, Inc., New York.

300 Critics Attend 35 'Sunny' Shows

"Sunny," the RKO-Herbert Wilcox production starring Anna Neagle, was premiered at the Golden Gate Theatre, San Francisco, Wednesday. Miss Neagle, Ray Bolger, the Hartmans and others of the musical's cast were on hand. From May 23rd until the 30th, "Sunny" was being previewed nationally in 35 key situations in theatres at regular admission prices. RKO has invited newspaper representatives from 300 cities near the key spots to attend the previews.

During the past week, national sneak previews held in three key situations were reported to have had good box-office results in the initial one-night runs. Previews of "Sunny" were held at the Century, Buffalo; Orpheum, New Orleans, and the Brandeis, Omaha. Other RKO engagements include the following:

May 22nd—Palace, Dallas; State, Oklahoma City; Warners, Milwaukee; Egyptian, Ogden; Academy, Provo.

May 23rd—Orpheum, Des Moines; Varsity, Lincoln; Paramount, Portland.

May 24th—Imperial, Charlotte.

May 26th—Palace, Albany; Keith's, Boston; Circle, Indianapolis; Palace, Chicago; Hollywood, Sioux Falls; Orpheum, Denver.

May 27th—Roger Sherman, New Haven; Orpheum, Philadelphia; Palace, Cincinnati; Ambassador, St. Louis; Paramount, Seattle; Rialto, Salt Lake City.

May 28th—Fox, Atlanta; State, Memphis.

May 29th—Loew's Penn, Pittsburgh.

The Los Angeles preview was held at the Academy, Inglewood, and no date has been set as yet for Kansas City.

Repeat on "69th" Stunt

Taking a leaf from the promotion of "The Fighting 69th," Warner's film, "Sergeant York," still in production on the Coast, will be exploited in the same way. More than 5,000 men of the A.E.F.'s 82nd Division, which Sergeant York served during the first World War, are planning to hold dinners and celebrations throughout the country on the night the picture is released.

According to present plans, the film will be premiered in Nashville, Tenn., opening the next night in New York, at the Astor. Although actual dates are still to be set, the release probably will be held in July.

Those who are planning to attend 82nd Division dinners in key cities are: Gary Cooper, Joan Leslie, Walter Brennan, Director Howard Hawks, Jesse Lasky and Sergeant York, now retired, about whom the film is based.

If completed by June 15th, a print of the picture may be shown at the national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, to be held at the Mastbaum Theatre, Philadelphia. Sergeant York also will attend the V.F.W. convention.

Walt Disney's "Fantasia" will open its first Pacific Northwest engagement in Seattle, Wash., on Thursday, May 29th, at Hamrick-Evergreen's Blue Mouse theatre. It is expected that a reserved seat policy will prevail for the opening, with an advanced price scale similar to the rates in the East and California cities.

Only one theatre in Chicago is now showing "Citizen Kane" which has been withdrawn from the Palace Theatre there and is currently running at the Woods Theatre, which formerly scheduled the Orson Welles' picture on a twice daily basis. The film is being shown at the Woods three times daily, between 2:30 and 8:00 P.M., at matinee prices of 50c, 75c and $1.10 unreserved. The 8:30 P.M. show is reserved with prices scaled at 75c, $1.10 and $1.65.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS FACE SHORTAGE OF PROJECTIONISTS IN NEW DRAFT

Leaders Predict Thousands of Theatres Will Close Unless Age Reservation Clause Is Changed; New Limit Is 35

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

With zero hour for the projectionist of registrable age fast approaching—July 1st is the operative date for de-reservation—the British exhibitor's headaches increase and intensify. It is generally accepted that unless Mr. Bevin's schedules are modified considerable thousands of picture houses may be faced with closure.

Though some optimism is to be found in official C. E. A. circles where there is a belief that a concession may be made, nothing definite or concrete has yet been done, no ray of hope formally allowed to illumine the trade scene. Tom O'Brien, secretary of the N. A. T. K. E., the theatre workers' union, estimated this week that if the present reservation age was raised as intended on July 1st, only some 350 senior projectionists would be left to look after the operating booths of 4,000 picture theatres. Already one projectionist in three has been called to the colors.

The present age above which operators are reserved and exempt from military service is 25. On July 1st, under the new Bevin schedules, the age will be raised to 35. All projectionists below that who have previously been reserved by virtue of their occupation are liable to be called up for service with the Forces.

Pressure Applied

Considerable work has been put in by the unions, and by the C. E. A. in the direction of a lower age de-reservation. Informal but authoritative talks between officers of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association and officials of the Labor Ministry have taken place. Union chiefs have likewise made approaches to Whitehall. The avenues held open by the Trades Union Congress have been resourcefully explored. The assistance of the Board of Trade, which legislates on behalf of the industry, has been canvassed.

The Ministry of Labor and the Board of Trade formally notified the CEA and union representatives on Tuesday that they intended to implement their guarantee that there would be no immediate call up of projectionists pending the findings of the Manpower Committee.

The existing Manpower Committee of the Ministry of Labor, on which sit industry representatives, deals specifically with production and does not consider the question from the picture house point of view. Nevertheless, the adjudications of the Government, which will succeed the committee's recommendations—though not necessarily obey them—will almost certainly guide Whitehall's action in regard to projectionists. This belief, based on more than conjecture, is probably staying the exhibitor hand from further public campaigning.

While quite alive to the urgency of the production situation, inasmuch as a considerable portion of its future product hangs upon the fate of the industry's manpower, exhibitors feel they can be forgiven in being more concerned at present with their own headaches. The situation appears to them to contain within it the very germs of survival or otherwise.

Already roughly 1,000 projectionists have been called up. Many have enlisted voluntarily. A proportion of men who have not yet reached the age of reservation have enlisted to take up specialized jobs with the Forces, preferring this to waiting for the callup and assignment to some lesser or inappropriate billet. The drainage is considerable, Bevin's call to the factories has, too, found much response among the men in the operating box, and large numbers have left the trade to take up skilled positions in armament factories where they can combine patriotic endeavor with good salaries and exemption from military service. There are no men between 18 and 25 in the operating boxes today, unless they be men who are physically unfit. Women who have been trained for work as second and third projectionists, are, in many cases, drawn in by Bevin's registration of girls, while others have gone into the munition factories.

Many Closings Feared

In Birmingham circuit houses are exhibiting slides appealing for recruits to the ranks of projectionists, guaranteeing complete training for the work.

That exhibitors will be unable to carry on their businesses without staffs to man the projection booths is so obvious as not to need emphasis. Without sympathetic and protective action hundreds if not thousands of closures are inevitable. The more pessimistic forecast business being brought to a standstill.

Says labor leader Tom O'Brien: "Unless drastic modifications are made to the existing call-up proposals the entire entertainment industry may be forced to close down."

Among the other headaches which have sent up the exhibitor consumption of aspirin, are two particularly, the limits set upon rebuilding or reconstruction of bombed buildings, and the Government's compulsory insurance scheme. The one, it is contended, is liable to prevent exhibitors from replacing where possible their houses on an operable basis. The other not only calls for an expenditure which can ill be afforded, but into the bargain confuses the issue.

Many of the picture houses closed by enemy action have been totally destroyed. Many are repairable, and can be opened again—on condition. The condition, that without sanction repairs to such premises must not cost more than £100, is preventing many exhibitors getting back to normal trading. No work can be carried out in repairing damaged buildings without official sanction, and any rebuilding must be kept within those financial limits—though permission may and in some cases has been granted to exceed that sum.

Until an elastic interpretation of this ruling is permitted many picture houses will remain closed. In some areas which suffered from repeated air bombing there is a grave danger that picture houses may thus ultimately be wiped out entirely.

Meanwhile there is no small concern at the Government's scheme of compulsory insurance for buildings. Under this, owners of buildings, which, of course, include picture houses, are called upon to pay to a contributory scheme of compensation for war damage. The contributions are to be collected by the Revenue at a rate of 2s in the pound, based on the agreed assessment of the house, or, if no assessment has been made, upon the rateable value. Under another section of the same act moveable assets exceeding £1,000 in value must be insured.

Confusion still exists on the exhibitor mind as to whether projectors, power plant, seating, et cetera, count as moveable assets or as parts of the business premises, whether they are to be insured under Part 1 or under Part 2.

New Expense Feared

It is the judgment of the C. E. A.'s legal expert, Norman Hart, that what have been considered moveable assets should, for the purpose of the insurance, be considered structural parts of the building, and would be covered by the 2s in the pound on the assessed value. If they are to be insured separately, the exhibitor will be put to further and not inconsiderable expense.

Official assessors in Edinburgh have adjudicated that machinery and plant should be included in the insurance of the building under Part 1.

Either way, the picture house is not likely to get any compensation until after the war, and may therefore be called upon to pay the premium for some considerable time to come. At a time when so many drains are being on the exhibitor's income one more item of expenditure is not welcomed too cordially.

British exhibitors have other recurrent ills to consider, to bear, or for which to seek a cure. Firewatching, which is incumbent upon them, and which calls for the payment of subsistence allowances is but one of these. Fears that picture houses may yet go the way of studios and be commandeered, where so decided, for storage or for other war purposes, has grown with the board's issue of an order for registration of all business premises.

With the institution of a second hour of Summer Time, which has set the black-out back already to after 10 P. M., later closing hours have been instituted all over the country. Whether this will result in increased picture-going or a movement in the direction of the Great Outdoors remains to be seen.

Smith Reelected

Sam Smith, president of the Kinematograph Renters' Society, on Tuesday was reelected to that office for a second term. He will serve through 1941 and 1942.

BRITISH TREASURY EASES FINANCING

The British Treasury has instituted new financial machinery applicable to independent distributors not included in last year's financial agreement with the American companies, but subject to regulations in blocked sterling. The new plan, which is voluntary, individualizes the moneys of the several companies involved and removes the former cumbersome system but it apparently tightens the control of the Treasury over the funds, while simplifying the machinery.

Hitherto all frozen money was held in one blocked account. Now the Treasury will permit the opening of film expense accounts into which the creditor companies may deposit unremittable money up to a maximum of $200,000. On submission of a statement of expenditures required the Treasury will issue a general license covering payments from the deposits for working expenses.

CITY MANAGERS CITE CIVIC FILMS USED IN LOCAL EXHIBITOR TIEUPS

Promotional Pictures Made by Municipalities Are Shown in Theatres as Fillers; Special Campaigns in Some Cities

Possibilities of special exhibitor tieups with local city governments on matters of civic interest and promotion are pointed out by the International City Managers' Association, which reports from headquarters in Chicago that motion pictures as a means of describing city activities and municipal advantages are now being used by dozens of cities and towns from coast to coast.

There are 34 cities of over 50,000 population which regularly use motion pictures to promote their communities in the community or to sell the city to outside people and outside industries.

In most cases, the city fathers, or specific departments of the local government, sponsor local exhibitors in promoting the message of their town on the screen.

There has been recognized, also, a certain potential good will for the exhibitor in aiding his local government in advancing the special film descriptions of municipal advancement, when the exhibitor has needed local legislative or other help.

Diverse Showings

The showings have been before widely diversified groups, educational organizations, service clubs, conventions, employe organizations, churches, community clubs, and in motion picture theatres.

In some cities so attractive is the film offered that bookings have to be made months in advance for playing dates, so reports the City Managers Association.

In Portland, Oregon, over 100,000 people saw that city's first film, "Your City Government in Action." "Municipal Service," a newer movie, is being shown in that city three times a week.

Wichita, Kan., municipal film had immediate success and local officials said such films were definitely a means of educating the public in the operation of Government.

Detroit officials estimated that attendance at the showing of their movies was nearly 7,000,000. In six other cities the local attendance exceeded 100,000 persons; in two cities the attendance was 50,000 to 100,000 and in eight cities the attendance was from 25,000 to 50,000.

Of the 34 large cities, nine made pictures portraying general activities, while 25 cities made pictures of specific activities of some department.

Typical were the films of the operation and activities of the recreation department of Dayton, Ohio. East Orange, N. J., portrayed the functions of its health and fire departments. Chicago, which is one of the three city governments having its own sound projectors—the others being Boston and Milwaukee—made a series of pictures which were presented in theatres throughout the city. One of the subjects which dealt with activities and recreational facilities offered by the Chicago Park District, was made by a professional. A local radio announcer was commentator for the picture, which opened with a prologue by Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago, who invited all who viewed the pictures to take advantage of the opportunities offered by the park district.

Of the 34 large cities mentioned, 24 have their own motion picture projectors; 18 have 16 mm. size, two own 35 mm. size and four cities have both sizes.

Buffalo, N. Y., and East St. Louis, Ill., have 35 mm. projectors, while the Chicago Park District, a separate branch of the local government embracing all the parks in Chicago, owns 16 mm. projectors. The Chicago Bureau of Engineering, which has had numerous pictures of the water works operations in Chicago made, owns 35 mm. projectors.

Other cities having municipally-owned projectors are Tacoma, Boston and Wichita. Silent equipment in addition to sound is also owned by Chicago and Milwaukee.

A 16 mm. silent Kodachrome picture titled "Municipal Service" was made by Portland, Oregon. The entire script was prepared, edited, directed and titled by a municipal employee. The city's photographer shot all the various scenes. Special emphasis was placed on services rendered by Portland's various departments that were not generally known to the public.

Fire Fighting Film

Schenectady, N. Y., made films showing fire drills and other phases of fire fighting. In this instance professional photographers from General Electric completed the film in three hours.

The average time in making motion pictures in most cities was 16 weeks.

Austin, Texas, Boston and Pasadena, Cal., made films in which prepared scenarios were used. In a majority of cases the outstanding events occurring during the year were filmed at the time of their occurrence, then assembled, edited and titled so that a coherent and factual sequence resulted.

Chicago, Springfield, Mass., Austin, Tex., New York, Philadelphia and Chicago all used professional photographers in the making of pictures.

Pasadena, Cal., made a civic production under the supervision of a professional photographer who was paid and was part of a WPA project. In Wichita, professionals and amateurs were used.

The per reel cost of making civic pictures varies. Following are the costs per city:

Atlanta, Ga. (sound), $2,500.

Pasadena, New York, Cleveland, and Louisville spent from $500 to $1,000 (silent).

Denver, East Orange, N. J., Lansing, Mich., and Springfield, Mass., spent from $250 to $500 (silent).

Film titles have been selected with an expected eye for publicity. In Cleveland the picture was called "Housekeeper to 900,000 People"; Portland, Ore., chose "Your City Government in Action." Denver selected "Romance of Water," while the choice of East Orange was "A Day With Friends in the Health Department."

In Atlanta, the civic film, titled "The City of Atlanta at Work," ran 20 minutes and was substituted for shorts in local movie houses. Later it was reduced to 16 mm. size for showing before various fraternal and civic organizations.

Chicago's Park District films, "Fun on the Lake Front," "Fun for All," and "Baseball" were used as "fill-ins" at different intervals by local theatres.

STATION ASKS FILM AID FOR BROADCAST

Station WCAU, Philadelphia, is soliciting the support of motion picture exhibitors and film exchanges in that territory to aid in the exploitation of the station's new film gossip program, "Hurd in Hollywood," broadcast daily, and conducted by Betty Hurd, former feature writer for the Philadelphia Record. A broadside has been sent by the station to the local industry calling attention to the program, the only one of its kind in the city. The program is designed, the station claims, "to whet movie-going appetites" rather than duplicate the fan magazine type of chatter." As such, the motion picture industry has been called upon to exploit the program on the screen, in the lobby and in its advertising. If enough interest is created, station executives say they will prepare a special trailer for exhibition at theatres. President of WCAU is Dr. Leon Levy, chief barker of the Philadelphia Variety Club.

Wilson Collison, Playwright, Dies

Wilson Collison, author of more than 50 motion picture scenarios and plays, died Sunday night, May 25th, of a heart attack at his home in Beverly Hills, Cal. He was 47 years old.

Mr. Collison's career as a playwright began in 1919 when, as a soda clerk in Ohio, he wrote the successful "Up in Mabel's Room." He turned out this first success in collaboration with Otto Harbach. Another of his hits was "Getting Gertie's Garter," for which he teamed up with Avery Hopwood.

For 13 years in California Mr. Collison was a prolific producer of screen plays, including the current "Maisie" series with Ann Sothern.

Other film stories included "Shy Cinderella," "Save a Lady," "Bachelor's Night," "Red Dust," "Desert Sands," "Blonde Baby, "Farewell to Women," "Diary of Death" and "Cargo Landing." The writer also resided in Bermuda and New York.

Among the plays by Wilson Collison, besides those mentioned, are "The Vagabond," "Desert Sands," "Bachelor's Night" and "The Girl With Carmine Lips," which he produced himself in 1920 at the Punch and Judy theatre. He was also the author of 25 novels including "The Second Mrs. Lynton" and "Glittering Isel."

Showing talent for writing at an early age Mr. Collison abandoned plans to follow a scientific profession. At the age of nine a Columbus, Ohio, newspaper accepted one of his stories. Since he had had only one year of high school his writing style was largely self-developed.

He leaves a widow, Mrs. Anzonetta Collison.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

ELLERY QUEEN'S PENTHOUSE MYSTERY: Ralph Bellamy, Margaret Lindsay, Charles Grapewin—Very fine mystery drama. Kept attention and suspense throughout. You can't go wrong on this series. Business very good. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 15-17.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Crandon, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

First National

STRANGE ALIBI: Arthur Kennedy, Joan Perry—Entertaining little picture, but it has no star power and did not draw. If you never play it, you have not missed anything. Running time, 63 minutes. Played May 13.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

COME LIVE WITH ME: James Stewart, Hedy LaMarr—Ran this with "They Met in Argentina" to fairly good box office. Played May 9-10.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S CRISIS: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—I would say that this is quite as good as the earlier "Kildare" pictures. However, I would say that it is too much like the others. We find we can sell about three of such "series" pictures, but that our patrons lose interest beyond that point. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 16-17.—Dr. G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

GONE WITH THE WIND: Vivien Leigh, Clark Gable, Leslie Howard, Olivia de Havilland—Well, we have finally played it and had a much bigger crowd than I expected. My patrons commented that they liked my use of the intermission as some had seen it elsewhere and it had been omitted. It isn't the best picture ever made, but they certainly came out for it in spite of advanced prices. It still has plenty of drawing power left in it. A large number of my audience were repeats. Running time, 228 minutes. Played April 25-26.—W. Varick Nevins, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patrontage.

GONE WITH THE WIND: Clark Gable, Vivien Leigh, Leslie Howard, Olivia de Havilland—This has had so much publicity that it may be foolish to say anything more about it. The film has undoubted merit, but I feel that it does not rate being put in a class by itself as against all the rest of them. I feel that its extreme length is largely a build-up and that an hour could have been cut out of it without any damage to the film. The publicity given it and the advance in admission prices have made the public believe it had to be seen, but our experience leads us to think that a lot of our patrons did not care for it and did not believe it was worth double prices as against a lot of regular-admission features. Running time, 220 minutes. Played May 2-3.—Dr. G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

Miscellaneous

SCARFACE (reissue): Paul Muni, George Raft, Boris Karloff—Tried this one out again. Print in fair shape for such an old film, but there is a marked difference in films today. Therefore, I personally endorse doing away with them. Business moderate due to help from "Bank Nites." Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 8-9.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

Republic

GREAT TRAIN ROBBERY, THE: Bob Steele, Claire Carleton—Here really is one of the finest little pictures you will play in a long time. Will please all. Photography something to write home about. Keep it up, Repubic. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 8-10.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Crandon, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—
What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

LADY FROM LOUISIANA: John Wayne, Ona Munson—Fair picture and fair business. A little draggy in spots. Just missed being a big picture. Wayne is cast as a prosecuting attorney attempting to stop the Louisiana Lottery (sometimes called Bank Night). The big flood scenes in the climax are worth sitting through the show for. Running time, 82 minutes. Played May 18-19.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MAN BETRAYED, A: John Wayne, Frances Dee, Edward Ellis—Some place this missed fire. Good picture, but business only average. Believe title not attractive. Running time, 82 minutes. Played May 11-12.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Crandon, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

PETTICOAT POLITICS: Roscoe Karns, Ruth Donnelly—Not as bad as the reviewers would have you believe. Right down the alley for small town exhibitors. Don't pass it up for double feature. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 8-10.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Crandon, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby, Charles Butterworth, Jerry Calonna—Here is another swell picture from Republic. I will lay my money this will out gross most of the major "A" pictures. Am playing on a Sunday. Running time, 98 minutes.—Frank E. Rider, Chateau Theatre, Wauneta, Neb. General patronage.

RKO Radio

CONVOY: Clive Brook, John Clements, Judy Campbell—Ran this with "A Girl, a Guy and a Gob" to only fair business. The ending of this picture is a masterpiece of photography and is a realistic reproduction of the present war. There is not much plot, but those that came thought it good and said so. Maybe too realistic, but certainly well done. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 2-3.—W. Varick Nevins, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

DEVIL AND MISS JONES, THE: Jean Arthur, Charles Coburn, Robert Cummings, Spring Byington—This is a dandy for any audience. My crowd laughed hard and often and praised it on the way out. It is one of the best comedies of the year and has a distinctly original plot. It drew excellently. Running time, 92 minutes. Played May 1.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

GIRL, A GUY AND A GOB, A: Lucille Ball, George Murphy, Edmond O'Brien—This was well received and enjoyed by those who came to see it, but its drawing power was not too good when doubled with "Convoy." There are some very good comedy scenes in it and I do not know why it did not do better. Running time, 91 minutes. Played May 2-3.—W. Varick Nevins EI, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

KITTY FOYLE: Ginger Rogers, Dennis Morgan, James Craig—Did nice midweek business on this. Ginger did a nice job. Comments favorable.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THEY MET IN ARGENTINA: James Ellison, Buddy Ebsen, Maureen O'Hara—Ran this with "Come Live With Me" to fairly good box office. It is too bad because I think this film showed a good attempt, but that attempt failed badly. Buddy Ebsen's comedy helps somewhat and the music is O. K., but it just fails to interest the audience. It is not downright bad, but it certainly misses fire badly. Running time, 77 minutes. Played May 9-10.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

HUDSON'S BAY: Paul Muni, Gene Tierney, Laird Cregar—Although this picture is not as good as it should have been, it still merits attention. We did quite well with it and the customers seemed satisfied in spite of its weak spots. Lots of comedy and action most of the way through help this one. Running time, 95 minutes. Played April 24.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

NIGHT TRAIN: Rex Harrison, Margaret Lockwood—Did remarkably well with this attraction. It is worth playing anywhere, even though it is English. The accent is not bad at all and there are plenty of thrilling moments. I emphasized its run on Broadway in advertising. Running time, 93 minutes. Played April 22.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

THAT NIGHT IN RIO: Don Ameche, Alice Faye, Carmen Miranda—Good picture in excellent color which pleased fair business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 14-15.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

TOBACCO ROAD: Charles Grapewin, Marjorie Rambeau, Gene Tierney—Some thought it excellent. Some thought it terrible. The box office was satisfactory and I personally enjoyed the film. I emphasized the fact that it had been cleaned up. Maybe that helped. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 8.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

WESTERN UNION: Robert Young, Virginia Gilmore, Randolph Scott, Dean Jagger—Just another western in color. Disappointed in business both days. Definitely not box office. Story fair, but just didn't click in this section. In my opinion this should be rated a class B. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 4-5.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

POT O' GOLD: James Stewart, Paulette Goddard, Horace Heidt and His Orchestra—This is not a big picture, but it is very entertaining. Worth a Sunday play date. Running time, 86 minutes.—Frank E. Rider, Chateau Theatre, Wauneta, Neb. General patronage.

REBECCA: Laurence Olivier, Joan Fontaine, George Sanders, Judith Anderson—Quite late using this feature due to no contract last year, but found business held up fairly well both days. Wonderful picture, well acted by Laurence Olivier and Joan Fontaine. If you haven't played it, give it a try soon. Running time, 130 minutes. Played May 6-7.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

BACK STREET: Charles Boyer, Margaret Sullavan, Richard Carlson—This is a very good picture, but business below average. This type of picture very seldom does business in our town. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 18-19.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Crandon, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

BUCK PRIVATES: Abbott and Costello, Andrew Sisters—Booked this one for extra day, making three-day run. Business exceptionally good entire run. Good musical feature with enough comedy and supported by splendid singing of Andrew Sisters. Abbott and Costello were very good, indeed. Picture should do well anywhere shown. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 1-3.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

LADY FROM CHEYENNE: Loretta Young, Robert Preston, Edward Arnold, Gladys George—I do not know when I enjoyed a picture any more than this one. I think it is swell. You can play it on any day of the week. Running time, 87 minutes.—Frank E. Rider, Chateau Theatre, Wauneta, Neb. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

IS RADIO SMARTER?

Back in March, Motion Picture Herald carried the results of a survey instituted by the newspaper publishers association, representing over 600 papers. The findings purported to show how well the dailies were doing the job in spreading the news of the motion picture, "one of the ranking buyers of newspaper space". Through a special study on the subject made for Motion Picture Herald, the publishers urged that the exhibitor personally make a closer inspection of his position in relation to his local papers.

It was evidence that the publishers were concerned over the inroads being made on motion picture theatre advertising budgets by radio. That there is reason for that concern comes about in the survey made by Motion Picture Herald, issue of May 17, telling plenty of the mutual pat-on-the-back policy developing in central spots between radio stations and theatres. To quote:

"Ill-will that formerly characterized theatre-radio relationships now appears in many sections to have given way to a log-rolling fellowship between theatreman and broadcaster on a 'You help me and I'll help you' basis, reports from thirty cities indicate, in a study of airwaves as a medium of film promotion."

And how far the radio has entered into the advertising plans of theatres is to be noted in the findings that, in addition, purchase of time for announcements and special features runs from two per cent to a preponderance of the promotion budget.

These be figures to chew upon. They should point out more than a little to old-line publishers accustomed to tell the theatreman exactly where he gets off.

It would only be sticking out a hesitant chin to say that non-cooperating papers are pushing radio dangerously near the top in theatre advertising spending. The largest part of the dough nationally continues to be spent in print, and it is unnecessary to go into the reasons why. That, of course, goes mainly for the situations where the dailies are cooperative and welcome theatre news as news for the readers.

In those situations where the publishers make up their own rulings and refuse to be budged, the theatreman is not to be blamed for leaning to the radio which is more than eager to turn loose for interviews, quizzes, contests, chatter programs, and what-have-you. And especially, as noted in the May 17th spread, when the radio folks are willing to be paid off in passes, trailers, or something besides cash out of the drawer.

It may also be said that, while for one reason or another few managers are writing by-line chatter columns for their papers, theatremen are found regularly broadcasting their wares, even on the bigger stations. And "for free", too.

Now, it may be all right for newspapers to put out special studies to show that the theatre is being done right by. But that does not answer the manager obliged to go out and promote. Rebuffed by his dailies, he turns to the waiting radio.

If radio is building increasing goodwill among theatremen, it is because broadcasters have long recognized the commercial value of motion picture and show news as real news. Radio confirms this recognition with quick cooperation in the affairs of the theatre because it is good for radio.

As do the many Round Tablers who know of him and his good works, this department is pleased to applaud the choice of Charles W. Koerner as general manager of RKO theatre operations, succeeding the able John J. O'Connor. With some thirty years of showbusiness behind him, and a fruitful ten of those with RKO, Koerner is well equipped for the job.

On behalf of the membership, then, your Chairman is happy to convey the best of every wish for the biggest kind of a success in the new situation. Here's how!

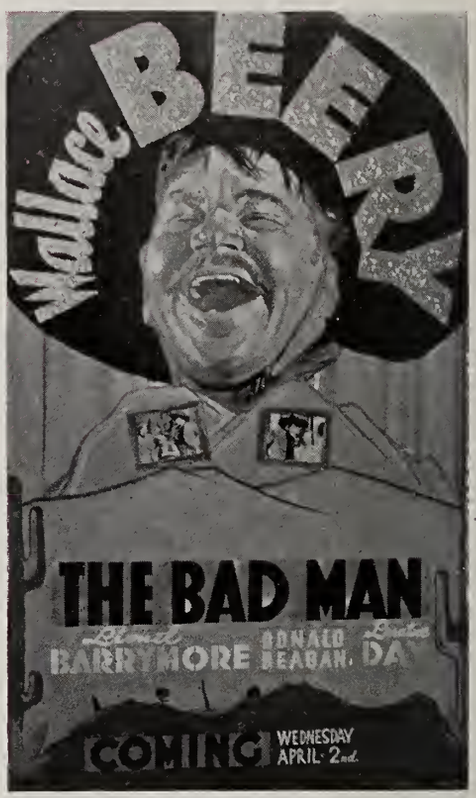
1895, AND BRAND NEW TODAY

The story behind Arnold Stoltz' "Hell" novelty herald reproduced in the May 24 issue, concerns the source of the idea. It goes back to 1895. At that time, Arnold's dad, press agent for Flo Ziegfeld, conceived a "Go to Held" throwaway to publicize the nationwide tour of the famed Anna Held, and which proved an immediate "stopper".

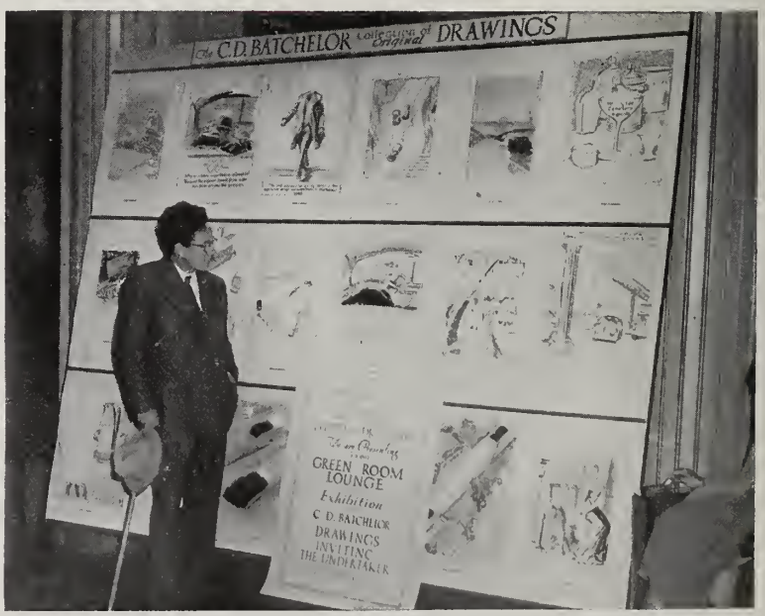
Now, 46 years later, the Round Tabler polishes up the thing on "Devil and Miss Jones", and it goes over sensationally to prove another eye-opener for those skeptic showmen who still misterm them "oldies".

A-Mike Vogel



Round Table In Pictures

Created by Julius Lamm and his assistant, Don Myers, at Warners' Uptown, in Cleveland, was animated lobby display on "Night Train". Setpiece of train was all decked out with "Stop" signs, headlight illuminated, and gates equipped with lanterns.



Small plaster models of the Ziegfeld Girls as they appeared in that picture were dressed in flashy costumes and utilized for advance lobby display by Round Tabler Lou Cohen at Loew's Poli, in Hartford. Setpiece was illuminated from behind.

Head on shot in foyer of the Princess, Sioux City, Ia., consisted of 24-sheet cutout of Wallace Beery constructed by Warren Butler. Lights behind title were on flashers.

Working on the premise that if you give a man enough rope he'll hang himself, Orville Rennie for "The Dictator" at the Fort, Rock Island, helped the cause along by supplying scaffold and noose which was planted alongside cutout of Chaplin engrossed in world map.

During the engagement of "The People vs. Dr. Kildare" at the New York Loew's Criterion, tieup was arranged by Phil Laufer, publicity director with C. D. Batchelor, editorial cartoonist of the Daily News, wherein twenty-five of the artist's "Inviting the Undertaker" drawings were displayed. Mr. Batchelor may be seen above.

Proverb Contest Aids "Serenade"

That beguiling four-day proverb contest suggested in the pressbook became an important part of recent campaigns reported on Columbia's "Penny Serenade," Jack Cotter tieing in with the Daily Times for the date at the Colonial, in Erie, Pa., and Dick Walsh, with the Buffalo Broadcasting Corp., on the popular Billy Keaton Hour for the run at the Lafayette. Guest tickets as prizes were offered in Erie. In Buffalo, the title was hooked up to the prizes with bags of pennies of various denominations, five, three and two hundred, for first, second and third.

Merchant tieins for ad space were also secured by both Round Tablers, Cotter landing a three-quarter page co-op headed "Penny Serenade of Erie Merchants." He also promoted the date into a popular bargain page by giving tickets to those whose names were included in the ads. Same slant was also employed in a six-day classified tieup. In addition to the national ads, Walsh also worked out a number of co-ops and obtained wide mention in the widely distributed Shopping News.

Fashion window displays also were featured in both spots. Cotter had heralds stuffed in Liberty magazines delivered to homes. Walsh bannered magazine delivery trucks. Mother's Day was observed by the Buffalonian with a Postal Telegraph promotion wherein on the special greetings blank for the occasion, tiein copy was carried, the blanks placed in outgoing messages and otherwise circulated. Walsh also promoted window cards from the Victor distributor for display in over 75 dealer windows, cards carrying cut of the stars and copy on the picture.

Chuckle-Ad Contest Aids "Mr. & Mrs. Smith"

Sponsored by the Winona Republican Herald was the chuckle-ad contest arranged ahead of "Mr. & Mrs. Smith" at the State Theatre, Winona, Minn., by Round Tabler H. F. Borrensen with cash prizes and autographed photos of Carole Lombard going to those submitting funniest ad, runnerup getting guest tickets to the premiere.

A barber shop tiein attracted the attention of window shoppers with a display of mounted stills from the film showing the shaving sequence from the picture with a caption reading: "We can't have Carole Lombard shave you. But! We can give you that well groomed appearance."

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Heinz's Bakery Tieup

Herbert Heinz, manager of the New York RKO Alhambra and Ray Malone, divisional press agent, have just completed arrangements with the Brown Bomber Bread Company in Harlem, whereby they will distribute 37,000 outserts to go around each loaf of bread that leaves their plant. This tieup carries copy: "For Better Entertainment, RKO Harlem Theatres Regent, Roosevelt, Alhambra Movie Jubilee." Only cost to the theatres was for printing of the outserts.

Sanford Theatre School of Golf Features Stage Demonstrations

Reported by Tony Williams, Warner New Jersey zone theatres district head, and detailed in Warners' weekly, "Wisconsin and Chicago Manager," is the series of golf lessons given on the stage of the Sanford, in Irvington, N. J., the various swings, stances, grips, etc., demonstrated by a local professional who contributed his services in exchange for the effective publicity received. Platform with coco-mat was used for a tee, and balls driven into a net off-stage.

To publicize the "school" held every Friday night, contact was made with all players registered at the principal municipal course in the area where the pro was attached. Posters were spotted at all public courses nearby, at high schools, cafeterias and recreation rooms in local plants. In addition, the pro furnished for display eight by tens of himself giving lessons to headline names, and everyone thereabouts who had received instruction from the pro was informed of the "school", letters also including plug for the theatre program.

Williams notes that the tiein brought many new patrons to the theatre which received quite a flock of mail with compliments on this unusual form of entertainment.

Samuels Concentrates On Effective Heralds

It's getting so that folks in Port Neches, Texas, look forward to W. S. Samuel's ingenious heralds gotten out to sell his shows at the Lyric Theatre there. Among recent gags was the four by six card with large safety pin attached, gotten out to sell his double show. Copy read "You can pin me down, if this isn't one of the finest twin hit shows ever presented," etc. Small scene still cuts were used for both pictures in addition to prices and playdates.

Another attention-attractor was tinted herald with the line "Sure you know that" in bold type at top. This was followed by historical facts, winding up with "But do you know that Thursday and Friday are Bargain Days at the," etc. Also to be noted are the little intimate messages run on front page of his weekly programs, last one at hand being for Mother's Day and suggesting book of theatre tickets as a gift for the occasion.

Draftee Party Attended By Mayor for "Privates"

Contacting the local Selective Service Board, L. Dandeneau at the Strand, in Rockland, Maine, extended invitations to draftees off for Induction Center to attend opening night of "Buck Privates." Highlight was the presence of the Mayor and head of American Legion, who gave brief addresses on stage. Legion drum corps marched from draft board to theatre with draftees and Legion Police Corps, group picture being taken out front and on stage for dailies. Advance stories gave the opening a good sendoff.

Program opened with National Anthem and unfurling of giant American flag in front of screen. Dandeneau acting as master of ceremonies introduced the Mayor and each one of the draftees with audience giving rising ovation. This closed the ceremony, going into the feature. Draft Board sent letters to each man requesting his presence, potato peeling stunt was used in lobby three days ahead and newspapers were cooperative with art and stories.

Managers Play Host At Mother's Day Party

Three-way tieup which received abundant newspaper publicity ahead was the theatre party arranged by Chick Tompkins at the Elco, Elkhart, Ind., who played host to mothers 70 years old and over in connection with his recent Mother's Day celebration. Transportation was promoted from local cab company which called for and returned the ladies to their homes, cooperating department store presented each of the 85 mothers who attended with a box of handkerchiefs and local florist came through with corsages for each.

On arrival at the theatre, Chick's 11-year-old daughter acted as hostess and presented the gifts after a welcome speech by the Round Tabler. Invitation to attend the party was included in all theatre ads three days ahead and reportedly hard-to-crack paper came through with stories in advance and after the event.

While Francis Deering at Loew's, in Houston, planted a contest in local paper with prizes to first 100 submitting best letters on "What my Mother means to me." In addition a surprise party for the mothers of the winning entrants was held at theatre, promoted corsages going to each. Front page breaks were accorded the stunt, cooperating paper running readers and later excerpts from winning letters.

MUSICIAN PLAYS WHILE SISTERS SING

To publicize the hit tunes in "Buck Privates" and to hook up the music more immediately to his audience, Charlie Carden at the Hollywood, in Fort Worth arranged for a guitar player working from the aisle to join in with the Andrews Sisters on the screen, while the girls were singing "In Apple Blossom Time" from the picture.

The unique innovation was thought well enough of in the amusement pages for top columnar comment.

FOUND—NOT CLAIMED

For a different slant to emphasize the 20th anniversary of the Century circuit's Farragut in Brooklyn, N. Y., Manager Murry Livingston hit on the unique idea of a comedy display of some 20 items supposed to have been found in the theatre during opening week. Laff copy was attached to each, such as a hot water bag carried by patrons 20 years ago to furnish their own heat, rubber ring seat of the same period to soften hard seats, etc. The exhibit proved a "honey", drawing crowds and lots of helpful comment.

Bowling Alleys Tied To "Third Finger"

The ambidextrous in the vicinity of the St. George, in Brooklyn, recently had a chance to demonstrate their skill when Manager Sam Berns offered guest tickets at local bowling alleys to those making a strike with their "Third Finger, Left Hand." Appropriate card with title, cast and playdates was prominently displayed in each cooperating alley.

In connection with his date on "Back Street," Berns distributed heralds carrying cut of map of city streets within several blocks radius. Theatre location was encircled box in lower left hand corner reading: "All roads lead to 'Back Street' at the," etc., etc.

Wirth Holds "Roundup Days" For "Ridin' on a Rainbow" Date

A. O. Wirth, manager of the Fenway Theatre in Fennimore, Wisconsin, arranged a "Fennimore Roundup Day" campaign in connection with his showing of Republic's "Ridin' on a Rainbow." A week in advance of the engagement, local paper dedevoted space to stories and teaser ads. A double-page spread announced bargains in local shops. The spread carried special coupon and bargain seekers clipped this coupon and had it stamped when making a purchase from any co-operating merchant. The stamped coupon admitted patrons to the theatre for special matinees upon payment of a service charge. The co-operating merchant paid the theatre five cents per coupon.

A three by five foot post card was signed by hundreds of persons attending "Roundup Days," and card was mailed to Gene Autry. As a finale to the campaign, the local paper carried a picture of the card being mailed. In addition to the newspaper advertising, window cards were promoted from local paper and posted in stores of co-operating merchants, on light poles along the main street, and in surrounding towns, with appropriate tiein copy, which carried title and playdates.

Hoel Ties 40 and 8 To "Buck Privates"

Reported by Ken Hoel, publicist for the Harris Theatres in Pittsburgh is the "Buck Privates" campaign put on by Bill Zeilor at the Senator, and Jim Lindsay, Hoel's assistant, which brought use of the American Legion's 40 and 8 for street ballyhoo. Recruiting office loaned "A" boards which were planted about town and tieup with merchant brought spud peeling contest with guest tickets to those coming closest to guessing number of potatoes man would peel.

Band playing locally in one of the top hotels featured hit tunes from the picture with appropriate credits, as did Station WWSW, draftees were invited to see the show on the house and all juke boxes in neighborhood had records and tieup cards atop machines.

Scott Builds Date With Local Finns

Some time ago in Sudbury, Ontario, a young Finnish violinist, Heimo Haitto, appeared as a guest artist at a Sunday concert. This was remembered recently by Round Tabler Sid Scott at the Capitol for his date on "There's Magic in Music," when he discovered that the young musician had a part in the picture. Since the city of Sudbury has a sizeable Finnish population, Scott boosted interest considerably for his attraction by interesting presidents and leading members of all Finnish organizations, who agreed to make announcements.

Preachers of two leading churches were interviewed and consented to give the picture a plug at their sermons two Sundays ahead of opening. Attractive cards were prepared and distributed to merchants around town, where they were well received, particularly in Finnish-owned stores, which featured them. Securing a mat of the violinist, Scott succeeded in planting it three days ahead in as many issues of leading Finnish language paper. In addition, theatre's own ads gave prominent mention to the boy star.

Since several members of Scott's staff are Finnish and were particularly desirous of boosting the picture, a personal canvas of their friends' homes was made ahead and all urged to attend the show. With one of the ushers a member of the Finnish Youths' Athletic Society, the lad spoke at three different meetings and placed displays in the numerous halls of the Finnish Red Cross, Finnish Women's War Society.

Atkins Ties "Li'l Abner" To Sadie Hawkins Day

C. A. Atkins of the Lyric Theatre, Blue Island, Ill., booked in "Li'l Abner" to coincide with the Sadie Hawkins Day at the Community High School, Blue Island, Ill., providing guest tickets for those winning costume prizes. Manager with photographer of a local newspaper and superintendent of high school acted as judges.

Aikins placed a display at the school a week preceding playdate and arranged with editor-in-chief of the student publications, for a special issue in which the comedy was given wide play. Special arrangements were made whereby high school students could see the show in the evening at afternoon prices provided they organized into parties of fifty or more.

"TIGHT SHOES" PLUG MEETS THE DAWN

Exhibitors at last week's Variety Clubs convention were called on the 'phone very, very early in the A.M. to hear that the hotel valet would be glad to stretch any "tight shoes"—with the compliments of Jules Levey, of Mayfair Productions. What happened then was not reported by Jim Luntzel, Levey's executive assistant, who tells about it, on behalf of the Universal release.

Stoltz 'Freemotes' Beech-Nut Circus

What he labeled "freemoted" and used on behalf of "The Wagons Roll at Night" at Warner's Avon, in Utica, N. Y., was the famous Beech-Nut Circus obtained by Arnold Stoltz in connection with that date. The exhibit, which attained fame at the World's Fair, was "freemoted" by Stoltz through a long distance call to the Beech-Nut factory in lining up this kid show displayed in front of the theatre.

Further attention was called to the showing with a parade down the main streets, led by high school band ending at the theatre, where the circus remained during the day with the exception of the hour from five to six, when it was paraded around town and to the children's hospitals during mornings. Free chewing gum was distributed. Arnold also promoted local taxi company for bannered cars in the street procession, the cab company also paying for printing and distribution of heralds in exchange for back page copy tied in to read: "The taxis roll at night-and-day," etc. The Warnerman who goes strongly for these things has also been clicking with a number of novelties, most recent being card with toy thermometer attached on "Flame of New Orleans" tiein copy reading "Heat wave to hit Utica. 'Flame of New Orleans' will be here Friday. Avon's cool air system challenges summer with the hottest love story of 1941." For his program on "Derby Day," Stoltz distributed folders simulating regulation racing dope sheet. Front page copy illustrated with running horses read: "Free specials. The clockers selection. Here's your sure winner for Kentucky Derby Day." Inside spread detailed the program. As is his practice in this advertising, Stoltz ran outside merchants' copy in both instances to pay all costs.

Morris Holds Search For Local "Foyle"

Ahead of "Kitty Foyle" and recently staged by Seymour Morris at Schine's Palace, in Lockport, N. Y., was a city-wide search to find the local girl whose measurements came closest to those of Ginger Rogers which were listed in cooperating paper. Various merchants were promoted for prizes which included jewelry, beauty treatments, dress, etc. Each of the stores carried a window display plugging the contest and displaying the merchandise. Paper carried a half page co-op furnishing the eight-column head and contest story gratis. Merchants tied their ads around the story. Winner appeared on stage second night, at which time she was presented with the gifts. Herbert Berman, assistant, aided in promoting the prizes and co-op page.

For "This Thing Called Love" Morris distributed novelty cards with red dot, used as a "true love" barometer, these being placed in all factories. Front cover of house program was used for teaser display, inside page carrying regular ad and four days ahead, two-column teaser ads were scattered through the paper, each carrying line on bottom asking reader to turn to next page. The last teaser carried theatre name and playdates.

SCREWY, BUT TERRIFIC

Stanley Benford's idea of de luxe army life, here pictured on behalf of "Buck Privates" at Warners' Colonial, Philadelphia, proved one of the screwiest, but most powerful, attention-grabbers used by the Round Tabler. Regulation tent set up in lobby was furnished with soft bed, rocking chair, bathtub, fireplace—all placarded in keeping for laughs. Exterior was bannered to read: "Camp Dinkleberry Sample Tent, Interior Decorations by Buck Privates Bud Abbott and Lou Costello. Finishing Touches by the Andrews Sisters".

Sullivan Ties Libraries To "Cheers for Miss Bishop"

Lin Sullivan, acting manager at Warner's Grand, Camden, N. J., arranged an ambitious book marker campaign for "Cheers for Miss Bishop." All tieups were executed in exchange for passes with bookmarks going to Camden High School, public library, lending libraries and inserted in cooperating merchant's laundry bundles. Theatreman also arranged personal contacts with newspapers and radio stations which brought numerous plugs.

For "Come Live With Me," Sullivan promoted a 15-minute radio program over WCAM in addition to spot announcements each day of picture's playdates. Sound truck was sent to industrial plants as men were leaving and through tieups with drug and ice cream parlors a "Hedy Lamarr" sundae was featured.

Calendar Nites Proved Successful for Thomas

Catering to all classes of income groups in a 3,500 population town, Jack Thomas at the Strand, in Clarksville, Ark., seeking for some way to bolster his Tuesday and Wednesday dates, has recently inaugurated Calendar Nites. Measuring 11 by nine inches, the monthly calendars were printed at no cost to the theatre since four merchants' ads at bottom covered entire expense. Folks were advised to clip ads and present it at the boxoffice, where it would be good for one on nights designated when accompanied by paid adult admission. This brought about a cheaper admission without actually lowering prices and proved highly profitable.

Distribution of the calendars themselves is made house-to-house in town and rural districts to a select mailing list. Thomas reports that business has increased over 40 per cent on these two nights since the gag went into effect.

"LITTLE MEN" CAMPAIGNS STRESS SMART HOOKUPS

Greater N. Y. RKO Managers Obtain Exploitation Coverage To Win Borden-Elsie Prizes

Following the recent announcements of the winners in the RKO-"Little Men" exploitation contest, reported are the entries by the RKO managers in the metropolitan area to whom special prizes were provided. First went to Harry Lyons, Alden, second to Ansel Weinstein, 58th Street, third to John G. Heinz, of Keith's Flushing, fourth to R. F. Hodgdon, Bushwick, fifth to Frank Howard, Dyker, sixth to Michael Edelstein, Tilyou, Coney Island, and last to Sam Taub of the Royal. Highlights of what the boys did are here set down:

Lyons Entry Voted Best

The best campaign was submitted by Harry Lyons, manager of the RKO Alden, Jamaica, Long Island, for which he won the first prize. Not only did Lyons employ every conceivable stunt, but he also presented it in a most original form. A miniature cow stall, with a solid wooden gate, when opened revealed two wooden bound books.

One of the highlights of Lyons' campaign was a live milking contest. A tie-up was arranged with a Long Island dairy to bring three prize winning Ayrshire cows to the stage of the Alden, for a "Little Men" milking contest, with a city magistrate officiating as master of ceremonies and official judge. Another stunt was "photo with Elsie" contest, in which life-size blowup was made of the cow, with a milkmaid alongside. The head of the girl was cut out, and contestants were posed with their heads inserted in opening. Photographer, with blowup visited busy spots. Those whose photos appeared in lobby were admitted free.

"Handsome Milkman" Featured

The Borden Drivers' Handsomest Milkman contest was another attention getter. Lyons arranging with Borden's to have their drivers compete in a "Handsomest" milkman contest on stage. Nippled bottles of Borden's milk were given to winners. On a "Borden" night, a drivers "perfect leg" contest was held on stage, in connection with other activities.

A "milk recipe" contest, in which contestants sent in recipes in which milk was used also received much publicity. Lyons also included extensive street ballys, tie ups with merchants for window displays, as well as giveaways, theatre parties for orphans, lucky number contests, tie ups with public libraries, schools, etc. Lyons, who is in the division headed by C. B. McDonald, was assisted in his winning campaign by Fred Herkowitz, press agent, and Barney Feingold, assistant manager.

Weinstein Stages Parade

The second prize winner was Manager Ansel Weinstein of the RKO 58th Street Theatre, in the Sol Schwartz division. He was aided by John Hamill, assistant manager. The highlights of Weinstein's campaign for "Little Men," included the following: parade on Lexington Avenue; a two-man cow street bally; free Borden's chocolate milk to children; "Elsie" limerick contest over station WINS; Borden's Times Square Milk bar display; 3,000 lucky number heralds and window display; optical illusion display from the Museum of Science and Industry.

Heinz Stresses Ballyhoos

John G. Heinz, manager of Keith's Flushing, also in the C. B. McDonald division, was awarded third prize for his efforts in behalf of "Little Men" and Elsie. James Downey is assistant manager of this theatre, and Fred Herkowitz, publicist.

Heinz's street ballyhoos deserve special mention. They included an attractively decorated horse and carriage; an auto parade and Maritime Brigade Night and walking book and two-man cow bally. Milk bottle stoppers with copy, were distributed by Borden's in Flushing and North Shore, L. I., and Borden's delivery wagons were bannered. There was a story broadcast over WWRL daily for one full week, and 5,000 special color contest throwaways were distributed.

The extensive campaign of R. F. Hodgdon, manager of the RKO Bushwick Theatre in the Louis Goldberg division won the fourth prize. Pat Grosso is press agent for this theatre, and Joseph Fellman, assistant manager. Hodgdon employed many of the aforementioned stunts, plus an Elsie Borden Quiz contest on stage. They also had a cow costume, which members of the audience donned for stage stunts.

The fifth prize was given to Manager Frank Howard of the RKO Dyker (Goldberg Division). His assistant manager is Herbert Bonis. Howard promoted a record number of window displays with neighborhood merchants, which attracted much attention. School buses were also bannered, and English teachers and club and civic leaders in neighborhood were invited as guests of theatre.

Edelstein Works Kid Shows

Michael Edelstein, manager of the RKO Tilyou in Coney Island, claimed the sixth award. Assisted by his aide, Richard McDevitt, and publicist, Pat Grosso, Edelstein concentrated part of his campaign on school tie ups. He had Borden's vitamin booklets distributed at local schools and also at theatre's Kiddie Shows. Borden's Quiz Contest, essays and debates were held in all schools and announcements were made in all English classes. They also succeeded in having a "Little Men" trailer shown in some of the schools. One of the outstanding street ballys was a parade with milk trucks prior to film's opening.

The last local prize was awarded to Sam Taub, for the Royal Theatre, although since that time Mr. Taub has been appointed as manager of the Chester Theatre. His assistant was David Huber. Taub also had many school tie-ups. He gave talks at schools and followed this by sending bags of caramels to the children. He also succeeded in having plastic heads of Elsie displayed in numerous stores.

DIVE BOMBER
(Warner Brothers)

Air Drama (Technicolor)

Executive producer, Hal B. Wallis. Associate producer, Robert Lord. Directed by Michael Curtiz.

SYNOPSIS

The Three Top Hats, aerial bombardiers, after some years of companionship, are about to be separated because Swede Larson (Louis Jean Heydt) plans to marry. The three are now attached to an aircraft carrier in Honolulu. But Swede doesn't get married. He is mortally wounded in his last flight and a desperate effort on the part of a doctor, Douglas Lee (Errol Flynn), fails and Swede dies.

Joe Blake (Fred MacMurray) and Tim Griffin (Regis Toomey), Swede's pals, in a way blame Doug for the death of their friend. Doug determines to become a flight surgeon, one of a small group of specialists whose duty it is to keep pilots in the air. Doug leaves Honolulu and Linda Fisher (Alexis Smith), his lady friend, and reports at the U. S. Naval Air Base, San Diego, for advanced training. As Doug advances he is thrown more and more together with Dr. Lance Rogers (Ralph Bellamy), research specialist in the flight surgery field. They work out new techniques.

Then one day, one such test reveals that Tim must be grounded because he has declined to a state of chronic fatigue. Grounded, Tim leaves the Navy, joins a British civilian flying unit, ferrying war planes from Los Angeles to Canada. Within three days he is dead. After Tim's death, Joe realizes the full importance of the work Doug, Lance and other flight surgeons are doing. He makes his peace with Doug and together they start to design a pressure oxygen suit.

Joe too has reached the chronic fatigue point and is grounded but against orders he takes off to test the oxygen suit. Up in the stratosphere the supply lines freeze and Joe crashes to his death, but not before he has jotted down final instructions to Doug. He is given a hero's burial.

UNHOLY PARTNERS
(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Romantic Melodrama

Produced by Hunt Stromberg. Directed by Clarence Brown.

SYNOPSIS

In Bombay, India, Gerald Meldrick (Clark Gable) plans to steal "The Star of Asia," a diamond pendant owned by the Duchess of Beltravers (Jessie Ralph). He poses as an agent of Lloyds of London, successfully duping Inspector Cressney (Matthew Boulton) and two hotel attaches (Edward Cianelli and Luis Alberni). Meldrick, an erstwhile British army officer cashiered out of service, is wanted by the police of several nations.

His plans are complicated by the arrival of Anya von Duren (Rosalind Russell), who poses as a countess in attempting the theft of the same diamond. Anya, believing Gerald to be a Lloyds agent, encourages him to fall in love with her. Gerald becomes suspicious of her, however, and when she succeeds in getting the jewel, he relieves her of the diamond, still pretending to be a Lloyd's agent.

In fleeing Bombay, both board a tramp steamer manned by a villainous skipper and a polyglot crew. Anya's suspicions that Gerald is not what he pretends are verified when he admits his duplicity and proposes that they combine forces. In Hong Kong, Gerald decides to elude the police by assuming a British uniform. Anya aids him by making a rendezvous with a Lieutenant Huston. They plan to strip him of his uniform. Huston is attacked by a band of thugs and is fatally wounded. Gerald and Anya discover that Huston was on a secret mission.

Gerald impersonates the officer and carries out the latter's mission—the evacuation of civilians in an outlying post. Gerald is wounded and earns a citation. He eludes identification, however, by producing Huston and by letting it be assumed that the lieutenant himself carried out the mission. Gerald is then reunited with Anya.

KISS THE BOYS GOOD-BYE
(Paramount)

Comedy

Produced by Paul Jones. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Based on the play by Clare Boothe.

Cindy Lou Bethany (Mary Martin), New York chorus girl, is convinced her voice can bring her stardom if she can find a director or producer who will listen to her. She applies for a part in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," Civil War epic about to be placed in production. When she arrives, Dick Rayburn (Oscar Levant), composer of the theme song, Lloyd Lloyd (Don Ameche), stage director, and Bert Fisher (Jerome Cowan), producer, are in an argument with Myra Stanhope (Barbara Allen), star of previous Fisher musicals. Myra walks out on them. They decide to go south to find a genuine example of old southern charm.

Cindy Lou precedes them to her old home, Magnolia Manor, in Georgia. When their train stops at Magnolia, Cindy Lou has Lloyd arrested on the pretext that he is Pretty Boy Floyd. The train has gone when the slow-witted deputes are convinced that Floyd had been shot some time back. The party is taken to Magnolia Manor, where Cindy Lou puts on a show for their benefit. Lloyd is not impressed but Rayburn smuggles her on the train back to New York.

In New York, Cindy Lou keeps up her pretense of never having been out of the south. Lloyd announces the search of the south had been fruitless but Rayburn crosses him and sends the story to the press that Cindy Lou is the discovery. Cindy Lou has been making a play for Lloyd but when she learns that Myra is really Lloyd's girl, Cindy Lou drops the pretense at a party and sings a hot number, "That's How I Got My Start," instead of the moonlight and honeysuckle ditty expected of her.

Sick of all the sham, Cindy Lou returns to Magnolia Manor. Lloyd follows but she refuses to see him. Her Aunt Lily Lou (Elizabeth Patterson), sensing the true situation, fires her shotgun in the air as Lloyd pretends to be shot. Cindy Lou rushes to Lloyd.

Eddie misinterprets the visit, thinks she is in love with the crooner.

Eddie begs Dixie to remarry him. She does. Buddy readily turns his attention to Marilyn. As soon as Eddie and Dixie are remarried, though, Eddie, unintentionally reveals his plan to return to his former ways. Dixie refuses to live with him, and tries to obtain a second divorce from Judge Murdock. He refuses her. Eddie, later, begs the judge not to give Dixie a divorce. MY LIFE WITH CAROLINE
(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

Executive producer, William Hawks. Produced and directed by Lewis Milestone. From the French comedy, "Train to Venice," by Louis Verneuil and Georges Berr.

SYNOPSIS

Paco (Gilbert Roland) and Caroline (Anna Lee) are declared the winners of a costume ball contest held for charity at Alpino Lodge in Idaho. Paco, an Argentine millionaire, tells Caroline he loves her. Paco asks her father, Bliss (Charles Winninger), for her hand. Bliss opines that Caroline's husband, Anthony (Ronald Colman), wealthy publisher, should be consulted.

Caroline goes to the airport to take a plane for New York. She is in the bar with Paco and saying: "Do you ever feel suddenly as if what you were doing had happened before?" when Anthony arrives unexpectedly. Anthony turns to the audience and addresses them: "Bless her little heart! I must tell you about that." Anthony proceeds to chronicle one of Caroline's previous involvements and the character of Paco dissolves into that of Paul Martindale (Reginald Gardiner).

Paul, a wealthy, dilettante sculptor (whose bust of Caroline, Anthony is carrying) is at the airport near Palm Beach. As in the Paco episode, Paul in company with Bliss has come to see Caroline off to New York, where she plans to confess her love to her husband and ask him for a divorce. Again Anthony arrives unexpectedly, having previously guessed the situation.

Understanding his easily influenced wife, and loving her too much to let her go, Anthony determines by subtlety to solve his domestic problem. He never misses an opportunity to declare his love. At the same time he manages a fondness for Paul. Thus he makes it difficult for both Caroline and Paul to declare themselves.

Anthony's strategy wins and Caroline returns to him. The scene now dissolves to the opening sequence—the Alpine Lodge airport. Caroline looks up and sees the bust of herself. Knowing Anthony is near, she abruptly walks away from Paco and seeks her husband. An unexpected spectator of this reunion is Paul, who chances by. As he stands there staring he is joined by Bliss and Paco. They go into the bar.

The chase leads to the cabin of Coot Royal (John Qualen), shiftless hill-billy. In the cabin are Elvy (Dorothy Adams), Granny Becky (Marjorie Main) and a baby suffering from whooping cough. Finding nothing there the revenuers go on to the cabin of Jim Lane (Tom Fadden). Jim invites them in but the revenuers are in a hurry and depart. When they leave, Jim collapses as the result of a bullet wound in his shoulder. He is the "moonshiner."

Jim's daughter, Sammy (Betty Field), is treating her father's wound with primitive cures when Daniel Howitt (Harry Carey), The Shepherd, appears at the door of the cabin. He orders hot water and dresses Jim's wounds professionally. Sammy, usually suspicious of strangers, trusts him. Later, Young Matt (John Wayne), a moonshiner, drops by and she tells him Howitt is a cousin. Matt's mother, Sarah Matthews, died in giving him birth. Mollie Matthews (Beulah Bondi), an evil, vicious minded woman, has convinced young Matt that it is his duty to kill his father who wronged Sarah when she went to the city. Old Matt (James Barton), nominal head of the family, is dominated by Mollie. Another member of the family is Pete (Marc Lawrence), a wild-eyed creature of the woods.

Howitt sets out to make the region a better place to live. He employs Pete to help him with his sheep. Pete makes more money by tending sheep than Young Matt does with his moonshining. The Shepherd (Howitt) has meanwhile learned that Young Matt is his son. Pete notices the resemblance between Young Matt and Howitt and tells Sammy.

Howitt tells Young Matt he is his father. Mollie goads the boy on to kill Howitt. She gives Young Matt a gun and Pete grabs it away from him. Mollie chases Pete and in the struggle for the gun, Pete is shot and dies. Howitt and Young Matt fight and the son goes down with a bullet in his side. Mollie, in lighting candles, sets fire to her cabin and dies in the flames.

Howitt and Young Matt forget their differences and are reunited. Young Matt and Sammy plan to marry.

Bertram Erasmus Dillsome (Ted North), associate professor at St. Vincent's College, is interrupted, while experimenting with astronomical matters, by students from Miss Merton's School for Young Ladies. One of the students, Dime Pringle (Marjorie Weaver), is attracted to Dillsome. When Dillsome's aunt wills Dillsome a beauty salon in a hotel for women, he takes charge of it much to the surprise of his associates.

Bertram is put forth as Dr. Erasmus of Europe, a modern Ponce de Leon who has found the Fountain of Youth. Business booms. Then a woman jumps from a window of the salon to her death. Dottie (Joan Davis), who worked with Dillsome's aunt, announces that she intends to leave. Sweet, investigating the woman's death, is slugged and winds up in a hospital.

Dillsome is offered a price for the beauty salon but refuses much to the indignation of his late aunt's attorney, Middlesex (Pierre Watkin). MOONLIGHT IN HAWAII (Universal)

Comedy, Music

Associate producer, Ken Goldsmith. Directed by Charles Lamont.

SYNOPSIS

When Pete Fleming (Johnny Downs) and his quartet, which includes himself, Ollie Barrett (Judd McMichael), Red Simpson (Ted McMichael) and Beans Smith (Joe McMichael) fail to make good on the radio, Pete deserts the act and becomes a tourist guide. Pete escorts the wealthy Mrs. Floto (Marjorie Gateson) and her nieces, Mary Lou (Marie Lou Cook), Doris (Elaine Morey) and Gloria (Sunnie O'Dea) to Hawaii. The three boys stow away on the boat.

Ollie, Red and Beans "move in on" Pete at the hotel in Honolulu. When Pete goes to round up his party for dinner, the boys follow. Their loud knocking at various doors annoys Toby Spencer (Jane Frazee) who hits them over the head with her handbag. When they finally locate the girls, Beans pairs off with Mary Lou, Ollie with Doris and Red with Gloria.

During dinner Ollie, Red and Beans start singing and Mary Lou joins them. Pete takes Toby out into the moonlight, and they sing a song together. She apologizes for her former conduct, and urges Pete to renew his efforts to become a radio star. She suggests her father, Walter Spencer (Leon Errol) as a possible sponsor. Spencer owns a large cannery.

Spencer and the man who supplies him pineapple, get into a terrific argument and dissolve their partnership, leaving Spencer with no pineapples to can.

Spencer and Lawton, the pineapple grower, vie for the affection of Mrs. Floto, with the intervention of the alluring Ilani (Maria Montez), "professonal Hawaiian" from Brooklyn, complicating matters further. Mrs. Floto cannot decide between Spencer and Lawton, and winds up by marrying an orchestra leader, whose advice she has sought. SYNOPSIS

The Ozark mountain home of Abner and Elviry Weaver is the scene of a party when a cyclone strikes. All the farmhouses in the area are destroyed, and the Weavers, like their neighbors are thrown upon the not-so-tender mercies of the local banker. In the ruins of their home, the Weavers find a tin box containing a promissory note attesting that Abner's great grandfather had lent the American government $200,000 in 1790, the amount payable on demand.

The Weavers go to Washington and learn that their note had automatically become invalid seven years after its date. Then Senator Martin (Andrew Tombes) finds a clause in the note which makes it automatically renewable at the end of each seven year period. With the interest piling up for 150 years, that makes the amount due the Weavers up in the millions.

Paul Conrad (Kane Richmond), Senator Martin's unscrupulous young assistant, plans to trick the Weavers out of their money. He offers them $190,000 for the note but, learning of the clause, they refuse. The fortune goes to their heads. Carol Weaver (Betty Jane Rhodes) responds to the wooing of Conrad; Elviry goes in for grand opera. Cicero takes up polo. Only Abner remains himself.

Abner secretly sends a story to the newspapers that the note is a phoney. The fair-weather friends drop the Weavers. Once he has proved his point, Abner admits he lied. Abner asks the government for only the face value of the note and the Weavers prepare to return home.

JUNGLE GIRL (Republic)

Serial—15 Episodes

Dr. Meredith, an eminent physician, has been driven from civilization by the criminal activities of his twin brother. With his infant daughter, he settled in the African jungle, where his ability to cure the native ills resulted in the virtual control of the Masamba tribes. These tribes possess vast diamond mines which are coveted by a group of crooks.

These men, with the aid of Shamba, a witch doctor jealous of Meredith, lure the physician into a trap and Latimer murders him. The natives believe that a secret amulet was the secret of Meredith's power. Shamba attempts to kill Nyoka, Meredith's daughter, in order to obtain the amulet. She is rescued by Stanton. Latimer works with Shamba, and with Dr. Meredith's brother, who poses as the former so successfully that even his own daughter does not realize the deception.

After several close incidents, Nyoka turns the amulet over to her supposed father. The amulet actually contains the secret to the entrance of the Cave of Nakros. The crooks give the amulet to Shamba in exchange for diamonds. Stanton and native boys capture the diamonds from Meredith. Meredith recaptures the diamonds and is killed by Latimer for double-crossing him. Latimer tries to escape but is killed in a hand-to-hand encounter in the air. Stanton and Nyoka assure the natives that the diamonds will be used to buy medical supplies for the tribe.

HOW TO USE IT

Motion Picture Herald's new and valuable exhibitor service section, Product Digest, is a master index to all information available to date on 1940-41 product and which has been published in the several preceding issues of Product Digest.

Check the title of any feature that you want to look up, turn to the designated page or pages, and you will find all buying and booking information available up to this very minute — synopses, casts, credits, release dates, production numbers, running time, review references, Round Table references and Legion of Decency ratings.

Product Digest is published every other week alternately with the regular Release Chart.

The Release Chart carries, as always, an alphabetical index of titles, a breakdown by companies, star information, release dates, running time and review references. The Release Chart, published every other week, is a compact compilation of certain important booking information.

Product Digest, on alternate weeks, is cumulative, a more extensive compilation of similar information. The Release Chart is complete in itself. Product Digest carries only current information, but if you maintain a complete file of Product Digest, you will have, at your instant service, synopses, casts and other detailed data which could not conceivably be compressed into one issue. The cumulative alphabetical index of Product Digest, however, is a reference to all information that has been printed to date in all the issues of Product Digest.

An introductory issue of Product Digest was mailed to exhibitor subscribers of Motion Picture Herald. If you misplaced your copy or have not saved the subsequent issues, write for duplicates.

THRILL MARKET

DRAMA is synthetic trouble, struggle, excitement, concern, suspense. In primitive days life supplied plenty of it. As civilization came, the hunter became herdsman, farmer, and, in time, industrialist, building ever with precautions for living, with safeguards against thirst, starvation and weather. He fought for peace and comfort, the glow that comes from a full belly in a warm and secure cave.

To some, civilization has given that, for a while.

But still this Man, in his unsubdued inner self, has demanded the old excitements of insecurity, lusted for titilation of his ancient urges, impulses past their utility and so unserved. Out of that the art of entertainment has been born, to supply the thrills, the excitement, the suspense. All of our sports trace to that. All of our arts do, too. We did so much in earnest for so long that we still have to do them, in fun. Uncounted millions of years of nerve and muscle making have built a backlog of urge that our shallow years of civilization cannot satisfy. So we must have prizefight, and polo, and rodeo, and bullfight, baseball, and lacrosse, and tennis, badminton, and chess, crap dice, and poker, and bridge. We love action and suspense and murder, because we have lived with them so long. We like predatory sex, too, even as our forebears went out to drag them home by the hair.

From it all comes drama, and the principal vehicle of drama for all the world has, of late, been the motion picture, competent to do all and say all.

BUT now, for a while, the peace and security of the little nook that we call civilization has not seemed such a shelter. Menace seems to be beating in, like a storm driven by a turn of the wind.

It is war.

This war, this strife of club and hatchet, is being brought to the firesides of once comfortable America. It, for now, presents struggle, excitement, concern. It is calling for the young men, for brawn and skill. The call is reaching into every home where there are those between twenty-one and thirty-five years. It is demanding, in taxes and bonds, the treasures of chimney cranny and bank. The battle cry sounds in every morning's papers, in every evening's radio.

Civilization has turned back the years toward the beginning. There is concern, suspense, excitement enough at home.

There is now, every day, enough to talk about at dinner. There are enough problems to be met. There is drama in every man's day. He does not have to go out and shop for it.

So, one is not to be surprised that as the tensions have increased the box office has found fewer seekers for synthetic concern.

Depending somewhat on the trend of war, the probabilities are that the state of stresses will wear itself down until once again the customers, wearying of the facts, will seek fancy and fiction again. Bombed Britain still goes to the movies.

What has been happening to the box office of the American theatre is not a failure of Production, of Distribution or of Exhibition. It is a consequence of the preoccupation of the customers with more immediate and personal interests.

"The slump" manifest here and there at the box office is, in the judgment of this observer, but a ripple in the sand of the beach where the tides of world events sweep. It is a transitory impress, and it will pass. A hundred and thirty-five million people are not going to forget about amusement for very long.

THE late Mr. Stephen Foster, who died so many years ago, so tragically and obscurely in Bellevue Hospital in New York, at the end of a career in what came to be "Tin Pan Alley", has at last been given a niche in the Hall of Fame. He has left to Americana several titles of mellow sentimental song, laden with dolour, and has become a tradition out of all proportion to historic fact. Had he written but one song, and that one "The Old Folks at Home"—more commonly known by the refrain words of "Suwanee River"—he would still have come to fame. His theme, you will observe, was not of the bawdy blues, no "hot licks" of word or phrase of notes, but just the old folks at home—of the simple in heart.

MASS REACTIONS

SPECIAL interest, in view of the much that has been said and written about the relation of the motion picture to its audience, attaches to remarks made last week by Mr. Howard Dietz before a gathering of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York. Mr. Dietz is advising the Treasury Department in matters pertaining to the propaganda of defense financing. He is getting a close-up, of a special sort, of the war.

Observed the speaker, the motion picture, in any proposal to put messages on the screen, must be aware of a responsibility growing out of the fact that it serves mass audiences, and that mass reactions are not akin to individual reactions, and are not the total of individual reactions. He pointed out that the effect of such an expedient as reading from the columns of any New York City daily paper to an audience of thousands in Central Park would be decidedly different in effect than the reactions of any individual lone reader.

Mr. Dietz, concerned with the problems of war and the problems of the industry, discovers mob psychology as a factor of caution and concern for those who would serve his commonweal.

What is bad in war is also bad in peace. The screen, which has so much to weigh and consider with codes of caution in the national cause in war and struggle for the national existence, has also upon it, always, quite as urgent responsibility in peace, the causes of peace and the living of the people.

Men think, masses feel. The theatre of the multitudes is not a place for reasoning on poignant social issues or complex problems.

Boxoffice Gauge

"WHAT will the picture do at the boxoffice?" is the question which Allied States Association expects to answer for its independent exhibitor members.

Through "very definite and concrete plans," the nature of which were undisclosed, but from which a pre-test has been made of the expected boxoffice performance of feature pictures announced by distributors for national release late in May and throughout June, Allied has pegged its estimates of 20 current releases.

Allied's Information Department, established last year to gather information on product and policy from all members and organization affiliates, will conduct regular "boxoffice forecasts."

AID's boxoffice forecast this week was figured on a basis of national averages, and does not take into consideration occasional territorial differences. It ranks the pictures according to expected boxoffice performance in the nation as a whole, in two groups: Series A—pictures advertised for immediate release late in May to the middle of June; Series B—pictures advertised for release from the middle of June to early July.

"Taking into consideration the fact that general boxoffice receipts now are 20 per cent to 30 per cent below normal," the report observes," it is expected that "In the Navy" will compare with "They Drive by Night" business; "The Getaway" will compare with "Dark Streets of Cairo"; "Caught in the Draft" will compare with the business done on "The Sea Hawk"; and "Hurry, Charlie, Hurry," also with "Dark Streets of Cairo."

The AID predictions of what the 20 current releases will do nationally at the boxoffice follows:

Title	Company	Rank
Series A:
In the Navy	Universal	1st
Blood and Sand	20th-Fox	2nd
Billy the Kid	MGM	3rd

Talent 'Trust' Breakup

TALENT bureaus of CBS and NBC which control management of 800 artists, including 400 radio performers, are breaking up, as a result of the FCC report on anti-monopoly operations in radio.

Artists' commissions to CBS netted more than $750,000 in 1938, with another $700,000 going to NBC.

CBS has already announced the pending sale of Columbia Artists, Inc., to Music Corporation of America. The deal must be ratified by stockholders. MCA is reputedly paying $175,000 for the bureau, which reported a gross business of $194,757, with a net profit of $82,671, for the year ending January 1, 1938.

Officials of NBC's artist bureau have been dickering with the William Morris Agency, the General Amusement Corporation and Al Bloomingdale, of the department store family, who is now in the show business. This sale will include concert, lecture, theatre and radio artists under NBC management, ininclding some of radio's top-ranking performers.

Fifty-five per cent of CBS stock in Columbia Concerts will be bought back by the concert managers who have been directing the bureau for the last 11 years. The corporation did a gross business for the year ending June 7, 1938, of $426,413, showing a net profit of $94,033. Purchase price of the stock is estimated at about $500,000. Some of America's leading artists are represented by the bureau, including: Lily Pons, Grace Moore, Lawrence Tibbett, Paul Robeson, Nelson Eddy, Josef Hofmann, Jascha Heifetz, Yehudi Menuhin, Jose Iturbi, Richard Crooks and Lotte Lehmann.

Columbia Management of California, Inc., a subsidiary of CBS' Artists Bureau, representing 85 clients, will go over to MCA as soon as the New York deal is approved by the stockholders.

Arousing the Curious

GLAMOUR girls need not always be glamorous to attract the cash customers, it is noted in the advertising slant chosen by Earle W. Hudson, president, and Ralph Stitt, advertising head, of United Detroit Theatres, for the date on MGM's "A Woman's Face" at the United Detroit.

Departing immeasurably from the expected, the theatremen took clips from the print showing the scarred face of Joan Crawford and blew up the pictures for insertion in newspaper advertising, as illustrated in this week's Managers' Round Table (see page 63).

Blocks-of-5 Test Due

THE majors are to file their suit to test the constitutionality of the Minnesota anti-blocks-of-five booking law next week. Louis Phillips, Paramount attorney, said in New York Wednesday, "The papers are now in work."

The suit will probably be filed by all of the five major signatories to the Federal consent decree, which enforces the blocks-of-five method of selling. They are expected to move in the Minneapolis Federal Court for a temporary injunction, asserting the Minnesota law interferes with a Federal court decree applying to interstate commerce. Further speculation is that they will then attack the state law as unconstitutional because a Federal court decree allegedly supersedes state laws.

Meanwhile, exchanges of the five majors in Minneapolis are delivering film only under present orders; not making new contracts.

Doug Reports

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, JR., of Hollywood, touring South America for President Roosevelt in the interests of goodwill and cultural relations among the Americas, took to the air, last Saturday night, to personally report to the world at large on his progress. It appears that this was the first time Mr. Fairbanks has so reported.

Inquiries about the actor's progress, directed to the White House, where the appointment of "special envoy" was made, and to the State Department and the Rockefeller-Whitney committee in Washington for coordinating Latin American cultural relations, brought the response: "No reports yet."

It will be remembered that the appointment of Mr. Fairbanks caused an exchange of heated correspondence in Washington diplomatic circles.

At 3:45 P.M. Saturday, Columbia Broadcasting System's Herbert M. Clark, in Buenos Aires, was tuned in, at New York, via short wave, to announce a Q. and A. interview with Mr. Fairbanks.

"What about the film industry in South America?," the actor was asked.

"Tremendously improved," he reported. "I have seen a number of studios and films and was impressed by them all. They should be sending pictures to us soon and we should be exchanging technicians. I remember Great Britain's film industry in its early stages. Experts went back and forth and greatly improved the industry."

Q. "Is it true that a good many of our (Hollywood) pictures irritated people here because of the misconceptions of their way of living?"

A. "Well, for the past couple of years I have been busy in politics and other affairs and I have been out of the picture. However, I understand that they have recently instituted a self-censorship board in Hollywood for pictures of and about South America."

"South Americans want us to come down not as 'goodwill missions' but as human beings and tourists as we used to travel in Europe or Hawaii."

THE EMERGENCY

¶ In the existing international crisis the policy of the nation has been defined. United and determined support of the policy as defined therefore becomes the first order of business of the nation.

¶ Every person, however placed, and every activity, however constituted, must recognize that automatically it has become enlisted in the service of the nation. The extent of the obligation is limited only by the capacity to serve.

¶ The industry of the motion picture, on account of leadership of vision and understanding, supported by a characteristic industry-wide anxiety to discharge the full measure of its opportunity and responsibility, finds itself now well-organized and well-prepared to dedicate its facilities to the advancement of the nation's policy. Much already has been done by the motion picture in cooperating with various government establishments and agencies; more and still more will be done.

¶ The unique capacity of the motion picture in graphically conveying vital information to citizens both in the Services and in civil life will render an invaluable service. The inestimably great contribution of the motion picture toward the maintenance and betterment of morale for the whole of the citizenry will again be demonstrated.

¶ The industry, in the whole of its personnel and in all of its capacities, has heard the sounding of the "alert" and will not go off watch unless and until the nation's purposes have triumphed.

MARTIN QUIGLEY.

MGM's Decree Plans

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER will wait until the first three blocks-of-five pictures have been distributed before determining whether or not the new order of consent decree operations requires a change in production methods, according to present plans. This is the first indication of the company's real intentions under the new selling order.

After the consent decree regulation that not more than five pictures can be sold in any one group has been in effect about three months, MGM studio executives feel that enough information will then be available to determine what alterations, if any, will be needed in production planning.

O'Connor Set at 'U'

FOLLOWING a meeting of the board of directors, Nate Blumberg, president of Universal, Tuesday announced the appointment of John J. O'Connor as vice-president and executive assistant to the president, effective immediately.

Mr. Blumberg said: "Universal's acquisition of Mr. O'Connor is in line with the company's policy of maintaining a close exhibitor association."

The appointment is in the nature of a reunion. Both were long associated in the operation of RKO Theatres and when Mr. Blumberg became president of Universal, in 1938, Mr. O'Connor assumed Mr. Blumberg's RKO position of vice-president and general manager.

Universal this week also promoted William J. Heineman to assistant general sales manager, named Fred Meyers eastern sales manager and F. J. A. McCarthy southern and Canadian sales chief, effecting a complete shift in field operations, as described on page 48.

POWER SHORTAGE, GASOLINELESS SUNDAYS SEEN ATTENDANCE FACTORS

Week-end Attendance Increase Predicted; Theatres in the South Seriously Affected by Lack of Rain and Electricity

Brand new national defense problems are present and pending to influence motion picture theatre receipts, both up and down.

On the downward side are the power shortages spreading in the South to black-out the fronts of movie houses and other business establishments.

Of favorable potentialities are the gasolineless Sundays, virtually promised by Petroleum Coordinator Harold Ickes, which already are being discussed by long-range exhibitor observers as aiding theatres in those places which lose to Sunday summer touring to the outdoors.

The power shortage in the south comes both from defense needs and a serious drought, appearing rather suddenly to affect theatres in Georgia, eastern Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Mississippi and Alabama.

Petroleum rations, with a resultant decrease in Sunday driving through restricted gasoline sales on that day, and a possible lowering by five degrees of oil heat in homes and public buildings are forecast in a survey of the American Petroleum Institute. The report was submitted to the OPM and Secretary Ickes on Tuesday.

Although available supplies of fuel oil will be distributed on a pro rata basis and federal price controls are expected to curb speculative rises in oil heating costs, large scale users of fuel oil such as theatres, are being urged by dealers to place immediate orders for their next winter's supply.

War Affects Attendance

Generally, the box office barometer, hovering in May around an all-time low mark for this time of year, a situation brought about by a public mind preoccupied by war and around-the-clock defense manufacturing, turned upward during the week with the turn of June. Some of the most authoritative national and local industry conservatives, whose identities remain anonymous by request, this week admitted that the box office slump reached its worse low in years during May, but added that now the corner has been turned and by August, they predict, a boom in box office business.

They, too, saw box office possibilities in gasolineless Sundays in the east for exhibitors who are seriously disturbed, business-wise, by the competition of the Summer's outdoors.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD, last week (May 31 issue, pages 29 and 30), reported that the box office slump in May had reached 30 per cent under normal, with war blamed almost universally in the U. S. However, unexpectedly, over the weekend, the declining line of the box office graph suddenly turned upward, as much as 35 per cent in New York, despite all of the outside competition of the three-day Memorial Day holiday observed in most states.

'GIVE US BIG ONES, WE'LL QUIT DOUBLES'

"If we could get a sufficient number of really big pictures, I would immediately return to a single feature policy," declared J. Real Neth, president and general manager of the Neth chain of neighborhood houses, in Columbus, Ohio. "It is my personal belief that a good feature augmented by a variety of shorts and a newsreel comprise the ideal entertainment."

To test audience reaction and preference, Mr. Neth recently played "The Devil and Miss Jones" on a single bill at the State theatre, while double featuring it with "Free and Easy" at the Eastern. House managers checking audience comment reported approximately 80 per cent receptive to single features, some having driven their cars from the extreme end of the city to attend. A few were indifferent, as they were "simply going to the theatre," and several walked away when they discovered that only a single feature was being shown.

When subsequently playing "The Great Dictator" on a single bill simultaneously at the State and Markham theatres, business was reported considerably better than reported for double features.

and city officials have already hinted that all night entertainment will be curtailed unless conditions are relieved in a few days.

Scattered rains of the past week failed to bring much relief to the parched areas of Southeast United States where crops and sources of electric power are suffering critically. Several larger communities of Mississipi, Alabama, Georgia, South and North Carolina and east Tennessee are co-operating with "blackouts" of all "white-ways"

While civilian consumers have co-operated by eliminating as many lights as possible in homes, authorities say that the situation is not improved as many streams, dependent for hydro-generation become mere tricklets. In several communities of north Mississippi and Alabama, abandoned steam power plants are being returned to aid in the over-bearing drain on TVA power lines.

While no theatres have as yet closed down, it is feared that they may be darkened by more stringent rulings in the near future. In many areas of the Southeast, there has been no rain since early April.

William K. Jenkins, partner with Arthur Lucas in the Lucas & Jenkins Circuit, declared, "The situation caused by the worst drought in Georgia in 37 years, has now reached a most acute stage and is seriously affecting business.

"The farm crops have not even begun to grow, and in many sections there is not more than half a stand of cotton. Many farmers are hoping for an early rain so that they can replant before it is too late," he added.

This unprecedented drought is described as having created an emergency in the hydro-electric plants, whose reservoirs are practically dry. This condition, in turn, has brought about a most drastic electric conservation program resulting in all theatres in Georgia eliminating entirely the burning of electric upright signs, marquee borders, etc., and reduction in the use of air conditioning equipment, all of which discourages theatre patronage.

In Atlanta, the Retail Merchant's Association agreed to eliminate all illuminated signs and window lighting. The city discontinued the use of the "white-way" system, and this, with the dark fronts of the theatres, makes this city look as though a blackout was being rehearsed.

The drastic curtailment of electric power to conserve energy for industrial defense units in the South has turned the 370,000-population metropolis of Atlanta into an almost "blacked out" city.

Cooperating to the fullest in the plea by cabinet members and power officials, Atlanta theatres have turned off the bright lights of the marquees and are using only those few essential lights needed to announce the attractions. Show windows in department stores are dark and highway lights are off.

Atlanta Business Off

Saturday night, usually characterized by gay throngs, found Atlanta's famed Peachtree Street almost deserted. One could walk two blocks without passing more than four or five people. Theatre managers stood outside their houses, with only small groups going in.

Theatres were among the first to pledge full cooperation in the reduction of power consumption in the Southeast by one-third.

Circuit-owner Jenkins said his company's 58 theatres in Georgia would "co-operate to the fullest extent because it is a patriotic duty to do so."

The emergency air-conditioning schedule adopted—which, it was stressed, is within the comfort zone—means that the base setting will be raised to 83 degrees with a relative humidity of 65 per cent, instead of the common practice to operate air-conditioning units at approximately a 10 to 12-degree differential from outside temperature, with a base setting usually at approximately 78 degrees and relative humidity approximately 50 per cent.

With the nation's electric power industry expanding to meet the challenges of defense production, "an allegation of (defense, not drought) power shortage is unwarranted," C. W. Kellogg, president of the Edison Elecric Institute, said in Buffalo Tuesday.

Addressing the institute's convention, he told the utility executives and electrical manufacturers the "power situation will be found to have been adequately provided for."

HOLLYWOOD 'ALL OUT' FOR WAR, DEFENSE, SABOTAGE AND ESPIONAGE

46 Features and Five Serials Background Those Subjects; Each of 11 Large Distributors Has from One to Ten

Marking a direct about-face from the policy of abstaining from any films dealing with the international powder-keg, which prevailed 20 months ago during the Chamberlain appeasement days, Hollywood now has embarked on an "all out" production schedule of pictures dealing with World War II, national defense preparations of the United States, sabotage and espionage, with 46 features and five serials being backgrounded on these subjects.

The eight major companies and the three independents all have from one to ten films based on these subjects, the majority of which have American characters and scenes.

Paramount leads the list with ten, either finished or being prepared; Warners is next with nine. RKO has six; Universal, five (including one serial); Monogram and M-G-M, four each; Columbia, four (including three serials); 20th Century-Fox, three; Republic, three (including one serial); United Artists, two; Producers Releasing Corp., one.

Virtually every type of story is included in the films—from farce comedy to spectacle and action melodrama.

Many Comedies, Musicals

With the start of World War II in September, 1939, producers trod lightly when pictures with war-time backgrounds were mentioned. As American consciousness of the need for intensive defense preparations grew, so did the number of pictures based on military themes.

Now, with the United States declared in a state of unlimited national emergency, the number of such films is being steadily increased, with additions almost weekly.

Significant is the fact that many of the proposed pictures are comedies and musical productions.

Paramount, with its spectacle of Army flying, "I Wanted Wings," about to go into general release after pre-release engagements, and "Caught in the Draft," starring Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour in a farce comedy, already previewed, has eight more films on espionage, sabotage and defense preparations planned.

"Tomorrow's Admirals," which Paramount expects to do for the Navy what "I Wanted Wings" did for the Army, will be made on a high budget, and tentatively set to star are William Holden and Stirling Hayden. Miss Lamour and Eddie Bracken will be given top billing in "The Fleet's In," a farce comedy. In work is "Flying Blind," Richard Arlen-Jean Parker aviation drama being produced by William C. Thomas and William H. Pine for Paramount release. The two producers also have purchased "Torpedo Boat," a story of the United States mosquito fleet.

"War Town," describing the building of an Army cantonment and the attendant civilian "Boom town," will be made on a high budget. The studio also has three spy dramas: "Channel Fort," to star Ray Milland, "The Lady Has Plans" and "Dangerous Holiday."

Eight pictures finished, in work or being prepared on war, espionage and other matters pertaining thereto, are on tap at Warners. Six of them have to do with strictly American topics. Dennis Morgan and Priscilla Lane have been tentatively cast in "The Battle of the Atlantic," story of American convoys. George Raft and Olivia de Havilland will star in "All Through the Night," a comedy in which American gangsters resent the "muscling in" of foreign agents who desire to take over America and battle them to save the country for themselves.

The Navy at Warners

"Dive Bomber," Technicolor extravaganza of Navy flying with a cast of Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray and Ralph Bellamy, to mention a few of the top names, is currently in work. "Sergeant York," the tale of the World War I hero, is being given its final editing touches. "Navy Blues" is being developed as an elaborate musical with a Navy background. "Private Smith, U.S.A." is a draftee comedy to be directed by Edward Sutherland.

Other war theme pictures at Warners, but having European backgrounds, are: "Underground," dealing with anti-Nazi "underground" activities in Germany and ending with the picturization of the flight of Rudolph Hess, No. 3 Nazi (from Germany to England); "Flight Patrol," featuring James Stephenson and Ronald Reagan in a story of the R.A.F., and "Background to Danger," narrative of an R.A.F. flier.

RKO is reviving the team of "Quirt" and "Flagg"—Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe—for "The Marines Are Ready," and has given them a strong supporting cast including Jack Holt and his son, Tim. "Parachute Battalion," a tale of the American parachute soldiers' training, is being edited, having been made with the cooperation of the Army. Michele Morgan's first American picture, "Journey into Fear," treating of espionage in Turkey, has been deferred pending developments in that war theatre, and "Joan of Paris," having to do with present day Nazi-occupied Paris, substituted.

The studio last week purchased "Modern Merry Widows," comedy of "draft widows," from Adela Rogers St. John and Charles Belden, who will do the script. Lucille Ball and Anne Shirley have been pencilled in for the leads. Harold Lloyd has a comedy about espionage, "My Favorite Spy," in preparation, and chances are that RKO will release it.

Universal, having rung the box office bell with Abbott and Costello's "Buck Privates," has embarked on a program of placing the ex-vaudeville actors in a series of service pictures. Previewed last week was the comedians' film with Dick Powell co-starring, "In the Navy." Planned are two more service pictures with the pair, one to be about the air service and the other about the Marines.

Another national defense theme picture is "Flying Cadets," story of pre-army flying training in which William Gargan, Edmund Lowe and Peggy Moran are featured. A serial, "Sea Raiders," with the "Dead End"—"Little Tough Guys" group being given the top roles, falls into the category, its background being the use of a new type of destroyer by the American Navy.

Having released "Roar of the Press" and "King of the Zombies," the former having a background of sabotage and the latter of Nazi encroachment in the West Indies, Monogram has no other like pictures for the remainder of the season. In active preparation stages for the start of the 1941-42 program are "Army Hostess," "Top Sergeant Mulligan," "Here Come the Marines" and "Navy Bound."

Three serials and a musical comedy are to be Columbia's contribution to the national defense cycle. The chapter plays, all on Larry Darmour's schedule, are "The Spider Returns," with Warren Hull, telling of sabotage of national defense preparations and which is already finished; "Holt of the Secret Service," starring Jack Holt and with an espionage background, and "Captain Midnight," from the Mutual network strip, telling of Nazi activities in South America. The musical comedy is "You'll Never Get Rich," starring Fred Astaire and Rita Hayworth.

MGM has several pictures dealing with Fascist activities and espionage in the United States on its schedule, one of them "Young Americans," already in work with Bonita Granville, Ray McDonald and Leo Gorcey in the leads. The story is about a group of youngsters uncovering an espionage ring. A recent purchase is "Bugles Blow at Midnight," unpublished novel by William Lipman dealing with the plot of a group of American fascists gaining control of a big city newspaper and putting up their own candidate for the presidency.

Others are "Combat Car," vehicle for Wallace Beery and to be made with the cooperation of the armored divisions of the United States Army, and "30,000 Horses," story of sending American airplanes to Canada for shipment to Britain.

Laurel and Hardy Back

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy will make their return to the screen in 20th Century-Fox' "Forward March," draft comedy which Monty Banks will direct. "Confirm or Deny," dealing with wire services in London during the current war and the effect of their operations on American newspapers, is also on the schedule.

Shooting now is "A Yank in the R.A.F." starring Tyrone Power and telling the story of an American in the Royal Air Force.

Republic, reporting excellent response to "Rookies on Parade," musical of life in a selective service encampment, plan at least two more musicals with service backgrounds. They are "Gobs in Blue," to feature Mary Lee, Leni Lynn and Eddie Foy, Jr., and "Navy Blue Eyes." The latter title was the original for "Gobs in Blue."

A serial, "King of the Texas Rangers," starring "Slinging Sammy" Baugh, football star, in the title role, will deal with Fifth Columnists in America.

United Artists producers Edward Small and Walter Wanger each have a film contributing to the cycle. Small is currently shooting "International Lady," starring George Brent, Ilona Massey and Basil Rathbone.

"The Eagle Squadron" is still on the preparation schedule at Wanger's, with Merian C. Cooper, who will be the producer, having made a trip to England to obtain shots of the R.A.F. in action for use in the film.

TRAILERS BOOST FILMS GENERALLY

Films are the best, the least expensive, the most satisfying form of entertainment in the world. This is the message that the Lucas and Jenkins circuit of the Georgia territory is giving its customers, via special trailers, run after the showing of a feature. The trailers also point out the function of films in a period when people are trying to forget numerous worries.

Silverstone and Pickford Unit Ready in 2 Weeks

Details about the new Maurice Silverstone-Mary Pickford producing aggregation, will be disclosed shortly, Miss Pickford said on Monday, as she arrived in New York at the same time as her new associate, Mr. Silverstone, who resigned last week as United Artists chief of world-wide operations.

Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president in charge of sales, is temporary administrative head, replacing Mr. Silverstone. When a permanent head is appointed, he will continue in his sales post, Miss Pickford said.

Details Soon

Miss Pickford said organization of the new producing company would be completed between June 15th and 30th, so it could plan for the new season. She added her role would be advisory and financial. She admitted negotiations were under way with producers, for association with the new company, but refused their names. She said producers in such an association would be financed by the company. Miss Pickford admitted conversations were being held with David Selznick and Frank Capra, for joining UA.

She added, speaking as a UA partner, that she, Charles Chaplin and Alexander Korda, owners of the company, were "completely satisfied" with its sales administration, and that they would continue its policy of obtaining and handling important films from "completely independent producers."

It was learned from Miss Pickford that the company has offered $400,000 to the Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., estate for its one-fifth interest; and that it plans to offer this interest, if obtained, and the one-fifth interest obtained from Samuel Goldwyn, to outstanding producers.

Mr. Silverstone's resignation from his post as worldwide operations chief came Wednesday, May 28th, in Hollywood, and was announced by Miss Pickford, as one of the stockholders who accepted it. On the same day, Mr. Silverstone disclosed he would form his own producing company, for UA release, and that Miss Pickford would be an associate.

Amid a welter of rumors immediately following the news, the opinion accepted by company spokesmen in New York was that the parent releasing company would emerge "bigger and better" as a result of the occurrences, and others to come. It was reported from the Coast that, being offered ownership status in the organization, to succeed Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Fairbanks, were David Selznick and Frank Capra, both independent producers of renown, the former a long-time UA producer.

Contract Settled

The salary status of Mr. Silverstone was reported as follows: he will receive his full salary to this month's end, and 50 per cent of the amount due him thereafter, under his contract, will be paid him, over a time period. It was said this amounts to approximately $150,000.

Mr. Kelly, as the administrative head, was due in New York from the Coast Thursday. It is the second time he is in this capacity. The first time was five years ago, after the resignation of Al Lichtman, who is now with MGM. George Schaefer, now president of RKO, filled Mr. Lichtman's post.

Coast observers, immediately after the appointment of Mr. Kelly as temporary executive head to replace Mr. Silverstone, speculated upon whether he would retain the post. It was said James Mulvey, Eastern representative for Samuel Goldwyn, and a UA vice-president, had declined the position. Also, that David Selznick, the independent producer named as a possible forthcoming UA partner, had been offered the UA captaincy.

Mr. Silverstone, in discussing his plans last Wednesday, shortly after the disclosure of his resignation, said he would have complete charge of his new company. He added his headquarters would be in New York.

Replying to questions concerning his reported intention of purchasing UA stock, so he could also be a UA owner, Mr. Silverstone confirmed it, remarking: "I started negotiations some time ago on that, but pending the start of my new company, I have put them in abeyance."

REPORT from AMERICA

by Terry Ramsaye

WERE you sitting across this desk this afternoon, you, a showman from the home offices of New York or from the panelled sanctums of Hollywood—and if we were talking about pictures and box office—probably your editor would toss into the discussion a certain small town newspaper clipping which just came to hand in the day's mail.

The setting, you understand, would be an office a-top the walls of the grand canyon of Rockefeller Center, mid-town of New York, with the noises of the fevered city blended to something between a roar and a hum. Down below you might observe a clutching effort at peace and beauty in a striving, costly patch called "The Garden of All-Nations" where posies grow, under medicine dropper care, in hand-sifted soil on a roof a hundred feet or so above the pavement where the motors race and chase. Also down there you would be seeing that hectic esplanade called Fifty-second Street, where life begins at midnight in a winchell-world of mugs and thugs and strip-tease, goofs and gaiety, art, letters and the illiterate, permanent carnival for the carnal moments of both cosmopolites and hinterlanders at play. The desk between us would be littered and piled high with publicity flamboyances and photographs, mostly about matters that seemed to be divided between being too relevant and too irrelevant.

So, perhaps, if you should be glancing over the tendered clipping, you might be getting some part of the reaction that your editor has had in the reading of it—in all these circumstances of time and space. It is from the Tonganoxie Mirror, a weekly that has been running some sixty years, in a village out in Kansas. The piece pertains to a bit of goings on at the home of a woman who has lived in that village, in one spot, seventy-five of her eighty-and-odd years, and some of the neighbors. Among them — maybe you'd be surprised — are some who come to New York for hats, some who have been to Paris, at least two who wear university degrees. But they live out where the tall corn grows, as so much of America does. And this is what they found interesting to do that day:

> Mrs. Georgia Ramsaye entertained the members of the Civic Study Club on Monday. They assembled at one-thirty o'clock for dessert. After enjoying delicious strawberry shortcake, coffee and nuts, they adjourned to the living room. After a short business session, an interesting program on Mother's Day was presented by Mrs. John Dorney. Mrs. Georgia Gwathmey read a group of poems; Miss Lucy McNaughton read a brief story of the mother of George Washington and her illustrious son; Mrs. Archie Toothaker gave a group of readings of old-time selections appropriate to Mother's Day. Then Mrs. Dorney led in a guessing game. Mrs. McKone gave a financial report on the annual guest day, of which she was chairman. The annual election of officers was held and Mrs. Bert Harman was elected president; Mrs. Archie Toothaker, vice-president; Mrs. Foster Laming, secretary; and Mrs. H. H. Harris, treasurer. Plans were discussed for the annual picnic to be held in June. It is to be a basket picnic and the plans will be made by the program committee.

This is just another look at the customers, what they like, and what they think—which is part of this business. It is not mentioned this way very often. Usually it is just the silent vote of the box office.

Illinois Kills 10% Admission Tax

The Illinois House of Representatives on Wednesday rejected the Powell bill to tax amusements admissions 10 per cent. The rejection was performed by a postponement of consideration of the measure until June 30th. This is tantamount to a defeat, because the legislature adjourns on that date.

The Sanquist bill limiting picture shows to 135 minutes, unless there is a 15-minute intermission every hour, had its third reading in the House Tuesday night. Observers thought it might have a vote before the week's end.

"Doe" Foreign Rights Acquired

Budd Rogers has been appointed to represent Frank Capra Productions, Inc., in the foreign distribution of the Frank Capra-Robert-Riskin Production, "Meet John Doe," which is being released by Warners. Mr. Rogers will work in collaboration with the foreign sales department of Warners.

DECREE, DEFENSE, WAR & RECEIPTS, TRADE PRACTICES ON MPTOA AGENDA

Extensive Business and Social Program Planned for Joint Meeting with Pacific Coast Independents in Los Angeles

Greetings from President Franklin D. Roosevelt and California's Governor Culbert L. Olsen will open the 21st annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and the second annual convention of the coastal regional Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, on Monday, running through Thursday. More than 1,000 exhibitors, their families and others from the motion picture business throughout the nation are expected to attend.

Conclaves will be held separately. The Pacific Coast group will meet in the mornings and will be hosts to the MPTOA members, who will convene in the afternoons. Attendance at each group's sessions will be open to members of the other.

The PCCITO conferences will be limited to business sessions, at which a variety of exhibitor problems will be discussed.

Industry Leaders to Speak

The national group has scheduled as speakers the following: Y. Frank Freeman, president, Association of Motion Picture Producers, Paramount vice-president; Walter Wanger, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, president Walter Wanger productions; Judge J. F. T. O'Connor, U. S. District court; John H. Harris, president National Variety Clubs; Nathan D. Golden, motion picture bureau, U. S. Department of Commerce; J. Noble Braden, executive secretary, American Arbitration Association; William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, MGM; Neil F. Agnew, vice-president and general sales manager, Paramount; Gradwell Sears, general sales manager, Warner Brothers; Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of sales, RKO; William A. Scully, general sales manager, Universal; Austin Keough, general counsel, Paramount.

Also Francis Harmon, coordinator, Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense and eastern representative of the Production Code Administration; J. Edgar Hoover, director, Federal Bureau of Investigation; Mary Pickford, co-owner, United Artists; Louella O. Parsons, King Features film columnist; Edward Arnold, president Screen Actors Guild; Sheridan Gibney, president, Screen Writers Guild; Frank Capra, president, Screen Directors Guild.

Topics on the agenda for the PCCITO meetings include discussions of all phases of the consent decree, problems of theatre expansion, block booking, double bills, and the suit against ASCAP for damages, which has been reported under contemplation by coast exhibitors. Reports of the various committees will be interspersed through the various sessions. Resolutions will be offered on Thursday.

President Roosevelt's letter of greeting to Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, reads: "Please extend cordial greetings in my behalf to all who attend the 21st annual convention of the MPTOA. It is most appropriate that you are calling this coming of age gathering 'The All Industry Goodwill Convention.' That spirit should make its own special contribution in the all-out effort for national unity which is of paramount importance during these anxious times. My best wishes for a successful gathering."

Twenty-nine years ago at San Francisco western exhibitors gathered for the first session of the old Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, parent of the present Conference. Organization of the exhibition end of the infant motion picture industry constituted the chief problem at the first California conference, which met on September 17, 1912.

Charles Rothchild, first president of the group, called upon the exhibitors to unite "to improve and elevate our business," according to a report in the Moving Picture World. He urged also a more dignified and business-like manner of transacting industry business and warned against exploiting the public. Regulation of traveling shows and membership of distributor-exhibitors in the League were also major problems at the first convention.

Registration day for the coast group is on Sunday, and MPTOA delegates will sign in on Monday. The coast conference starts its business sessions on Monday morning with reports from the Board of Trustees and committees, according to Robert H. Poole, executive secretary and general convention chairman. Mary Pickford will welcome the delegates to Hollywood.

MPTOA sessions, to be opened by general convention chairman H. V. "Rotus" Harvey of San Francisco, will start Tuesday afternoon with Miss Pickford again participating.

Social activities of both groups will be combined, starting with a studio tour for members and guests on Monday. The Association of Motion Picture Producers will be hosts to the visitors and are arranging the social and entertainment program. Miss Pickford will be hostess for many of the events.

Tuesday and Wednesday mornings will be devoted by the Conference to open forum discussions, which will be closed to all but exhibitors. On Wednesday and Thursday afternoons the national organization will hear further reports from its committees and additional speakers.

A studio party and dinner dance will be held Tuesday night in Hollywood, with film personalities in attendance. Wednesday afternoon Miss Pickford and other stars will be hostesses at a fashion show for the wives of delegates.

Both organizations will end their business sessions on Thursday afternoon and at night will gather together at Earl Carroll's Theatre-restaurant, at which the studios will be represented by executives and stars.

The executive board and the board of directors of the MPTOA will meet Monday night at the hotel headquarters, prior to the opening of the convention, to settle last-minute details of the program. The Coast Board of Trustees is expected to meet daily.

Advance indications of the resolutions to be present at the Pacific meeting on Thursday were not obtainable. They will be submitted from the floor by interested members and are not expected to be drafted in final form until the conclusion of discussions at the opening sessions.

Pointed attention from the PCCITO is scheduled for the proposed ASCAP suit in preparation for several months by Albert J. Law, general counsel, and former assistant U. S. Attorney General. Conference members have been asked in surveys for information on fees paid ASCAP since its organization.

1912 CONVENTION HAD ITS PROBLEMS TOO

Commenting on the state of the industry in 1912, Charles Rothchild, the first president of the California Motion Picture Exhibitors League, told its members at their first convention in San Francisco, in September of that year (see next page):

"It is an indisputable fact that through organization and consultation much can and will be done to elevate and improve the business. It is also an indisputable fact that the combined investments of the exhibitors are greater than the combined investments of the manufacturers and exchanges. They, through organization, control the business, while the control should be with us.

"Our competitive ideas and desire to obtain from the public the ultimate nickel is to blame for much of our unpopularity. We should refrain from misleading, sensational and vulgar advertising. We should put our business upon a higher plane by refusing to exhibit indecent, sensational or criminal subjects. If we proceed upon these lines and labor for the perpetuation of our business it will not be long before the guns of our enemies will be effectually spiked. And we will have the unanimous support and approval of all right thinking people."

Carolina Convention June 29th to July 1st

The Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina will hold their annual summer convention at Myrtle Beach, S. C., from June 29th through July 1st, with approximately 300 expected, and Charles Arrington presiding. It is the organization's 29th year.

Additional to Mr. Arrington, other officers are H. R. Berry and Roy Rowe, vice-presidents, and Mrs. Walter Griffith, secretary.

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana are to hold their fourth annual summer convention from June 17th through 19th at the Potawatomi Inn, Pokagon State Park, that state. The organization is affiliated with the national Allied States Association.

Multiple Bills Debate at Illinois Allied Meeting

The growing number of triple bills was scheduled to be the principal topic at the meeting of the Illinois Allied at the Hotel Congress in Chicago on June 4th. Jack Kirsch, president, reported that 12 northwest Chicago houses have switched from dual to triple shows within the last few weeks and called upon the membership to bring about an end to the practice. A drive for single features is predicted by Illinois exhibitors.

Allied of New Jersey at its annual convention at the Hotel Ritz-Carlton, Atlantic City, June 11th to 13th, will hear Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president in charge of distribution for United Artists, as one of the principal speakers on its program. The convention will also include a conference of Eastern exhibitor leaders and a testimonial banquet for Lee Newbury, Jersey Allied president.

Remembering California's First Exhibitor Convention

COINCIDENT with the joint convention of the national MPTOA and the regional PCCITO in Los Angeles, here emerges pictorial reminiscence of the first big West Coast convention in September of 1912 with the gathering in San Francisco of members and guests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of California.

The Herald and its readers are indebted to the courtesy and the archives of C. W. Champney, president and business agent of the Moving Picture Projectionists Local 739, IATSE, of Redding, California.

In a letter discussing his interesting picture, Mr. Champney remarks: "I have made an effort to gain identification for some of those present, but the recollections were so hazy that they would tend to confuse.

"There are many faces that older members of the film industry will quickly recognize. I am sure they will find it easy to pick out William S. Hart, Broncho Billy and some of the extras of that time. I am also told that in the picture can be found Sig Grauman and R. A. McNeil of the Golden State Circuit, but I cannot verify that."

A generation of showmen, and their customers, has arrived in the intervening twenty-nine years. Trade problems which those men of 1912 organized to discuss and meet are still under discussion.

Many will find the memory hunt suggested by this picture of provocative interest. The Herald hopes to hear from showmen who identify members of the 1912 gathering and, presently, to present their identifications. Send them, please, to the news editor.

WHAT THE WAR HAS DONE TO SCREEN IN ENGLAND

Pictures Still Made and the Public Still Pays to See Them After 20 Months of Bombs, Bullets, Blackouts

(Before the start of World War II, in the Fall of 1939, England represented close to 20 per cent of the world's motion picture market; from that country, Hollywood had 50 per cent of its foreign revenues.)

by AUBREY FLANAGAN

(Written May 21, 1941)

Britain has reached its twentieth month of warfare. They have been twenty months of warfare in which all previously held standards and codes have been swept aside, in which the battle has been brought to the back streets and the civilian to the front line, in which hardly a district or town but bears some scar testifying to the sub-human code of the Nazi gangster.

Today, nevertheless, motion pictures are still being made in Britain, picture theatres are operating almost normally, in remote villages and in the blasted and shattered cities of Coventry and Plymouth, Bristol and in London itself.

This month a British film, started during the most bloody days of the Battle of Britain, was given its premiere at Folkestone, under the very nose of the Nazi guns.

The motion picture industry, a segment of the entire fabric of Britain, is carrying on, its surface ruffled maybe, but its heart beating steadily.

500 Theatre Casualties

Trace the pattern of the industry today and changes will be found in details, changes inevitable in face of the dislocation which warfare brings. The essential pattern remains. Despite this twenty months of bombing and blitz, out of some 4,500 picture houses only 658 have ceased to operate, either destroyed or put out of circulation by enemy action, or compelled to close by economic and military circumstances. Probably not more than 500 can be classed as direct war casualties.

Attendances have dropped approximately 25 per cent. Production figures have reached their lowest on record, with only 65 feature films made in the last quota year ending March 31.

Today the exhibitor is taking a higher theatre tax at his box office, paying more in wages and in operating costs, working to a lower margin of profit.

The calling of men to the colors has depleted the ranks of projectionists, faces the exhibitor with the danger, as we write, that, within a few weeks' time—unless some concession is made—he may have no one to man his projection box. But the picture houses remain open. Studios have been commandeered and materials rationed. Out of Britain's 78 odd stages probably not more than 20 are available at the moment. Technicians have been called to the colors and face the same dangers of dereservation of their projectionist confreres. Here again the industry faces critical interference with its functioning. Here again many of these studios which have been taken over by the Government are working full pelt.

Trace again that pattern of industrial operation and study its changing details. More picture theatres are open on a Sunday than ever before. The cinema going habits of the populace, direct result of nocturnal raiding, have changed so that the weekday evenings have dropped in commercial value and the weekend, notably Sunday, is now the peak of the box office week.

On the screens of every picture house, every day and in every programme, is at least one picture made by the Government, a Ministry of Information propaganda short. The practical interest of the State in the motion picture as a means of propaganda and instruction intensifies every day. . . . The tracery reveals finer changes in detail. The essential pattern remains.

Survey the picture houses of Britain. In Plymouth and Portsmouth, Liverpool and Swansea, are heaps of rubble and charred wood where once stood noble buildings. In the heart of London's West End the blasted and blackened Leicester Square Theatre stands foursquare to Metro's Empire which bears scarcely a scratch, where every day box office queues pay financial tribute to the appeal of the motion picture. In London suburbs and country towns local cinemas still stand on the streets, their frontages less placarded with posters than of yore, their vestibules darkened when the blackout descends. From Sunday to Saturday the box office figures testify that, in a country at war, the screen is still as essential to the British citizen as his cigarette and his morning newspaper. That in serving that essential need Hollywood remains the prime source is shown by the 400 U. S. films imported here in the last quota year.

On this pattern of industry the year past has left indelible marks, marks also which time will remove, others which may be traced to a wider and more vivid design. The cataclysmic and catastrophic force of warfare, as it is being waged today, makes stability difficult. How far these designs may spread, to what extent others may arise, it would be invidious to forecast. No change or new phenomenon which has been

British Survey Finds Increases In Overhead, Grosses Down 52%

A vivid spotlight on the technique of survival in the face of Totalitarian War is supplied in a study of trade conditions in one of Britain's most blitzed areas, and undertaken by the exhibitor group responsible. The study, devised mainly around the question of Sunday trading and the Charity Tax, has made manifest more than one commercial fact.

It establishes that Sunday is now the peak day of the trading week, that though net takings during the week have decreased some 52 per cent, and on Sunday 30 per cent, the Sunday box-office turnover has risen from a relative 14 per cent of the week's total to 20 per cent. Out of some 280 picture houses normally operating in the area over 120 are now closed as a result of trading conditions, enemy action, etc.

The decline in weekly takings—consequent upon continued bombing, the shelter habit, evacuation of thousands from the worst affected districts—plus increasing overheads, and war expenditure, have made it difficult for many exhibitors to continue trading.

In some cases landlords have been known temporarily to reduce rents. In other instances where freeholds are owned and subject to mortgage or debenture, interest and principal repayments have been suspended. While some exhibitors have been able to cut overheads—thanks to less exterior lighting and poster display, etc.—this has been balanced by increased wages and higher running costs. Some exhibitors have, by lodging additional personal securities, had banking facilities extended.

Some 200 picture houses surveyed were found in the six months ending March, 1940, to have dropped 52 per cent in gross takings, as compared with the same six months in the previous year. The period, of course, included the winter and worst "blitz" months. Monday to Saturday takings declined some 55 per cent and Sunday takings 40 per cent. The Sunday gross figure in the previous year was approximately £250,000. In the last six months it dropped to £180,000.

Over the whole of the wide area surveyed one picture house in seven is now closed. On the inner and more vulnerable circle the proportion is two out of five. (The whole country has a closure total of roughly 12 per cent. Some smaller and heavily bombed towns reach a figure of 60 per cent.)

Out of 200 houses in the area under study which have closed since the war, only 35 are closed on account of bomb damage; 36 have been shut for economic reasons. All in all, probably 150 would claim as reason for closure "poor returns".

WAR AND THE SCREEN IN BRITAIN

registered can be traced back anywhere but to the explosive dislocation caused by the war.

The new theatre tax scale imposed last year by the Chancellor, after the industry had emphatically and pugnaciously repudiated his plans to impose the purchase tax on motion pictures, was a direct result of the Government's determination that the industry should make a higher contribution to the war chest. Finalized, too, were such matters as the new Exchange Agreement, establishing the amount payable back to the U. S. in dollars by the the American companies operating here. An Alternative Quota, based on finance rather than footage, was introduced. Little more is likely to be done to extend the Sunday opening of cinemas beyond the Emergency Regulations introduced by the Home Secretary last year. On the other hand it would be foolish to regard as finalized or inflexible the production position, notwithstanding that the quota remains on the statute book.

On the shelves of the Board of Trade, ready to be taken down and dusted off at any moment, are plans for a Films Commission with plenary powers of control over the industry. Production, though it continues, is in the melting pot, thanks to the Government's dilatoriness in making up its mind about the future, thanks to the commandeering of studios for war purposes, and thanks to the contentions of Mr. Ernest Bevin to allow key technicians to be called up for service, its final shape difficult to assess. The projected dereservation of projectionists brings with it, at worst, the possibility of the closure of thousands of cinemas. In actual fact an adjustment of the man power situation is not unlikely, if the work of a committee now sitting and representing both the industry and the Government reaches fruition.

Production Down

Statistically the production year has not been numerically fruitiful. Registration figures for the last quota period—March 1940 to April 1941—are as follows:—

Renters' Quota	42
Exhibitors' Quota	23
Total	65

Of these 19 were made on a double quota basis and three as triple quota.

The figures compare with 108 registered in the previous year and 103 the year before that. They represent 14 per cent of the reigstered total, as opposed to 22½ per cent demanded by the Act. This drop is traceable to war conditions generally, to the diversion of investment into other fields, armament manufacture, etcetera, but more directly to the continued haziness of the Government's plans regarding the industry and to the drainage on studio space, materials and man power.

U. S. interests here remain eager to make world market films. In so doing they could turn some of their frozen credits into dollars, getting returns not only here but in the foreign market. Without stars, or technicians, or studio space, or materials, it has proved well nigh impracticable. The sponsoring, despite these difficulties, of such films as "Quiet Wedding" and "Kipps," by Paramount and 20th Century-Fox respectively; and the tearing from the battered and bruised womb of Britain of Pascal's "Major Barbara," shows the goodwill and serious intention which exist.

In spite of veiled hints and nebulous promises that legislation would be amended to meet the wartime situation, no alteration to the existing quota law has so far been made by the Board of Trade. The institution of the monetary quota last May was merely an addendum to existing legislation. Under its provisions companies operating on a financial quota basis had to make, or acquire, 7,000 feet of British film for every 100,000 feet of foreign film imported. A specified amount, varying according to the percentages under the existing Act, had to be spent on British labor. The over-all labor cost of the film had to be not less than £3 per foot.

There were advantages for both sides of the bargain: on the one hand British labor interests were safeguarded and quota production encouraged; on the other less total footage was required by the Americans. The scheme, although only an alternative, was bitterly opposed by producers and the unions; by the one because it was considered to contribute nothing to British interests, by the other because it would supposedly lead to a 25 per cent decrease in production.

Deeper Causes at Work

The decrease in production would seem, nevertheless, to be due to deeper causes. As studios have increasingly been commandeered for storage, for offices and manufactories; as materials have been rationed and men have been called to the colors, as U. S. stars and directors have become less accessible, the situation has gradually worsened. Producers have complained and appealed for state finance. Labor has echoed the demand. Exhibitors have intensified their demands for a cut in the quota schedules. In Whitehall the sages of the Board of Trade, not improbably confused by the variegated demands of industry sections, last year evolved a secret plan for a Films Commission, called clandestine committees, pledged members to secrecy, omitted to consult the industry whose fate it was deciding. The scheme, shamed by the light of press revelation, was put aside, to be revived again in February this year by the new President of the Board of Trade, Captain Lyttleton. With it is tied up a plan to establish a Credit Bank to aid British production with, as its basis, the munificent sum of $2,000,000.

Thence, and with an emphatic repudiation of the scheme by all industry sections, save the labor unions, even by the Films Council itself, the Board of Trade has shelved both position and plan, suggested single feature bills and six-day runs as a palliative, been told by exhibitors and renters alike, and by the Films Council itself, that these wheezes are of no use and that what is needed is constructive Government action, release of men, material and studios, financial aid to those in need of it. With Bevin threatening to remove studio technicians from the reservation categories in which they had hitherto been placed above the age of 30, and an Emergency Committee appointed by the Ministry of Labor to investigate the man power situation and the needs of Services and industry in men and films and to make recommendation on the appropriate action, the situation rests, critical but not desperate. Should any impetus be given during thee forthcoming year to production, and indications are that Government needs will not be considered last, the role of the American companies here will not be supine.

The "freezing" here, during the current financial year, of all their revenues, above the $12,900,000 which last January's Exchange Agreement permits them to transmit to New York, provides also that frozen monies may be used for the production or acquisition of British films for the Home or foreign markets.

Worries over product, and the difficulties of fulfilling the quota, are not the only ones the British exhibitor has today. Overheads have increased considerably, war bonuses have been granted to labor, competition from Government and Service film enterprises have helped deplete their revenues. Expenditure has been necessary on air raid precautions, fire watching, war risk insurance, etcetera. Worst blow, however, during the year has been the need to increase the scale of admissions, a need compelled by the Government determination last year to impose further taxation on the industry. The original intention was to apply the Purchase Tax to films.

Purchase Tax Absorbed

In May last year the industry was summoned to be told by Government officials that the Purchase Tax would be applied to its commodity. An extra £5,000,000 was virtually demanded from the business. Despite a solid vote against this tax, despite a plain statement that it would virtually close down the industry by making it uneconomic for the Americans to import films and for exhibitors to show them, the Government remained insistent that the industry would have to pay up, even if payment be decided upon in another form. Trade meetings, Whitehall conferences, direct protest to the Chancellor ultimately achieved the final abandonment of the tax as a purchase tax, but only on the agreement that the trade would gather it in some other form, the only other obvious form being an increased entertainments' duty. After conversations between the trade and Government, a final schedule of theatre tax increases was agreed upon, a schedule which, to some extent, negotiated the difficulties of a higher duty bringing higher and uneconomic admission rates. In July the budget introduced these taxes with the estimate that they would yield another £4,000,000 to the Exchequer. The story of the trade's efforts to achieve an admission scale which would leave their trading economic, the abortive attempts of circuits to secure an all around 9d. minimum, the ultimate determination of various groups, districts and theatres to decide for themselves their financial destinies is both complex and lengthy.

Admissions have been increased all round and everywhere with an 8d. or 9d. minimum in most first run houses. The increases have, to some extent, brought changes in the marketability of variously priced seats, though they have hardly affected the sum total of attendances and grosses.

Where there has been a marked change is in the attendance habits of the cinema going public. Repeated and wide spread bombings and the growth of the shelter habit, late hours worked

SAYS GOVERNMENT VIOLATED ORDER

Despite British Government assurance that no projectionists would be conscripted pending the result of a Government study of personnel needs, Arthur Moss of the Associated British circuit charged this week that projectionists were being called.

Meanwhile, in an effort to spur the Government to declare the film business an essential industry and exempt technicians from military service, the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association has indicated that unless immediate action is taken, half the British film houses will close and British production will cease.

BRITISH SCREEN 'ESSENTIAL INDUSTRY'

at factories and workshops, coupled with the early curfew imposed, or volunteered, in vulnerable districts, have altered the whole pattern of weekly trade. Previously Monday to Saturday represented the most popular days, now they are less popular and trade is concentrated on Saturday and Sunday. In London, the most consistently bombed of all British areas, and which includes in its widest sphere 600 picture houses, the change is represented as follows: In the pre-war year Sunday takings represented approximately 14.19 per cent of the total takings for the week. In the first year of the war this had increased to 20.57 per cent. Trade, however, has declined in some of the London areas so that Sunday takings are down some 10.92 per cent in spite of the proportionate increase, whilst weekday takings have decreased by 40.82 per cent. (In the London County Council area alone, at the moment of writing, some 110 cinemas are still closed, as a result of enemy action, leaving approximately 173 operating).

Sunday Tax Protested

The switch-over in trade has been assisted by numerous districts availing themselves of last year's Emergency Order and, at the request of the military authorities, applying for power to open cinemas on Sundays. The new Sunday situation has, on the other hand, impelled wide-spread exhibitor protest against the Charity Tax on Sunday trading, because, it is contended, Sunday cannot now be considered an exceptional day since it is the pivotal point of the trading week. Further, many exhibitors in affected areas are working on so narrow a margin of profit that the Tax means the difference between a loss and a gain. In certain lesser affected districts, those country areas, for instance, where evacuees have been despatched and where Military and Air Force Stations are to be found, box office trading is better. In others it is solidly down on the pre-war average. In still others it is next to non-existent. Cinemas have been bombed and either destroyed or damaged. In some coastal areas they have been closed. In badly blitzed districts the exit of the population has depressed trade conditions intolerably. Stung to action by their grisly trading position, some exhibitor groups impelled the CEA to take action and persuaded the KRS to a lenient renting policy. Others, compelled to close down, complained bitterly against the stringent treatment which, it was claimed, had been meted out to them by the renters, protested against being compelled to give comprehensive and intimate details of their business position and that of all houses associated with them. Open war blazed out, with all the heavy artillery of the CEA turned on the KRS, died away in smoke as wiser counsels prevailed and the KRS agreed to withdraw their questionnaire and the CEA agreed to sit on a joint committee with the renters and examine every relief case individually.

Won "GWTW" Dispute

Meanwhile the Society recommended its individual members to give special and sympathetic consideration to badly hit exhibitors who could not pay the renters what they might have paid in happier circumstances. With the market limited it is not surprising that the exhibitor frequently has had the last word. He had the last word in the vexed "Gone With the Wind" dispute, which blazed and thundered in the earlier stages of the period under review, when Metro's 70 per cent rental, and 3s/6d-4s/6d admissions, were rejected completely and utterly by the exhibitors, and made the occasion of violent attacks on the renters in general and individuals in particular. The dispute was acrimonious and had unpleasant repercussions on other films and bookings, came to a stalemate with Metro sticking to their guns and the film being shown only in the West End of London and on road show lines in an infinitesmal number of houses.

That the market, though limited, has not been arid is reflected in the profits made in the last financial year by the two major theatre chains, Gaumont-British and Associated-British, whose chief, John Maxwell, died last October. Both corporations passed up a dividend, but Gaumont-British recorded a profit of £612,399 and Associated-British Picture Corporation a profit of £1,206,856. Not far behind were the Odeon Circuit with their trading profit for the same period £473,486.

Not the most happy or harmonious have been the relations of the industry with the Films Division of the Ministry of Information, that Government section charged with guiding propaganda through the channels of the motion picture industry. Despite the goodwill of the exhibitors, who have voluntarily given five minutes screen time in every program to a Government propaganda film, the Ministry of Information has more than once trodden on the corns of the CEA, not least unpleasantly, vide the Lafoten case, in depriving the newsreels of legitimate news, taken by Ministry of Information cameramen and passing it on to the exhibitors to show under his five-minute arrangement, although the subject had already been covered in one form or another. Sponsoring documentaries and propaganda films, either by direct commission or mere approval, or by its own Crown Film Unit, it has certainly achieved some prestige results in films such as "Men of the Lightship," "Squadron 992," "Britain Can Take It" and "Christmas Under Fire." It has considerably stimulated the production of the progressive realist film.

Extravagance Charged

On the other hand it has provoked the Government committee on expenditure to devastating criticisms, allegations of extravagance and inefficiency, interference with the industry and non-realization of the importance of the foreign field, beyond guaranteeing, early in 1940, £25,000 of the negative cost of a film which, at the time of writing, has not yet been shown. Leading producer Michael Balcon, who had hitherto been making films for the Ministry of Information, in December walked out on the Films Division, accusing it of a complete and utter lack of policy, of deplorable waste of time and money, of incursion into the industry's producer and distributor territory—and declared his intention of making his own propaganda films with private finance.

Not even the august Army Council has managed to avoid the criticism and objections of the industry, greatly for the indiscreet manner in which it launched its scheme for a mobile film unit to take motion pictures to troops in outlying areas, partially for the way in which it has operated the scheme itself. Not even the august presence of H.R.H. the Duke of Gloucester at the inaugural luncheon prevented exhibitor and renter leaders from telling the Brass Hats that they could not expect the industry to provide films until they had been asked—in the proper manner.

The Army Films Unit operates today with films supplied by the industry, but, despite the cordial relation which replaced the initial accrimony, it is not an affair of magnificence, but confines itself in the main to instruction rather than entertainment. On the high seas the Royal Naval Film Corporation, a pre-war creation, continues with trade collaboration to care for the motion picture needs of the British sailor. Otherwise F.E.N.S.A., a Government entertainment body and an offshoot of the Navy, Army and Air Force Institute, which caters to the entertainment and gastronomic needs of the Fighting Forces, provides films where it is not practicable for the industry to do so. Around the country, too, go some 200 odd mobile film units, sponsored by the Ministry of Information Films Division, bringing screen propaganda to the Orkneys and Scillys, to mountain villages and remote hamlets, not failing in so doing to tread once again on the corns of the industry by trespassing on the territory of local picture theatres, or by screening films which, it is claimed, cannot strictly be called propaganda.

Cooperation Prevails

Such expressions from official quarters are not the only order of the wartime regime. The most cordial relations have often marked the conversations of exhibitors and local authorities over opening hours. Though peremptory curfews were imposed on picture houses in many districts, sometimes as early as 7 p.m. in the worst months and in the worst districts, a spirit of cooperation has, in the main, enabled exhibitors to adjust their opening hours to suit geographical and seasonable circumstance. The Summer of 1941 is likely to see the vast majority of picture houses open until 10:30 or 11 p.m. With an adjusted blackout and a greatly extended daylight period it is hoped that the result will be to the benefit of the box office. As the blackout is set back to keep pace with the drawing dusk so hours will be adjusted backwards to allow earlier opening to offset earlier closing. In London a longer Sunday has been permitted the picture house with highly satisfactory box office results.

A Government gesture which has been appreciated, too, is the Board of Trade's war insurance for British films, under which by paying a premium of 2s/0d per cent per week and 2s/0d per cent per named person, the British producer can insure himself against interference by enemy action.

Future Uncertain

Out of these twelve months of difficulties and miracles, which the industry has survived, with scars maybe but surprisingly little damage to its sinews, will evolve a formula for continued existence. Just what that formula will be, of course, depends upon many things. It depends upon the Battle of the Atlantic, raging as we write, on Hitler's hammering at the gates of Egypt and the continued and intense bombing of Britain. It depends, too, on the Government's ultimate attitude to the trade as an essential service, on its decisions regarding the needs of the Forces in entertainment, on the statutory obligations of the various companies, on the essential urgency of screen propaganda and on the relations of foreign motion pictures to the dollar exchange situation.

For Good, and Evil

One potential factor for good and one for evil looms on the horizons. The closing of commercial, political and military ties between Great Britain and the United States should inevitably color and improve the Anglo-American trade situation. On the other hand invasion, still a possibility, may put paid to all schemes and intentions, demand an entirely new battle dress for Britain. No matter what the circumstances or conditions, it is nevertheless certain that the policy and practice of the industry here will be, as it was in the previous twelve months reviewed in these pages, to carry on. That is the British way.

U.S. INTERVENES FOR FIRST TIME IN A DECREE ARBITRATION CASE

Attorney General Files Brief in Chicago Case Pending Before Appeals Board; May Decide "Unreasonable Clearance"

Intervention this week by the U. S. Attorney General in the first motion picture arbitration appeal appeared likely to result in a far-reaching exposition by the Appeals Board of an arbitrator's jurisdiction in deciding what constitutes "unreasonable" clearance under the definitions of Section VIII of the New York consent decree. Filing of a Government brief this week as "friend of the court" in the appeal will also probably postpone for several weeks the currently due No. 1 appeal decision.

The Attorney General, through the motion picture section of the Department of Justice's anti-trust division entered its brief with the Appeals Board at New York on May 31st. Robert Wright, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of observing operation of the consent decree is understood to have prepared the intervening petition.

Chicago Case Appealed

Pending before Van Vechten Veeder, George W. Alger, and Albert W. Putnam, members of the Appeals Board, is the ruling of Charles P. Megan, arbitrator in the second Chicago case. Ben Banovitz, operator of the Ken theatre, Chicago, complained that clearance afforded to the Schoenstadt circuit's Shakespeare theatre was unreasonable under Section III of the decree. He named Paramount, RKO and 20th Century-Fox as defendant distributors. Mr. Megan's decision held that the Ken asked for a definite run, equal to that which the companies granted the Shakespeare, not clearance and dismissed the complaint. (See MOTION PICTURE HERALD, March 29th, page 17.) Under the rules of arbitration of the consent decree specific runs are not arbitratable until September 1, 1941.

The Government's petition to intervene in the appeal, and an accompanying brief were entered without forenotice with the Appeals Board at New York on Saturday, May 31st, during the Memorial Day holidays. It proved a surprise to many of the parties involved. An appeals decision had been expected this week on the basis of the record of the Chicago hearings. The New York board two weeks ago denied petitions by Paramount and 20th Century-Fox for permission to present oral arguments before the board.

Contending that under Section VIII of the decree an arbitrator has the power to say that two given theatres are not competitors, the Government, according to attorneys who have read its brief, asserts that the arbitrator may eliminate all clearance. It is argued that any clearance, in a situation where the theatres are not directly competitors, may constitute unreasonable clearance within the sense of the decree. If the Appeals Board, in line with the Government brief, grants Mr. Banovitz's motion to set aside the Chicago ruling and holds the Shakespeare's indefinite clearance over the Ken to be "unreasonable" it will support a new and very broad interpretation of the "clearance clause" attorneys say. It is believed in some quarters that it would result in the filing of many new clearance cases in situations which had previously believed to fall under the Specific Run category, which is not subject to arbitration until September 1st

At Washington, filing of a brief by the Department of Justice in the Ken arbitration case was said by department officials on Tuesday to be without special significance but in line with an understanding reached when the consent decree was set up that any time some important construction of the decree was involved in an arbitration proceeding the Government would be permitted to file a brief with the Appeals Board setting forth its position.

It was indicated that the department would probably take such action with respect to every issue brought before the national appeals board which has a bearing on the decree. There is no intention on the part of department officials to attempt any further presentation of the Government's position beyond the brief, which is offered for the consideration of the board in deciding the issue of the arbitrator's powers in the Chicago case.

Amended Briefs Granted

The Appeals Board has granted attorneys for Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and RKO until June 7th to file amended briefs in reply to the government intervenor. On Tuesday they indicated that, as in the case of the original appeal brief, they would enter a short joint reply. The Government intervention does not in any way alter their original appeal argument.

It is reported also, that in its brief the Government declares that under Section VIII an arbitrator must regard clearance not only in relation to the time involved but to the areas served by the respective theatres. Although the Ken and Shakespeare theatres are less than four blocks apart, the Government is said to have asked the Appeals Board in its first ruling to declare that proximity be considered as a basis for a clearance award. Paragraph six of Section VIII declares that the arbitrator shall take into consideration "the extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage."

First Cases in Atlanta

Two new cases, first for the tribunal, were filed this week at Atlanta, Ga., by a Miami, Fla., independent operator who seeks clearance from four of the Big Five. An unaffiliated major circuit was named with the distributors as a competitor for the first time in any of the cases filed to date. Previous circuits named in complaints have been associated with one or another of the consenting distributors.

Aaron H. Courshon, operator of the Parkway theatre at Miami names Paramount, Warner Brothers, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in his first clearance complaint. He cites 16 theatres operated by Paramount Enterprises, Inc., asserting that they have first run clearances of 120-50 days over the Parkway. Named are the Sheridan, Colony, Cinema, Beach, Paramount, Olympia, Roxy, Rex, Tivoli, Dade, Regent, Boulevard, Hialeah and Flagler theatres in Miami and the Coral Gables and Canal theatres, Coral Gables.

A second complaint, also filed by Mr. Courshon in behalf of the Parkway names 20th Century-Fox alone and 12 houses of the independent Wometco circuit which, he alleges, receive 150-day first run clearances from Fox. The theatres operated by Mitchell Wolfson and Sidney Meyer named in the complaint are the Lincoln, Surf, Cameo, Plaza, Strand, Center, Biltmore, Tower, State, Miami, Mayfair, and Cocoanut Grove.

Filing of the first complaint in Atlanta leaves only five tribunals, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Omaha, and Seattle without any arbitration complaints on their records. During May 14 new cases were filed compared with 16 complaints registered during April.

Intervenors were filed during the week by interested parties at Washington and San Francisco. In Washington Cases No. 4 and 5 the Danville Enterprises, Inc., operator of the Dan, Capitol, and Rialto in Danville, Va., intervened in the cases filed by L. W. Lee of Danville. At San Francisco, Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., intervened in the clearance demand of William Symfy, operator of the Rita theatre near Vallejo. Mr. Symfy, who has not yet opened his new house, alleges that RKO, Paramount, and Warners have set excessive clearance for already established houses.

At the continued hearing of the San Gabriel theatre clearance case in Los Angeles on Tuesday Herbert T. Silverberg, counsel for the distributors, asked that the complaint be dismissed on the ground that it requested specific run and was out of the arbitrator's jurisdiction until September 1st. Herbert Cameron, arbitrator, took the motion under consideration. Hearings resume June 11th.

Clarence Eynon, Denver attorney, will arbitrate the clearance complaint of the Nile Theatre, Mitchell, Neb. Hearings start June 12th.

At Pittsburgh clearance hearings on Case No. 2, Beacon theatre and William Green against all five were set for June 23rd. The Biordi Brothers complain, Case No. 3 was postponed from May 29th to June 11th.

Further postponement of Cincinnati Case No. 1, William Vance versus Loew's, Paramount, Warners and 20th Century-Fox was announced, moving the hearing from May 28th to June 5th.

New York Case No. 7, Lyric theatre, Oyster Bay, against all five was postponed until August 1st at the request of all parties. It is one of the longest postponements recorded to date.

Breen Visits RKO Studio

Joseph Breen, RKO's new studio chief, and until recently Production Code Administration head, a post he resigned several weeks ago, paid his first official visit to the RKO Hollywood studios Thursday, May 28th, presiding at a dinner for Dr. Pedro Colman, dean of the University of Brazil. Mr. Breen has been staying at his Hollywood PCA position, pending appointment of a successor. Meanwhile he is familiarizing himself with RKO studio operations, and is expected to attend the company's sales convention in New York June 16th, as an active executive.

Variety Clubs for Coast, Houston

John H. Harris, national president of the Variety Clubs of America, left Pittsburgh June 5th by strato-liner for Los Angeles, where he will discuss plans for organizing a Hollywood tent, with Walter Wanger, Duke Clark, John Roy Johnston and other West Coast executives. While in California, Mr. Harris will attend the MPTOA convention and complete arrangements for sending the new edition of "Icecapades" to Atlantic City for its opening in Convention Hall on July 24th.

A Houston branch of the Dallas Variety Club is being organized by Al Lever, Houston manager for Interstate Theatre circuit.

Join Charity Committee

Five Variety Club members have been added to the executive committee of the Philadelphia Chapter of the National Foundation of Infantile Paralysis. Variety men now included on the committee are: Chief Barker, Dr. Leon Levy, Jay Emanuel, James Clark, Isaac D. Levy, Al Boyd, Charles Goldfine, Frank McNamee and Ted Schlanger.

Variety Club members of Indianapolis have booked the Opera Under the Stars company for performances at the Indiana State Fair grounds, for June 25th and 26th. Proceeds of the shows will be used to send underprivileged boys to summer camps, it was announced by Chief Barker, Kenneth T. Collins. Plans also are being launched for the tent's annual golf tournament, and the proceeds from this event will go to help meet expenses of the blood bank established by the tent last year at the Indiana University medical center.

Rubin Awarded Medal At Syracuse University

Syracuse University presented its George Arents Pioneer Medal to J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel of MGM, last Saturday, May 31st, at its annual commencement exercises. Chancellor William P. Graham made the presentation. Mr. Rubin is an Orange alumnus of the university.

In bestowing the medal, Chancellor Graham read the citation: "Alumnus of Syracuse and native of our city, you have had a memorable career. . . . Admitted the bar, you chose New York City as your place of residence, and for a time you engaged in the political life of that city. . . . But your chosen profession of law called you into its active service and with that relationship you have become one of the country's outstanding leaders in the motion picture industry."

Dr. Peale Named Advisor

Following the appeal of Warner Brothers for a technical assistant on the production of Hertzell Spence's biography of his father, "One Foot in Heaven," the Rev. Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, New York, has been designated by a committee of Protestant clergymen, representing various denominations and sections of the country, to serve in that capacity.

Ted Wynn in Buffalo

Ted Wynn, new RKO exploitation representative for the Buffalo and Albany territory, has taken up his headquarters at the company's Buffalo exchange.

Havana Exhibitors To Honor O'Connor

by RAMON PEON
in Havana

Edward O'Connor, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer branch manager in Havana, was to be guest of honor at a luncheon given by Cuban exhibitors and the local Federation of Film and Theatrical Reporters of Cuba on June 7th at the Royal Palm hotel.

A short subject depicting the activities of Nazi agents in Latin America is in production in Havana. Saviur Cancion and Rogelio Pujol are the producers. It will be available in both Spanish and English versions.

Ferrer de Couto, popular motion picture columnist and commentator, will be given a dinner to honor his 20th year as a film trade reporter. Ernesto P. Smith, Columbia manager here, and Ramon Garcia, of Universal, are in charge of the affair.

Jorge Pineyro, technical director of Educational Pictures of Cuba, has returned from New York to handle the Cuban agency for Dupont raw stock and all 15 and 35 mm Victor Animatograph equipment. A new plant will be constructed to produce Spanish versions of Erpi pictures in 16 mm.

Teamsters Withdraw Pickets

Pickets have been withdrawn from New York film and legitimate houses employing orchestras under an understanding reached between the Theatrical Teamsters Union Local 817 and the theatres. The teamsters have been at odds with Local 802, the musicians union, over the handling of band instruments and paraphernalia.

'No Competition', 16 mm Men Say

Sixteen mm. film distributors are actively furthering their unwritten but understood pledge to refrain from competition with established 35 mm. theatrical exhibition, the Allied Non-Theatrical Film Association, headquarters of which are in New York, claimed on Monday. It was added that the organization, to explain further the legitimate aims of 16 mm. non-theatrical exhibition, was preparing a booklet for distribution in their field among theatre owners, and to other interested parties—explaining, in the words, of the Association:

". . . the service the 16 mm. field renders to the community through schools, clubs, churches, hospitals, institutions and communities not otherwise reached by the theatrical field."

In a special statement, reiterating the standing agreement of the members of the association, an agreement embodied in the by-laws, the Association on Monday asserted, "It is not the purpose of the 16 mm. field to compete with the 35 mm., but rather to cooperate in such a way that each will recognize the other's value and place in an industry which provides the entertainment and a medium of education to a big nation."

William K. Hedwig is president of the Association.

Eastman Elects Flint

Directors of the Eastman Kodak Company on Wednesday elected Charles K. Flint vice-president, and appointed Edward S. Farrow production manager. Succeeding Mr. Farrow as assistant production manager is William S. Vaughn.

STUDIO LABOR SEEKS NEW BASIS FOR NEGOTIATIONS, PACT THREATENED

Guarantee of Autonomy, Abrogation of Basic Pact Among Repercussions of Indictment of Browne, Bioff in New York

by VANCE KING
In Hollywood

Indictment, two weeks ago, of IATSE union leaders George E. Browne and William Bioff on charges of extorting money from film companies under threats of calling studio and other strikes has shaken union labor in Hollywood to its base and may result in an entirely new system of negotiations affecting not only the IATSE studio locals but other internationals' studio units as well.

Reportedly at stake are the continuance of the internationals' studio basic agreement, in which six internationals participate and negotiate for their Hollywood locals, guarantee of permanent restoration of autonomy to IATSE locals, and the possibility of a rebellion among rank and file members of the IATSE's ten Hollywood locals who at present are at an impasse with producers in negotiations over demands for new wage scales and conditions presented to studio heads months ago.

Local Requests Resignation

What might possibly be the first open break of an IATSE studio local was reported Tuesday following a meeting of Studio Electricians' Local 728, at which a resolution was reported to have been adopted requesting Bioff, Browne and their aides to resign. Executives of the local refused to confirm or deny the report on the ground that disclosing information of business meetings was against the local's by-laws.

Great interest in the developments surrounding the Browne-Bioff indictments and in indications that U. S. Attorney Mathias Correa in New York is continuing the investigation into the alleged conspiracy in which $550,000 assertedly changed hands, has been evinced by the locals' members and officers in Hollywood.

Whether other IATSE officials will receive official attention from the Federal Grand Jury in New York which returned the Browne and the Bioff true bills is a matter of much speculation, inasmuch as the conspiracy count specifically states "and others."

Sitting on the sidelines also anxiously awaiting developments are CIO organizers who lost their initial jousts with the IATSE in the 1937 Federated Motion Picture Crafts strike and also in their backing of the fight of the United Studio Technicians Guild against the Browne-Bioff combination in a consent election held in 1938 under the auspices of the National Labor Relations Board.

Focal point of the CIO sponsored attack then (the Technicians Guild readily admitted at that time that the CIO was aiding it morally and financially) was the Browne-Bioff regime and the power that Browne wielded in being able to create a "state of emergency" and cancel autonomy of the locals at will.

Guild strategy at that time failed in an attempt to take over the jurisdiction held by the five IATSE locals. Four of the locals voted in the NLRB election, almost as a unit, for continuing under IATSE rule, while the strength of the Guild came mainly from the dissident members belonging to the Studio Technicians Local 37. Shortly after the Alliance was victorious in the election, the international officers suspended Local 37's autonomy, dissolved it into five smaller units and granted them new charters, revoking for all time the charter of Local 37.

The civil litigation that followed, and which lasted for months in Los Angeles County Superior courts, will be echoed when the Los Angeles County Grand Jury takes up an investigation this week reportedly into the testimony given by IATSE executives in the injunction suit brought by Joseph Carpenter, president, and other officers of Local 37, in an attempt to stop the dissolution and hold intact the funds of Local 37 which, at the time of the takeover, amounted to thousands of dollars in bank deposits. Harold V. Smith, business representative of Sound Technicians Local 695 then and now, and at that time also international representative appointed by Browne, and Floyd Billingsley, of San Francisco, international vice president then and now, have been summoned by the inquisitors. Smith, subpoenaed last week, said he was not informed why he was wanted for questioning.

Business Agents Negotiate

IATSE business agents, representing the ten studio locals, have decided to embark on a program of conducting their own negotiations without asking for the help of the international. Meeting last week and enlarging their committee to consist, with them, of three added representatives of each local, the group is awaiting word from the producers on their insistence for an early meeting to discuss the new wage scales and working conditions they demand. The letter asking for an immediate hearing with the producers was addressed to Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers and chairman of the producers' labor negotiations committee, instead of to the regular producer labor contacts, Pat Casey, who is now in New York, or Fred Pelton, his assistant.

On Monday, it was said in New York Mr. Casey would proceed to the Coast, to confer with IATSE union heads there.

The IATSE locals' committee met Monday night, in the office of chairman Harold V. Smith business agent of the Sound Technicians Local 695. Results were not divulged. However, it was reported there was discussion about civil litigation for back wages, if the Wages and Hours Administration's forthcoming report did not mention the subject. Mr. Smith particularly has been seeking back overtime wages for members of his local, whom, he asserted, worked 54 hours a week even after the Wages and Hours Act became effective. Laborites in Hollywood say some $3,000,000 in back pay is due workers.

The IATSE locals' committee has drawn up rules and regulations to govern its conduct in negotiations and expects to present a "united front" in the talks with the producers.

Heretofore, ever since the restoration of autonomy of the studio locals which had been removed by Browne several months after his accession to the office of the international presidency in 1935, the locals have not been lax in appealing to the international president or Bioff, his "personal representative," when reaching an impasse in negotiations with the studios.

It was Bioff who personally took charge of the negotiations in 1939 when, in September, upon threat of a national strike, both by Hollywood locals and projectionists throughout the country, he obtained a ten percent raise for the locals' members.

It was Bioff who, as chairman of the Conference of AFL Studio Unions, obtained in November of that year a ten percent increase in wages for ten small unions in Hollywood, this also upon threat of a strike which also would involve the IATSE.

Got 10 Per Cent Increase

It was Bioff, also, who gave orders from Chicago, where he was waging an unsuccessful fight to keep from serving a jail sentence on a pandering conviction of years ago, that called off a one-day strike of sound technicians at Republic when that studio refused to sign an agreement calling for 54 hours wages for 42 hours work. Bioff, according to an announcement, ended the strike upon his promise to negotiate a settlement with Herbert J. Yates, Republic board chairman. To this date, however, matters at Republic are "status quo" as far as the sound men are concerned.

In December of 1939, three of the four unions then in the international agreement received ten percent salary increases, the musicians alone of the carpenters, electricians and teamsters not receiving a raise. At that time the utility workers and the plasterers were included in the basic agreement, making a total of six in all to continue under the major pact to this day. (The carpenters in August of that year also received a ten percent increase to make up for the differential in other crafts' scales denied the union previously in a dispute.)

Since December, 1939, there have been no meetings of company heads and leaders of the six international unions, several matters having interfered in the meantime. At first, curtailment of foreign markets due to the war abroad made it disadvantageous to the unions to seek an upward adjustment of wage scales.

Then, too, came the question of the adaptability of the Wages and Hours act to certain classifications of studio workers who have been and are working hours beyond the statutory limitations without receiving the required overtime. In a hearing lasting several days in Los Angeles, Chief Examiner Merle D. Vincent of the Wages and Hours division left for Washington to prepare his recommendations, first announcing, however, a period of several weeks' time during which attorneys for producers and unions could file written briefs and contentions

BROWNE IN NEW YORK JUNE 20TH

George E. Browne, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, who, along with his Hollywood "personal representative," Willie Bioff, was indicted two weeks ago by a New York Federal Grand Jury on a charge of extorting $550,000 from Twentieth Century Fox, Loew's, Paramount and Warners, will be arraigned in that city's Federal Court June 20th. He surrendered last week in Chicago.

Meanwhile, Bioff waived extradition on Tuesday and posted a $50,000 appearance bond. A removal hearing, scheduled for Thursday was cancelled.

Hollywood Unions Stir in Rebellion

supporting their requests for inclusion and/or exclusion of the questioned crafts from and in the provisions of the act.

In the background is a jurisdictional fight between Studio Utility Employes Local 724, whose international is a signatory to the pact, and the IATSE Utility Workers Local 727, the latter organization having filed before the regional office of the National Labor Relations Board charges of discrimination, in the granting of work, against the producers. Principal complaint is that the studios are not honoring work permits granted laborers by IATSE Local 727 and have wrongfully discharged its members. Studio Utility Employes Local 724 has the work of destruction of sets and laboring on all permanent construction, under jurisdictional lines laid down under the internationals' agreement.

Local 724 lost about half of its members to Local 727 following the turmoil growing out of the 1937 strike of the Federated Motion Picture Crafts, commonly referred to as the painters' strike, and the Technicians' Guild fight with the IATSE which was followed by the dissolution of Local 37 and the creation of Local 727, along with four other new units of the alliance.

Under the basic agreement, international officers, having before them the recommendations only of its Hollywood locals, alone do the negotiating with the company heads. Representatives of the Hollywood locals sit in on the deals, but generally have no voice outside of presenting the demands approved by the organizations' members.

There exists a so-called gentleman's agreement, or tacit understanding, that the wage scales and conditions negotiated by the major companies apply to the workers in the independent studios. It was the negotiating on its own with independent studios and sound companies that brought Sound Technicians Local 695 to its strike at Republic. The IATSE, however, has not been a party to the basic agreement for some years.

Although several IATSE locals had asked the international's help previously this year in obtaining a satisfactory readjustment of wage scales, the locals have decided to steer away from that course, under the present circumstances.

U. S. Mediation Seen In Disney's Strike

The strike by the Screen Cartoonists Guild, Local 852, against the Walt Disney studio, on Monday neared its second week, workers having walked out last Wednesday morning, when the studio asked for an NLRB election instead of conceding the Guild had a majority of workers. On Monday, too, the United States Conciliation Service was reported intervening.

Union officials were said to have told the Service they'd confer with Disney officials if the latter would grant immediate recognition to the union as the sole bargaining agency for Disney cartoonists.

At the same time, Fox West Coast circuit executives were said to have told Guild men asking withdrawal of Disney cartoons, that the circuit would observe its exhibition contracts.

The studio this week reported normal routine, with only 309 of 1,214 employees not working. The Guild claimed 450 strikers.

The Guild has asked support of other unions; and the Society of Motion Picture Film Editors discussed this Tuesday. The sound technicians' union ordered its members not to cross the picket line. The Photographers' union said it would give similar orders to 25 workers. However, other union workers, through Monday, had been crossing the line.

'Father' of Variety Boys Camp Honored

L. M. RICE

A FATHER'S DAY celebration will be held June 15th by the Boys Camp of the Variety Club of Texas in honor of R. E. Griffith, its collective father and benefactor. It was Mr. Griffith who conceived the idea of the camp and donated 540 acres of Texas fields and woodland on the banks of the Leon River, to make it an actuality. During 1939 and 1940 over 1,200 underprivileged boys enjoyed the camp, and this year plans call for the accommodation of 750 boys to attend during two-week periods.

Paul Short, chief barker, of the Tent, has assigned James Owen Cherry to arrange the outing, picnic and celebration. L. M. (Mike) Rice, chairman of the committee in charge of operation of the camp, and R. J. O'Donnell will be the speakers.

Fox Theatres Corporation Trustees Dismissed

In a final report of Milton C. Weisman, Kenneth P. Steinreich and Leopold Porrino, trustees of Fox Theatres Corp., it was disclosed in the New York supreme court the corporation had a net operating profit of $10,645 in 1940 and will have a possible profit of $10,000 in 1941. The report was approved by Justice Felix Benvenga, who discharged the trustees.

Final allowances of $2,500 were made to Mr. Steinreich, $1,875 to Mr. Weisman, and $628 to Mr. Porrino. Fox Theatres was also authorized to sell property held by it in the Bronx, N. Y., the assessed value of which is $8,000. This consists of a loft and remains of an office building. A dividend of ½ per cent was authorized to be paid creditors. Attorneys Hirson and Bertini were given $6,000 for their services.

The assets now total $168,278, all that remains of an estate valued at $35,000,000 a decade ago. The trustees were appointed to liquidate the assets of the company by former Judge Martin T. Manton on February 24th, 1939.

Sonotone Leases Offices

The Sonotone Corporation, manufacturers of hearing devices for theatres and other places, with a factory at Elmsford in Westchester County, New York, has leased the seven-story building at 570 Fifth Avenue New York for ten years. Brown, Wheelock, Harris, Stevens, Inc., and Cushman & Wakefield were the brokers who arranged the leasing of the building.

Theatre Concerns Incorporate

Michael F. Walsh, Secretary of State in Albany, N. Y., has issued papers of incorporation to two new exhibition companies, Garnett Operating Corp. and Classic Features Theatres, Inc. Grenart Operating Corp. has $20,000 capital stock with Benjamin R. Raphael, Brooklyn, Susanne Groves, St. Albans, L. I., and George Blake, Brooklyn, as directors. Classic Features Theatre, Inc., has 100 shares of stock, with Freda Jarrett, Esther Bergman and Beatrice Gillman, 229 West 42nd Street, New York, as directors and Philip F. Jacobs, same address, as filing attorney.

Goldstein, Decker Join

Louis Goldstein, of Astor Pictures of Southern California, has joined with Sam Decker of Majestic Pictures, and the two will operate jointly under the name of Majestic Pictures Distributing Corporation, at the latter's present headquarters, 1928 South Vermont Avenue, Los Angeles.

Schools Use Films

Motion pictures are being put to increased use for educational purposes by the Birmingham, Ala., city schools. According to T. R. Wright, principal of the Barker School and chairman of the visual education committee, 12 elementary schools and six high schools now have sound film equipment.

New Washington Exchange

Paramount will build a new exchange building in Washington, D. C., to cost approximately $100,000.

SPECULATION OVER NEW SALES ORDER DELAYING PRE-SEASONAL ACTIVITY

MGM, Paramount, Warners, UA Silent on Convention Plans; RKO, Columbia and 20th Century-Fox Schedule Meetings

With the start of new order selling under the consent decree only a few weeks away, convention dates and sales policy for at least four major distributors, three of them signatories to the New York anti-trust suit pact, remain undisclosed. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Warner Brothers and United Artists continue to answer convention queries from exhibitors, their own sales staffs, and the press with the same "under consideration" reply advanced weeks ago.

None of the 'Big 5' consent decree signers have as yet held conventions, at this comparatively late date. Of the five, only RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox have scheduled national sales meetings to announce plans for selling the first of the "blocks-of-five" in which manner the 1941-42 product must be offered to exhibitors. Both meetings are scheduled for New York's Waldorf Astoria hotel, in mid-June, within a few days of each other. RKO will meet June 16-20, and 20th Century-Fox June 17-19.

Future Speculative

Behind the uncertainty of convention plans, which in most cases are two or three months later than last year when all companies were well into field selling the 1940-41 product by mid-June, lies a general admission that what eventually will happen under the new decree sales system is still highly speculative. Privately, executives freely admit that they just don't know what the exhibitor response to trade shows, block-of-five offerings, and regional purchasing restrictions will be. There are many guesses, often founded on long years of experience, but few officials are prepared to hazard any general definition of policy or set up new practices until they see how things take form.

Only Universal, of the "Little Three" and the small independent producers have had their annual sales meetings. Anxious to be first in the field, and to sell as many '41-'42 program pictures as possible before the big distributors start operations, the independents in most cases met earlier this year than last. Several started their annual sales push several months in advance of their customary date. Reports on the success of the maneuver are conflicting. Some sales managers claim record pre-season sales. In other quarters it is reported that theatre operators are unwilling to make commitments for any pictures until they, too, can see what will develop when the majors launch consent-decree sales operations. The independent circuits are particularly reluctant to sign for next year's pictures from the independents until they see what wares the Big Five display, and how.

It is generally conceded, however, that the early campaigners had everything to gain and nothing to lose by getting first to the field and that when the '41-'42 selling competition gets hot they will not have lost by their early missionary work. Optimists among them say that unless the initial major offerings are world-beaters exhibitors will flock to the unrestricted block offerings of the independents to guarantee a year-long product supply.

Besides uncertainty of sales procedure the Big Five are slow to call the usual pre-season convention because of the decree's blocks-of-five restraint. Hitherto they have always offered for sale—on paper only—practically all of their yearly program, in some instances as many as 60 pictures. Obviously the decree restriction that distributors offer no more than five pictures in a group, and then only after they have been trade shown in the district where they are to be sold, eliminates many of the reasons for the traditional all-out national convention to ballyhoo the season's program.

More regional sales meetings, both at the start of the selling year and during its course may be substituted for the former national parley. Many executives are known to feel that such a plan would enhance the promotion of each blocks-of-five by setting the sales ballyhoo, within the organization itself, and in the field, closer to the release and selling dates. The latter dates, formerly up to a year apart appear likely to be reduced to intervals of a few weeks.

Indications from Warners, where sales officers have openly expressed doubt as to whether there will be any Warner convention this year, tend to support reports that the company will go the decree's block-of-five restriction one better, and offer many of their pictures singly, or in combinations of two or three. If such is the case periodic regional gatherings to boost important A films, or seasonal strings of them, may form the basis of the policy.

Paramount's "Show and Sell"

Paramount is expected to be ready with its formula for '41-'42 sales sometime next week following the return of Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of sales. Mr. Agnew has been on a tour of exchanges, studio, and key distribution centers for a last check on exhibitor sentiment towards the blocks-of-five. The company, it is admitted, hopes that the function of selling and trade-showing may be combined successfully and expresses interest in a regional sales meetings plan to aid the "show and sell" innovation.

'NEW ORDER' DELAYS SELLING PLANS

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives are currently on the Coast conferring with the studio on the make-up of their first blocks, and to determine how many blocks will be offered immediately. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, is expected to announce new season plans on his return next week.

Revealing that trade shows of 1941-42 product would start in the field "almost immediately" after its national sales convention in New York on June 16th to 19th, RKO-Radio became the first of the Big Five to indicate definite plans for meeting the trade screening requirements of the consent decree. Previously RKO was the first company to state its policy on blocks of five when Ned E. Depinet, vice president in charge of sales, announced that the first group would be ready for the New York meeting. (See MOTION PICTURE HERALD, April 19, page 8)

Mr. Depinet, in announcing the company's convention plans at a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York on April 17th outlined the advantages to exhibitors of trade showings:

"It is as logical that exhibitors will build up larger patronage if they screen all pictures before licensing and playing them and really set out to cash in on all the value of each picture and try to milk it dry. The old habit of pulling a picture and grabbing another whenever one doesn't stand on its own feet, without much exhibitor help, will not be so easy. We will have to do business with what we have and add to the efforts of selling them instead of pulling them."

No Communal Screenings

Communal screening arrangements are out as far as RKO is concerned, Mr. Smith added. "We will show and sell our product independently of what anyone else may do. That has always been our policy and it will not change under decree selling," he declared. Last month MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in a survey of tentative operating plans under the blocks-of-five requirement, reported that some of the major companies had discussed community screening rooms, or joint operation of a "trade show theatre" in larger exchange centers.

RKO, however, will rely on its present facilities in the branch offices, augmented by independent arrangements with local and circuit theatres and large independent screening rooms to provide room for both special and routine screenings. Mr. Depinet and A. A. Schubart, director of exchange operations, recently completed a study of the company's exchanges and are reported to have drawn up a city-by-city list of possible screening facilities. Local managers for each picture will choose the arrangements which will provide the best accommodations for the number of exhibitors expected to attend the trade show.

Affiliated circuit theatres, when available, and other large metropolitan houses will be used for special trade screenings by RKO, but the company will not use so-called "previews" or pre-release runs in its own theatres as trade shows. RKO officials expressed doubt that public performances, even with special reserved sections for exhibitors, would meet the consent decree definition of trade shows. They cited the decree definition which states that a "trade showing is an exhibition of a feature at a theatre or projection room for the benefit of exhibitors generally." They questioned whether a public performance of any sort could be construed as "for the benefit of exhibitors" and indicated that RKO screenings will be restricted to the trade.

Probably not more than one picture will be screened at a time, under the RKO system. Trade showings, starting after the New York convention will be from two months to three weeks in advance of release of the picture. In the case of top pictures special promotional trade screenings will be arranged in each district a month or six weeks ahead of release.

The problem of showing pictures to exhibitors in each of the 32 RKO exchanges is not expected materially to complicate setting release dates. A basic national release date will be set for each picture, and while availability of prints for district trade showing may vary in some instances, requiring a local release date, the divergence in no case is expected to exceed a few days.

Press Announcements Planned

RKO will rely principally on the trade press announcements prescribed in the decree to notify exhibitors of routine screenings. Special invitations, mailing lists, and salesmen's personal contacts, will also be used, however, to invite exhibitors to the trade screenings of leading pictures in each block-of-five.

Currently RKO has eight 1941-42 pictures before the camera or in the cutting room, according to reports from Hollywood. Among the titles which will probably be on hand for the New York convention and receive the first experimental trade showings in the field are: "Before the Fact," co-starring Gary Grant and Joan Fontaine; "My Life with Caroline," starring Ronald Colman; "The Devil and Daniel Webster," with Thomas Mitchell, Walter Huston, Anne Shirley, James Craig and Simone Simon; "Father Takes a Wife," with Adolphe Menjou and Gloria Swanson.

Also in preparation are: "Unexpected Uncle," "Journey Into Fear," starring Michele Morgan; "Joan of Paris," with the same star; "Through the Thin Wall," starring Charles Laughton; "The Mayor of 44th Street," a new Kay Kyser musical; "Valley of the Sun"; an untitled feature on radio news broadcasting, to be directed by Irving Reis; an untitled horse racing yarn in Technicolor to be produced and directed by David Butler.

Home office officials qualify all plans and prophesies on trade show practices with the observation that the success or failure of trade shows as a selling medium will depend on the exhibitor response. Sales chiefs will carefully check attendance and reaction at the first screenings. Meanwhile, it is readily admitted, all plans "are subject to change without notice."

Columbia Opens First Of Two Sales Meets

Columbia opens the first of two national sales conventions Saturday for a two-day session at the Hotel Drake, Chicago. A. Montague, general sales manager, announced that the first convention marks a departure from the company's usual policy in that it is a national executive sales meeting. Home office executives and sales heads, as well as Columbia division and branch managers will attend. Harry Cohn, president of Columbia Pictures, is expected from Hollywood. Jack Cohn, vice-president, and Mr. Montague, head the home office delegation at Chicago.

Plans for the second convention, to be attended by the entire Columbia sales force will be decided upon at the executive session in Chicago.

Mr. Montague will preside at the two-day session in Chicago, at which time an analysis of the company's forthcoming 1941-42 product will be presented. Columbia's full program of features and short subjects will be reported in detail, it was stated.

Among the home office executives who will attend the convention are Rube Jackter, assistant sales manager; Lou Astor, circuit sales supervisor; Lou Weinberg, circuit sales supervisor, and M. J. Weisfeldt, short subjects sales supervisor. In addition to these sales executives, the home office contingent will include Hank Kaufman, Bernard Zeeman, Maurice Grad, George Josephs, Seth Raisler, Vincent Borrelli and Joseph Freiberg and David A. Lipton, advertising and publicity director.

Division and branch managers present from the field at this first national executive sales meeting include:

Southern division manager Sam Moscow of Atlanta; branch managers R. J. Ingram of Atlanta; Joseph Gins of Charlotte; J. B. Underwood of Dallas; J. J. Rogers of Memphis; C. A. Gibbs of Oklahoma City; and H. Duvall of New Orleans.

Midwestern division manager Phil Dunas of Chicago; branch managers M. H. Evidon, Des Moines; O. J. Ruby of Milwaukee; H. J. Chapman of Minneapolis; and J. H. Jacobs of Omaha.

Western division manager Jerome Safron of Los Angeles; branch managers R. C. Hill of Denver; W. C. Ball of Los Angeles; J. R. Beale of Portland, Ore.; W. G. Seib of Salt Lake City; L. E. Tillman of San Francisco; L. N. Walton of Seattle.

New York division manager Nat Cohn of New York; branch managers Irving Wormser and Sol Trauner of New York, Joe Miller of Albany, I. H. Rogovin of Boston; Phil Fox of Buffalo, T. F. O'Toole of New Haven; H. E. Weiner of Philadelphia.

National Screen Meeting At New York, June 16–19

National Screen Service and its affiliates, National Screen Accessories and Advertising Accessories, Inc., will hold their annual sales gatherings at New York on June 16th to 19th, George Dembow, vice-president in charge of sales, reported this week. Sessions will be at the Waldorf-Astoria. This year NSS is replacing previous regional gatherings with the one meeting in New York. All home office executives, district, and branch sales managers, and field sales and service men will attend.

Republic Adds to '41-'42 Serial List

Republic Pictures in Hollywood announces four serials for its 1941-42 product roster. In addition to "Texas Rangers" the company will make "Robin Hood," starring Roy Rogers; "Fu Manchu Strikes Back," a Sax Rohmer mystery thriller, and "Dick Tracy's Revenge," based on a comic strip. H. S. Brown will produce the chapter pictures with Jack English and William Whitney directing.

Thirteen shorts in production at the Warner studio in Hollywood raises activity in the shorts department, headed by Gordon Hollingshead, to an all-time peak.

The Angostura-Wupperman Corporation, manufacturers of Angostura Bitters, which Hollywood's Frank Morgan's family has handed down in secret process for 121 years (Frank Morgan is Frank Wupperman), is advertising the thousands of Americans who are migrating to the West Indies for army and navy air base developments, to take generous doses of their bitters to help them meet the climatic conditions of the islands, tropical heat being as enervating as it is. Rum, they say, is the staple drink of the islands, and Angostura Bitters, they add, go very nicely with it. Long, cool, frosted Tom Collinses are no soap.

Jimmy Cagney, Bette Davis, Ann Sheridan, Eddie Robinson, George Raft and Wayne Morris are going to fly for Britain's Royal Air Force. They won't fly planes. They'll use their own wings, for Cagney, Davis et al are the names of homing pigeons being trained at the San Fernando Valley ranch of Tennant C. Wright, Warner production manager. The birds are being trained by Wright for the purpose of making emergency hops in case an RAF plane runs into difficulties. The birds will be cooped up in the belly of the ships and will be released with messages bearing the location of the disabled plane and will wing back to the home base to let the commander know about the pilot's trouble. Wright is donating 25 birds to the British.

Now that "Fantasia" has left the Fulton Theatre in Pittsburgh, the tale can be told. It seems that for seven weeks, a local ballet dancer rehearsed on stage back of the screen, because she wanted to use Stokowski's music. Ann Wald, 16-year old, wrote manager John Walsh, Jr., asking freedom of back stage in order to improve her technique, including the audience bows, which the audience couldn't see. He okayed. She rehearsed.

Mr. Grasselly intends splitting the big stone into little ones of from five to fifty carats.

An unusual aftermath to the reams of publicity, breaks accorded the recent visit to the Harvard Lampoon annual dance by Hal Roach's new star, Marjorie Woodworth, appears in the Editor and Publisher.

Using a photograph of Miss Woodworth (Wham Girl) sitting in the lap of the bronze statue of old John Harvard himself the Boston Post took a full page ad institutionalizing their 'staid' publication by comparing the press coverage given to the "Wham" girl, to the increased circulation of the Post. They used the headline "Who Packs the WHAM in Boston?," to tie-in the photograph of Woodworth. United Artists press agents insist that's something.

One gallon of salads, with dressing.
Five large stalks of celery.
Six loaves of bread.
Two quarts of pickles.

No Comment Department, United Press reporting from Rome:

The newspaper Popolo d'Italia of Milan appealed to Deanna Durbin today not to aid the British.

"Dearest Deanna," the newspaper said, "in the past we always had a soft place in our heart for you. However, today we fear that you, like the remainder of American youth, are controlled by the President and perhaps tomorrow will see fine American youth marching into battle in defense of Britain.

"If this is so, you don't yet know how hard life will be for the youth of tomorrow. Why doesn't American youth break the chains which are blindly dragging the entire nation into a war in which it will be defeated?

"To be able to gnaw the Axis, steel tough jaws are necessary and not rosy ones used to chewing gum. If you only knew how good and beautiful are the children of Rome and Berlin and how much poetry there is in the youth of Europe, then you wouldn't listen to your and our enemies."

The Reluctant Dragon

(RKO Radio - Disney)

Disney Varieties

With "The Reluctant Dragon" Walt Disney has demonstrated, as in "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" and in "Fantasia," his belief that the new and novel should be attempted so that additional forms of screen entertainment may be discovered. The feature cartoon was born with "Snow White" and in "Fantasia" Disney artists gave visual representation to classical music. Now in "The Reluctant Dragon" a full length motion picture has been welded together out of a tour of the studio and the presentation of several short subjects, one of which gives the title to the whole film.

Robert Benchley as a man persuaded by his wife to attempt to sell the idea of filming Kenneth Grahame's "The Reluctant Dragon" to Walt Disney is the unifying link for the picture. On his way to see Disney he has numerous adventures during which he manages to see the inside workings of the studio and three complete short subjects. At length he finds Disney in a projection room and is shown the latest production "The Reluctant Dragon"; the opening scenes were filmed in black and white and the rest, including all the interpolated shorts, are in color.

This Disney combination cartoon and studio tour is not revolutionary in the same sense as the word was applied to "Snow White" and "Fantasia" but it possesses solid entertainment values—almost everyone likes to see how pictures are made, especially cartoons, about which comparatively little has been previously shown. Also Robert Benchley has a number of amusing sequences, and best of all, this picture, like all films from the Disney workshop, is stamped with those characteristic qualities which have been applauded in shorts and features produced by that organization.

The Disney touch is most manifest in one of the short subject sequences "Baby Weems" which introduces a technique of using more stills than animated drawings. "Baby Weems" is a charming story of a remarkable child who talks from the time he is two days old. He becomes so involved in the problems of the day that his own parents are not even allowed to see him. Just before a momentous address to the nation, Baby Weems is taken ill. Upon his recovery his premature wisdom and gift of speech are lost and the world immediately forgets him. But his own parents are delighted for their baby is returned to them.

The sequence on "The Reluctant Dragon" is in the pattern of feature length cartoons but it is much shorter. A dragon and a knight, fearful of each other, wage a mock battle. Both would prefer to be poets but circumstances force them to pretend to fight. While pleasing in its way this subject hardly measures up to the exacting standards which Disney has set for himself in shorts and features, the letdown is perhaps especially noticeable after the excellent "Baby Weems" subject.

The exhibitor may find that one of the best selling points of "The Reluctant Dragon" is that it takes one right through the cartoon studio and shows in a delightful way how those subjects are produced. The name of Robert Benchley coupled with a Disney feature also is of considerable exploitation value. Special sound effects created by the Sonovox, an instrument which allows any sound, as that of an animal, to come from a human, are other new attractions.

Novelty Comedy

This is an oddly constructed comedy offering showmen the names of Binnie Barnes, Gilbert Roland and Billy Gilbert for exploitation use and a group of the studio's "starlets" in support. Leo Gorcey and Sidney Blackmer are other names available for billing.

Utilized chiefly as framework for comedy situations, the story concerns the efforts of three teen-age daughters of a widow to disentangle their mother's fiance from a previous matrimonial alliance. Their efforts include an attempt to persuade his first wife that she is insane, which fails, and another to promote her interest in a rich man by way of diminishing her interest in the gentleman of the first part.

Produced by Albert J. Cohen and directed by Bernard Vorhaus, the picture is developed in unorthodox routine, sometimes to advantage, sometimes not. Unevenness of pace and partial lack of coherence mar the whole, detracting somewhat from screen value of a picture which is, however, above average in relation to budget.

Previewed at the Studio City theatre, near Hollywood, to a midweek audience of considerably less than capacity proportions which laughed intermittently, chiefly at individual incidents and bits in which various players displayed their comedy ability.—W. R. W.

Bill Elliott Western

This latest of the "Wild Bill Hickok Adventures" is not up to standard. Story, photography and cast are notably lacking in assistance rendered to the picture's star, Bill Elliott, who does his best with the chore assigned him.

In addition to Mr. Elliott, the cast includes Mary Dailey. Dub Taylor, Kenneth MacDonald, Frank Larue, Donald Curtis, Tom Moray and Stanley Brown. The story, in brief, has "Wild Bill" come to the small western town of Independence in order to avenge the death of his friend's father. While there, he uncovers another injustice being perpetrated by the same gang which has caused the original murder, and rights both wrongs at once.

Eddy Waller, as a circuit judge, deserves favorable mention for his handling of a comedy assignment.

Leon Barsha, working on the low-budget side of the studio, produced, and Lambert Hillyer directed.

Paper Bullets

(Producers Releasing—K-B Productions)

Crime Melodrama

"Paper Bullets" squeezes into its fast moving 70 minutes about every atom of entertainment that could be extracted from its story of politics and protected gambling and can take its place on the basis of quality among the better types of crime melodramas, the film to be distributed by Producers Releasing Corp., makes an auspicious debut in film production of the brothers Kozinsky, under the banner of K-B Productions.

Depicting politics in a large western city, it tells of a reformer who takes to the radio in his vice crusade and who is forced to become a member of the "syndicate" in control of illegal activity upon threat of exposure of an earlier crime. It also is a tale of two boys and a girl who grew up in an orphanage and who by circumstances are drawn together when they are adults. One boy and the girl engaged in crime and the other, not.

Joan Woodbury, as the girl who turns to crime after being "railroaded" to prison for an offense which she did not commit, and Jack LaRue and John Archer, a Wrigley-Jesse Lasky air show contest winner, as the other orphans, play the principal roles, with Linda Ware, last seen with Bing Crosby in Paramount's "The Star Maker," as a singer whose career is furthered by the trio. Others included are Vince Barnett, Philip Trent, George Pembroke, Selmer Jackson, Kenneth Harlan, Bryant Washburn.

The Kozinskys—Maurice as producer and Franklin as his associate—show in their first film that budgetary limitations are not necessarily entertainment limitations. Phil Rosen, the veteran director, kept the tempo of the story at a fast clip from the start to the climax in which the members of the "syndicate" are convicted.

Miss Ware sings two songs, one of them, "Blue Is the Day," by Maurice Kozinsky, Johnny Lange and Lew Porter, being a good popular number bet.

Thieves Fall Out

(Warner Brothers)

Comedy and Criminals

Eddie Albert and Joan Leslie, the romantic twosome who appeared in similar roles in the recently released "The Great Mr. Nobody" and "The Wagons Roll at Night" are again costarred in this production of comedy and romance. Directed by Ray Enright the picture is novel in its presentation and theme although the dialogue is ofttimes trite and laborious.

The story revolves around two young people who want to get married but are prevented from doing so because of financial difficulties. The young man, in an effort to raise funds so that they may be married and start his own business, borrows on his far-distant legacy. Their troubles begin when two racketeers gain control of the legacy and attempt to swindle it from the couple.

Supporting Albert and Miss Leslie are Jane Darwell as the boy's grandmother with a vocabulary of expressions and slang common to that of racketeers and the underworld, which incidently, borders most of the time on silliness, Alan Hale as the boy's father, William T. Orr, John Litel, Anthony Quinn, Edward Brophy, Minna Gombell and others who aid in presenting an entertaining comedy and romance.

Reviewed at the Brooklyn Strand theatre where a late afternoon audience enjoyed the humorous situations as they arose but were noticably quiet when parts of the dialogue overreached for sprightliness.—GEORGE SPIRES.

House of Mystery

(Monogram)

Murder Melodrama

Based on an A. E. W. Mason novel, "House of Mystery" is an interesting cinema story of a French detective whose clever sleuthing uncovers the murderers of a wealthy dowager and saves her jewels from a criminal ring.

Directed by Walter Summers and produced in England, the film stars Keneth Kent and Judy Kelly as the egotistical detective and the girl in the case believed by all to be responsible for the murder. Although the film is typical of many imported from England and which have been produced on limited budgets, this production, in purveying to the audience the facts and clues in the case, possesses all the elements of entertaining murder melodramas.

A wealthy woman is murdered for her fortune in jewels during a spiritualist seance and her companion (Judy Kelly) disappears. "Inspector Hanaud" (Kent) is called in on the case by the sweetheart of the girl. Many clues are uncovered by the "Inspector" and all point to the guilt of the vanished girl until he finds a cache of jewels in the murdered woman's room. He deduces that the girl has been kidnapped to reveal the hiding place to the criminals. "Inspector Hanaud" sets a trap and after numerous adventures, captures the criminals, their boss, and rescues the girl.

For the most part those in supporting roles are unknown to American audiences, but, nevertheless, aid in presenting the film for its worth.

Reviewed at the New York theatre in the heart of Times Square attended by a noon-time audience, comprised for the most part of men and young boys, who watched with interest.—GEORGE SPIRES.

China Fights Back

(RKO Radio)

March of Time, Vol. VII, No. 11

The March of Time this issue returns to the four-year-old undeclared war in China for a periodical accounting. Thematically stemming from the title the subject shows the Chinese, under the leadership of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, still fighting to free their vast country of the Japanese. The Chinese assets are a determined leader, a people that refuses to give up and a well trained army. That army, according to the commentator, is larger today than ever before but still lacks heavy artillery and modern fighting aircraft. Loss of their seaports has left the Chinese with two routes to obtain war material—the better of the two being the Burma Road. As fast as the Japanese bomb the road, coolies repair it. The subject is interestingly presented. Running time, 18 minutes.

Twentieth Century-Fox, according to announcement made this week, has built up a backlog of 11 completed scripts, with as many more in final stages of preparation, due to unprecedented writing activity at the studio since the first of the year.

"READIN', WRITIN' AN' NOW ACTIN'"

Gone are the days when students a-wearyin' of lessons had nothing gayer to look forward to for vacation relaxation than Scout Camp, old swimming hole or a hammock in the shade of the old apple tree.

Come are the days when good-looking and presumably gifted young folk of school and college may look forward, if luck or circumstance favours, to spend the summer learning to act, and acting, in the movies.

For Warner Brothers will be giving "summer contracts" to the flower of the nation's school and college enrollment, by way of training them for careers in the films, especially Warner films, according to studio announcement issued at weekend.

As a start, the studio will place a dozen of the young, handsome or beautiful, as the case may be, on this special type of contract, sending them back to their campuses in time for classes come autumn.

As a start upon this start, the studio has signed Barbara Barton of Winnetka, Illinois.

Miss Barton is the niece of Congressman Bruce Barton.

Congressman Barton is the Barton of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne, the advertising agency that is—well, everybody knows B.B.D.&O.

Stories

Eighteen-story properties have been bought by Hollywood in recent weeks, eight of them in one block, and five were acquired by one studio.

Sigmund Neufeld, producing for Producers Releasing Corporation release, purchased eight original stories by Johnston McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro." The stories will be used for the "Frontier Marshal" series.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was responsible for five acquisitions, consisting of two novels, two originals and a Broadway musical comedy. The latter is "Red, Hot and Blue," by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, and is the story of a wealthy ex-manicurist who, aided by former convicts, starts a "love lottery."

The two books are "The Anointed," psychological tale by Clyde Brion Davis, and "Two Women," French Goncourt Prize novel by Maxcence van der Mersch, which treats of an unhappy marriage between a young girl and a smuggler, who kills himself and the man the girl really loves.

MGM's other two purchases, both originals, are "Bugles Blow at Midnight," by William Lipman, and "Comin' At You," by Borden Chase. The former is a story of a big city newspaper which falls into the hands of a group of Fascists, the latter a tale of the transformation of a hard-boiled shipyard manager.

Warners bought an original by Voldemar Vetluguin, entitled "Powers' Models," and will film it in Technicolor as a starring vehicle for Ann Sheridan.

Paramount purchased the radio sketch called "The Man in the Street," by William Bowers and Robinson Holbert. The story relates the romantic experiences of a young woman who interviews passersby on the street as part of her daily radio show. William H. Pine and William C. Thomas, whose Producers Corporation of America releases through Paramount, bought "Torpedo Boat," a story by Aaron Gottlieb of the U. S. "mosquito fleet," and a western detective mystery, "The Hands On the Clock Stood Still," written by Geoffrey Homes, pen name of Dan Mainwaring.

Screen rights to the radio serial, "Captain Midnight," were bought by Larry Darmour for Fall production.

KAO STOCKHOLDERS VOTE JUNE 12 ON CONSOLIDATION OF CIRCUIT

Merging Subsidiaries, Borrowing of $8,000,000 Provided in Reorganization Plan; Common Stock Dividends To Resume

Keith-Albee-Orpheum stockholders are to vote, in New York, June 12th, on the plan of reorganization of the corporation and the B. F. Keith Corporation, officials of the organizations this week announcing that the refunding program is ready, and that the refunding originally contemplated at $9,500,000, has been reduced to $8,000,000.

It is said the financing will permit consolidation of RKO subsidiary theatre companies with the parent company. The original amount of the refunding contemplated RKO's acquirement of all outstanding KAO preferred. The revision, however, provides that 15,000 shares will remain outstanding.

The plan, and amendments to the KAO incorporation certificate must be approved by two-thirds of the stockholders. For consummation, it is also dependent on two bank loans to be made. Tenders of the KAO stock must be made by Saturday.

Consolidation Planned

The reorganization provides for consolidation of the B. F. Keith and the Greater New York Vaudeville Theatres Corporation, two KAO subsidiaries; for the holding, by KAO, of all the outstanding stock of the consolidation, to be known as the B. F. Keith Corporation; for borrowing by the consolidated company of $6,000,000 from the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the U. S., secured by a like amount of 4½ per cent first mortgage bonds, maturing in 1954; for borrowing by KAO of $2,000,000 from a group of banks, including the Bankers Trust Company, the Manufacturers Trust Company, the Irving Trust Company, all of New York, and from the Security First National Bank of Los Angeles, this loan to be amortized by 2½ per cent serial notes maturing each year up to 1946, and to be secured by all capital stock and $1,400,000 in obligation of the consolidated Keith company.

This new money will be used to retire $4,454,000 of the B. F. Keith bonds, now outstanding, and $580,000 of the Keith Memorial bonds outstanding, each of 101 plus accrued interest; and, in addition, the new consolidated company will pay to KAO in cash, $919,000 obligation of the Greater New York Vaudeville Theatres Corporation.

KAO will ask for tenders of its preferred stock at a price not to exceed $65 per share, for an aggregate purchase of 48,586 shares. To insure the acquisition of that number of shares, which would leave 15,000 shares of the KAO preferred still outstanding, RKO is undertaking the purchase of sufficient additional shares to make up the total.

The difference in the $115.25 per share price at which RKO will accept tenders of the KAO preferred and the $65 per share price at which RKO will tender such shares to KAO, represents the average of the cost to RKO of the shares which it undertakes to procure for KAO, or approximately 27,500 such shares to be purchased at the higher price, together with its own 21,761 shares, for which it will receive $65 per share from KAO.

RKO itself holds 21,761 shares of KAO preferred and, through an option held by Atlas Corp. for the purchase of the preferred held by M. J. Meehan, will be in a position to acquire an estimated 20,000 shares still held by Mr. Meehan, and approximately 7,500 shares already acquired by Atlas from Mr. Meehan. RKO will accept tenders of the stock at $114.25 per share, representing the highest price it will have to pay to present holders of the preferred, but will, itself, tender the shares to KAO at $65 per share.

KAO will immediately pay the $15.75 per share in dividend arrears on the 15,000 shares of preferred which will remain outstanding, and in this way, and through amendments to KAO's certificate of incorporation, which also will be submitted to the shareholders for action at the June 12 meeting, will regain a majority on the board of directors for the holders of its common stock and will make possible the resumption of common stock dividends.

RKO owns substantially all of the KAO common stock. Because of provisions which entitled preferred holders to elect a majority of the board of directors of KAO when three consecutive dividends on the preferred had been omitted, it has not held a majority representation on the KAO board since 1934, when the third dividend was passed, and has not received dividends on its KAO common stock holdings for an even greater length of time because of the continuing arrears on preferred dividends.

Koerner on RKO Policy Points to Expansion

Almost the first official, and public, act of Charles Koerner, new operations chieftain of the RKO circuit, was the appointment of Edward Alperson, formerly of Grand National, Warner Brothers, and the Skouras chain, as head film buyer and booker, with Max Fellerman being retained in that capacity for the circuit's New York area houses.

The appointment was announced late last week, shortly after Mr. Koerner, formerly West Coast head for the circuit, assumed his post in the New York home office and gave out his first interview to the trade press—an interview at which he asserted the circuit would not close any more theatres this summer than last, and, in fact, was preparing for increased business by the erection of several theatres.

Mr. Koerner said no changes in the circuit's executive personnel, nor in its divisional setup, were contemplated for some months. Any changes, he intimated, would be made, if at all, in the fall months. He added no one at present, would be assigned to fill the West Coast position he left.

The new theatres in construction, and to be erected, by the circuit, are in Trenton, New Jersey, and Forest Hills, Long Island. The former theatre is under way; the latter is in the planning stage. Reason for the latter, he explained, is an approximately 40 per cent population increase in the area.

Apropos of building theatres—building done by a major company affiliate—Mr. Koerner remarked that the consent decree allowed "reasonable" expansion; i.e., expansion because of territory needs.

The theatres RKO is closing for the summer, he noted, are: the Orpheum, Kansas City; the Albee, Providence; the Strand, Syracuse; the Grand, Columbus, Ohio; the Orpheum, Champagne, Illinois, on Sunday; and the Palace, Chicago, on June 26th.

Mr. Koerner conceded a decline in boxoffice receipts nationally, but refused to hazard a reason, beyond saying he thought the public was hampered by a combination of things:

"I think there is an uncertainty, an unrest; people are thinking of their new income taxes, of a thousand and one things. I think that at present they're just not amusement minded."

New Vaudeville Needed

Vaudeville's status in any new setup RKO contemplates, or in its continued status, was put to Mr. Koerner; and he replied that variety, as it is presented to the public now, was "bad" and a new type was needed. He declared his sympathies were with the medium, and that the circuit would try to aid it, but he was hopeful those in the medium or others in the entertainment world would evolve a new type of stage show, more modern. Mr. Koerner denied that unions were a large factor in the presence or absence of vaudeville. He declared the chief factors were the rental, location, patronage, etc., of a theatre, the type of clientele, and other items.

Mr. Koerner was to leave this week on a three-weeks tour of the RKO circuit, starting in New England, then proceeding to the Middle West, and from there to the rest of its holdings. This will be his first such tour.

SKOURAS, RKO IN RADIO-FILM TIEUP

Following the recent trend of motion picture theatres toward the use of radio in promoting, locally, current and coming attractions, (see MOTION PICTURE HERALD, May 17, page 39) station WINS in New York started broadcasting information on the feature film attractions in the 65 Skouras theatres in that area. The announcements are made three times daily, at 9:10 A.M., 1:40 P.M. and 6:20 P.M. Mondays through Saturdays.

In return, each of the Skouras houses is showing two 45-second trailers supplied by the radio station. The first trailer tells theatre patrons that they can learn the theatre's program by listening to the station while the second calls attention to WINS' position on the dial. Copy for the second trailer will be changed monthly.

RKO and WMCA, following the deal by Skouras theatres and station WINS, has set up a mutual exploitation arrangement, between 48 RKO theatres in New York, and WMCA.

Three mayors of Southern cities on Monday proclaimed the day as Cecil B. DeMille Day to mark the start of production on the director-producer's 65th feature motion picture, "Reap the Wild Wind," color film for which location material will be photographed in Charleston, S. C., and Key West, Fla. Mayors Henry Lockwood of Charleston, Willard Albury, of Key West and Ralph H. Hodges, of Washington, N. C., Mr. DeMille's home town joined in proclaiming municipal observance of his achievements.

CIRCUIT FACES $100,000 FINE FOR USING GAMES

State Sues Also to Dislodge Circuit's 20 Theatres from Operation for Violating Law

One of the strangest attacks ever directed, any place in this country against chance or money games at motion picture theatres finds the Schine Circuit on the defending end of an action started last Thursday by the State of Kentucky, demanding payment of a $100,000 penalty and forfeiture of the franchise of the Schine's 20 theatres in Kentucky, for using chance games.

Cause of the suit is Bank Night, which the Kentucky Attorney General alleges is a violation of the state constitution's anti-lottery section. In fact, the Attorney General, Hubert Meredith, explained that giving any cash prizes by drawing or other chance methods to patrons of theatres or other public places was in his eyes a lottery, and that the suit "was to clarify the law."

Specifically, the Kentucky suit charged that the Schine company, a New York corporation, had violated its franchise by conducting a "lottery or gift enterprise or scheme, commonly known and referred to as 'Bank Nite.'"

It added, "'Bank Nite' is tied up with and constitutes a material part of the business the company conducts under its Kentucky franchise." The franchise, it said, carries an obligation to conduct the business "in a lawful manner and without offending the provisions of the Constitution."

The suit declared the constitutional ban against lotteries had been "openly, notoriously and continuously violated at least once each week during the last five years by the defendant in, at and about the theatres operated by it" in Lexington, and in Kentucky, "particularly at the Ben Ali, Strand, Kentucky and State Theatres" in Lexington.

Mr. Meredith declined to specify whether he would institute similar suits against other circuits, but did say: "Once the law has been clarified, local prosecutors may act."

15 Per Cent Tax on Games

The 1940 General Assembly placed a 15 per cent tax on movie bank nights which has brought in $47,003 since it went into effect last June 12th, according to Kentucky Department of Revenue records.

Assistant Attorney General Jesse K. Lewis Fred Dolle, president of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, of Louisville, added that it seemed strange to him that the state, by its 1940 law, could tax Bank Nite 15 per cent, although it is alleged by state officials to be a lottery.

Anent the section, 226, of the Kentucky constitution allegedly making Bank Nite a lottery, the suit quoted it, thus:

"Lotteries and gift enterprises are forbidden, and no privilege shall be granted for such purpose, and none shall be exercised, and no schemes for similar purposes shall be allowed."

The suit itself asserted: "The form of violation of said constitution constantly engaged in by the defendant as aforesaid was, and is, a lottery or gift enterprise or scheme commonly known and referred to as 'Bank Nite.'"

It added that Kentucky is entitled to civil damages "sustained as direct and proximate result of the aforesaid wrongs" and also, "a fine or sums that would deter the defendant from continuation of" the alleged acts. It also asked the court for "at least $100,000, or such sum as the court may, in its discretion, deem adequate for the purposes herein set forth."

Mr. Lewis asserted this penalty was asked under "quo warranto of common law." This, he said, allows courts to make such awards in their discretion.

Exhibitors Favor Suits

Reaction from some Louisville exhibitors, to the suit, was reported as favorable, many declaring they would like elimination of Bank Nite. However, they would, it was apparent after a poll, also like the elimination of Bingo in non-theatrical forms, which, they asserted, made Bank Nite a necessity at theatres, as a counter attraction.

Des Moines City Solicitor Frederick T. Van Liew has ruled the City Council can regulate Bank Nite, answering a petition by a patron seeking a new registration list, and asking the Council to require local theatres to destroy existing Bank Nite registration lists, and establish regulations for operation of the awarding.

Solons on Sunday Films

The Pennsylvania Senate this week passed a measure to permit referenda on Sunday films, by communities, every four years instead of five; require petitions for such referenda, from 20 per cent of the voters; and enforce the votes at November elections instead of at the primaries.

During last Fall's elections, some communities voted for Sunday shows. Harrisburg, and some suburbs, have had legalized Sunday film showings for the past five years.

Wisconsin Theatres Cut Prices

New summer admission prices have been announced by Standard Theatres' Gateway and Kenosha in Kenosha, Wis., and by Warners' Badger in Racine. The former two houses have a 30-cent balcony admission after 6 P. M. Mondays through Fridays, except for stage shows. Previous admission was 40 cents after 6 P. M. for the entire theatre. The Badger has dropped its evening admissions from 25 cents plus tax to 22 cents plus tax and extended the early bird bracket on Sundays from 2 P. M. to 3 P. M.

Toscanini to Buenos Aires

Arturo Toscanini, symphony conductor, will fly to Buenos Aires, Friday, June 6th, aboard the Pan American Clipper. In the Argentine capital, where he appeared last year, he will again conduct a series of symphony concerts. Mrs. Toscanini will accompany her husband on the tour.

Hold "Reluctant Dragon"

RKO Radio, distributor of Walt Disney's "Reluctant Dragon" has moved the release date on the picture from June 6th to June 27th.

Hollingsworth Anti-trust Suit Hearings Start

The federal district court in Lincoln, Nebraska, is holding hearings in the case brought by F. E. Hollingsworth, owner and operator of the Pix Theatre in Beatrice, Neb., against the Fox-Beatrice Theatre Corporation, in which the exhibitor alleged violation by the Fox Company of the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust laws.

Mr. Hollingsworth charged the Fox firm, and 16 other defendants, with conspiracy to force him out of the theatre business through monopolistic demands. He asked $234,300 in damages.

The plaintiff contends that after he signed a five year, $10,000 lease on the Pix, the Fox Theatre Corporation, which owns and operates the opposition Fox and Rivoli houses in Beatrice, obtained a "corner" on a large number of first run films, making it impossible for him to obtain sufficient pictures to operate a Class A house.

Defense attorneys denied that a monopoly existed and told the court Mr. Hollingsworth "had at all times enough film on hand so that he could operate."

Motions Argued in Pickwick Suit

Motions to secure extension of time and to make the complaint more definite in the $5,000,000 Pickwick, Greenwich anti-trust suit were heard in the U. S. District Court in New Haven on Monday, June 2nd.

Eight major film companies and Skouras Theatres and Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, defendants in the Pickwick suit, argued for extension of time in which to answer the complaints, while the complainants alleged improper out-of-state service upon them, and lack of jurisdiction of the U. S. Court for the District of Connecticut over them.

Settlement of the anti-trust suit against Warner Theatres and major distributors, brought by the Admiral Theatre in Philadelphia, has been agreed on by the contestants.

Stipulations have been filed in the U. S. District Court in Buffalo, concerning the Government's interrogatories in the Schine Circuit anti-trust suit brought against Columbia and United Artists. The stipulations designate which of the Government's interrogatories each company will answer.

New Theatre Policy Set

A pool involving the operation of two first run theatres in Reading, Pa., was arranged recently. The deal involves Jay Emanuel's Park theatre and Dr. H. J. Schad's Astor theatre and calls for the Astor to play all the top flight product while the Park will play the secondary features. Accordingly, the Park will drop its admissions from 40 cents to 25 cents. The new agreement goes into effect within a few weeks when the Astor theatre reopens after extensive alterations.

Kohn to Assist Lightman

Herb Kohn, who has joined Malco Theatres in Memphis, will function as assistant to M. A. Lightman, president, and M. S. McCord, secretary-treasurer, who heads the accounting and service departments. The circuit will continue to operate under Mr. Lightman's direct supervision.

KASTNER SAYS EUROPE STILL WANTS U. S. FILMS

United Artists Foreign Sales Head Reports Revenue Coming from Europe and Near East

Despite the war, Europeans still want motion pictures—and, above all, American motion pictures. Furthermore, the more straitened their circumstances, the more they crowd the theatres. This was the report, Monday afternoon, of Lacy Kastner, European sales manager for United Artists, who had arrived in New York by boat that morning for conferences at the company's home office, and an indefinite stay.

Mr. Kastner added that his company was receiving money from many European and Near East countries, even from some under German control; that the shipments were irregular, and sometimes very slow; but that UA always got all its receipts from the countries mentioned. He named Turkey, Switzerland, Roumania, Bulgaria, Palestine, Portugal, Sweden, Egypt, Finland, and Iraq. United Artists maintains its own offices in Sweden, Switzerland, and Spain.

Spanish Pact Pending

Concerning Spain, Mr. Kastner remarked that a deal was pending whereby the company might be allowed to import five pictures, if it produced one picture in Spain. The Spanish Government, he explained, at present is requiring foreign companies to produce a picture, or a number of pictures, in its country, with the receipts from its export allowed the companies. Receipts from their importations into Spain, however, may not be taken from that country.

He reported that Spain recently gave import permits for 51 films, UA's five being among them. These permits were cancelled later, because of irregularities in the arrangements with the film firms of another country. The 51 films included those from Germany, France, Italy, and Britain, he said.

He remarked that in its official attitude, politically and economically, the Spanish Government seemed to be following the Italian pattern. However, the people do not like either Italian, or German films despite the country's connections with the Axis, he said.

His company is shipping prints to many countries in Europe, despite the war, Mr. Kastner noted. It even shipped prints to Greece up to the moment of German invasion, and Mr. Kastner expects to resume shipments soon, because the fact of a country's domination by Germany does not bar the importation of American films, inasmuch as the countries under such domination, in the categories of Bulgaria, Roumania, and Hungary, for instance, still make their own laws, maintain their own armies and police.

Charles Chaplin's "The Great Dictator" had not been shown in Europe, up to the time he left. Not even in Portugal can it be shown, he remarked, inasmuch as that country is under a dictator.

When Mr. Kastner left Portugal, the two biggest film successes were the company's "Rebecca" and "Wuthering Heights." However, despite the country's newfound wealth—from thousands of refugees, Portugal is not a large factor in the company's European sales, Mr. Kastner explained, because of its small number of theatres, and because of the population's illiteracy.

Business is "very good" in the three important neutrals, Switzerland, Portugal and Sweden, he reported.

Reverting again to Spain, Mr. Katsner said production in that country was very poor. He said the Spanish Government realized this and was trying to improve it.

UA is still distributing in unoccupied France, he said. Its headquarters there are at Lyon.

Swiss Theatres Affected by War

Following the outbreak of the war in Europe military censorship of motion pictures was instituted and the import and export trade in exposed films was made subject to rigorous control in Switzerland, according to the annual survey of the motion picture industry in that country by the United States Department of Commerce.

The capitulation of France and the entry of Italy into the war practically cut off Switzerland from its supply of American films, and, since French film production was disrupted, Swiss exhibitors were dependent for a time primarily on German-made films. As the end of 1940 approached, however, overseas shipping facilities improved somewhat and American productions again became regularly available.

Theatres in Switzerland were affected adversely also by the shortage of fuel, which made it necessary to cut down the number of performances during 1940. In Zurich and other cities theatres were remaining closed one day per week during 1941; elsewhere the first performances were starting at five P. M. instead of three P. M., as normally. The obligatory blackout for all Switzerland, which went into effect in October, 1940, tended to discourage people from attending the principal performance in the evening which usually begins at 8:15 P. M. and ends between 10:30 and 11:00—well after the beginning of the blackout at 10:00 P. M.

As a result of the war, censorship has been tightened; Swiss authorities are reluctant to permit the showing of films depicting any of the belligerents in an unfavorable light. Military censorship continues to be based on political and military considerations, while Cantons usually censor films on moral or religious grounds. Films containing concealed propaganda on behalf of foreign countries are usually banned.

Only positive prints of motion pictures are imported for distribution in Switzerland, while no prints of foreign feature films are made in the country. Formerly the United States, France and Germany were the three principal sources of supply; at present the market is confined almost entirely to the United States and Germany.

American films have been losing ground of late to German, and to a lesser extent to domestic productions, due primarily to difficulties in obtaining shipments from the United States. American films, on the whole, continue to enjoy a high measure of popularity, and several pictures shown recently are reported to have been exceptionally successful.

At the present time there are 361 motion picture theatres in the country, all wired for sound, with a combined seating capacity of approximately 126,000.

With the exception of Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, the theatres are seldom filled to capacity. The average weekly theatre attendance is not known.

Fox Promotes Lowe

A. W. Lowe has been promoted to manager of advertising accessories at the Twentieth Century-Fox exchange in Dallas, Tex., succeeding Robert Bandy, who has resigned.

SKOURAS CAMPAIGN WINS APPROVAL

John Hay Whitney, chairman of the motion picture division of the Office of Coordinator of Commercial and Cultural Relations Between the American Republics, last week gave his unqualified approval to the "good-neighbor" campaign being conducted by the Skouras theatres, after visiting the Fox theatre in Hackensack, N. J., and seeing at first-hand contact the campaign being carried on by the circuit and George Skouras, president. (See MOTION PICTURE HERALD, May 31st, page 52.)

Mr. Whitney not only found the Skouras Theatres campaign and displays interesting but constructive and worth while. He said that he hoped other theatres throughout the country might follow the lead set by the Skouras Theatres in thus promoting tolerance, Americanism and goodwill through similar displays and drives.

RKO Sued for Libel In "Primrose Path"

Four suits seeking a total of $800,000 in damages were filed against RKO-Radio Pictures, Inc., and the Keith Memorial Theatre on the same day that a judgment in favor of the same defendants, another case, was reported by a Supreme Court Justice. The suits, filed by Joel Wright of Wakefield, Mass., formerly of Fall River, and Vera Burdette of Oakland, Cal., also formerly of Fall River, were in connection with the RKO production, "Primrose Path," which featured Ginger Rogers. Both plaintiffs sought $200,000 damages from each defendant in connection with the production, distribution, advertising and exhibition of the film.

The plaintiffs allege the film was made from a book, "February Hill," written by Victoria Lincoln, also described as a former resident of Fall River. It is charged the plaintiffs are represented in the book under the names of "Joel Harris" and "Fanny Harris" and that in the story they are held up to ridicule and scorn because of false representations including a misrepresentation that both characters were violators of the Illegitimate Child Act. The Wright complaints alleged that the book was in substance and effect concerned with the life of his family. It also represented him, according to the complaint, as a person of loose morals, lazy and without integrity, subjecting him to ridicule and scorn.

At the same time as the suits were being filed, Supreme Court Justice Henry Lummus rendered a decision upholding the interlocutory decree handed down in favor of RKO and the Keith Massachusetts Corporation by a master in connection with RKO's "That's Right, You're Wrong," which the plaintiff, Matthew Ott, a former repertory man, claimed plagiarized a play written by him and produced under that name.

Production in Mexico Shows Increase

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

Domestic production in Mexico, at its lowest last year since production of the first full length Mexican pictures, "Saintess" in 1930 by Antonio Moreno, is giving indications of a marked acceleration in 1941. Present plans call for at least 60 features. The Azteca studio in Mexico City has been leased for the production of 30 pictures before the end of this year.

The producers now seem to be well financed and all major labor difficulties have been smoothed over.

Better played Mexican pictures are expected to result from a procedure introduced by Julio Bracho who begins his directing career with the production of "Ay, Que Tiempos, Señor Don Simon" ("Those Were the Days, Don Simon"), a pretentious story of Mexico's Golden Age, 1880 to 1910, and which features a lace petticoat can can rendition by 24 girls. Sr. Bracho made his company perform their parts as they would on the stage for a whole month before camera work started.

The title role in the Mexican version of "Simon Bolivar," film story of the George Washington of Venezuela, has been assigned Julian Soler, youngest of the three Mexican brothers who are stars of the dramatic stage and have worked much in pictures. This version is being prepared for early production by Miguel Contreras Torres, of Hollywood experience, who has just returned from researching in Venezuela, and Jesus Grovas, who before he became a producer was a manager here for Paramount. This picture is to cost $215,000, a record for Mexico.

The first official film record of maneuvers of the Mexican army, held recently near here, under the invited observance of the American and other foreign military attaches, has been compiled by the government's picture censoring and supervision department, chief of which is Felipe Gregorio Castillo. Four cameramen made the picture.

A special performance given by the 66 theatres here netted $8,100 for the funds the federal government is raising for the relief of victims of the devastating earthquakes on April 15 and 16 in Colima, Jalisco and Michoacan states. The national cinematographic workers union donated $615 to this fund from a special levy for one day of 22 cents on the daily pay of its 3,000 members.

James Carey Promoted

James Carey, manager with the Evergreen Theatres for some years in Vancouver, Wash., has been made city manager for the company at Bellingham, Wash. He is now manager of the Mt. Baker theatre and city manager of the Avalon and American theatres. Thomas Clanton, for many years associated with the Orpheum theatre in Portland, and recently assistant to Mr. Carey, has been named manager of the two houses at Vancouver, Wash.

Noble Succeeds Cooper

Thomas N. Noble, Warner booker in Philadelphia for many years, has been named to succeed David M. Cooper as salesman in the Harrisburg, Pa., territory. Mr. Cooper resigned to serve in the Army. James Reimel, also connected with the industry in Philadelphia, fills the vacancy in the booking department.

Industry Raises $850,000 for Greek Relief

More than 8,000 theatres throughout the nation, participating in the drive sponsored by the Greek War Relief Association, Inc., raised $850,000 to aid Greek war victims, Adolph Zukor, Chairman of the Amusement Industry Division, announced in New York, on Monday, June 1st.

Expressing commendation of the industry's efforts in behalf of the Greek people, Mr. Zukor explained, "While we have collected $850,000, we know that many thousands of dollars were turned over to local committees of the Greek War Relief Association. This money was in addition to that raised on the West Coast by a committee headed by Sam Goldwyn.

"Of the $850,000, more than $600,000 was cabled to Greece and was used to buy medicine, clothing and food for the helpless women and children of that country. A great deal of the money was also used in the evacuation of more than a million women and children before the Axis arrived."

Mr. Zukor declared, "This was the largest number of theatres ever enrolled for a charity drive in the industry." The amount collected far exceeded that of any collected for a similarly worthy cause. He expressed his appreciation "to every one of the people who were instrumental in making this result possible."

Moses A. Leavitt, secretary of the Joint Distribution Committee, one of the participating organizations of the UJA, was the guest speaker at the luncheon and described how funds, which are to be raised, will be utilized.

ASCAP REVAMPS UNDER U.S. DECREE; SEEKS WAY OUT FROM FLORIDA LAW

Members Approve Enforced Changes in By-Laws; Florida Allows Grace Period for Adjustments on All Contracts

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers came in under the deadline Monday evening, to comply with the terms of the Federal consent decree arrived at February 20th in Milwaukee to end the Government's suit against the Society for violation of the anti-trust laws. Members on Monday, in general session at New York's Hotel Astor, approved changes in the by-laws and constitution to conform with the decree; and they furthermore voted confidence in their executives, headed by Gene Buck, president.

The Federal consent decree deadline was Wednesday.

Meanwhile, following the Society's most recent setback—the declaration, May 26th, by the U. S. Supreme Court, that the anti-ASCAP laws by the states of Florida and Nebraska, were constitutional—attorneys for the Society and the state of Florida were conferring this week on amendments to the state law, which will permit users of music to do business with ASCAP under its blanket license or to buy songs on a "per use" basis. Similar discussions were to follow with Nebraska officials.

At the meeting Monday, John Payne, general manager of the Society, disclosed that Florida had asked for a 30 days "status quo" pending amendments to the state law, and changes in the ASCAP licensing machinery in that state.

Film Companies Lose

Meanwhile, observers of the music industry noted that a most important result of the ASCAP setbacks—its fight with the broadcasters, its observance of Federal regulations, its bowing to state restrictions—has been revenue losses to the motion picture companies controlling ASCAP publishing firms. These companies are MGM, Paramount, Warners, and Twentieth Century-Fox.

ASCAP's new by-laws, approved Monday, provide election of directors by members, instead of by the board, voting in this election to be according to revenue derived from the society during the previous calendar year, by each member; the setting up of nominating committees, one each for authors and publishers, six on the former, three on the latter; and two candidates and the incumbent to be selected by the nominating committee, for the director's list.

There were other changes; and, also, changes in the constitution, to enhance operations in conformity with new conditions. The duties of various committees were redefined. An executive committee is to supervise activities between meetings of the directors.

The amendments and new by-laws were effective immediately upon approval. The nominations for filling of 12 board vacancies, and the appointment of nominating committees were to be made this week. Ballots were to be mailed to members.

The membership meeting was special, for the business done. The annual membership meeting will be next month. The ballots are to be tabulated before then.

It was said that because of the attitude of the Florida officials, allowing a status quo, and work on amendments to permit users of music to buy ASCAP music on a blanket contract if they so choose, that operations in Florida would not change very much, despite the Supreme Court's approval of that state's and Nebraska's anti-ASCAP laws.

What the attitude of the Nebraska officials was, could not be determined on Monday but ASCAP spokesmen at the New York meeting indicated they expected the Nebraska situation to be like that in Florida.

The Florida conferences, in Talahassee, are being attended by Thomas Watson, state Attorney General, Herman Finkelstein, of Schwartz and Frohlich, ASCAP counsel, and by I. T. Cohan, local Society representative.

Before the lenient attitude of the Florida officials became known, it had been supposed ASCAP would discontinue royalty collections there. The Society had been expected to then check closely all music performances, especially in theatres, and have its members sue for unauthorized use of such; inasmuch as the state anti-ASCAP law made it necessary for the user of music to obtain permission to use from the individual owner of such music, rather than ASCAP. Thus the Society would have demonstrated to state officials the costliness of copyright protection by individual action.

The recent ASCAP-Mutual deal will assist exploitation of a new Paramount film, it was remarked, this week. iOn Tuesday, Mutual broadcast the hit songs from Paramount's musical, "Kiss the Boys Goodbye". The program, originating on WOR and carried on a coast-to-coast hook-up, featured Morton Gould's orchestra with Jimmy Shields vocalizing. The songs offered for public appraisal were: "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," "Sand in My Shoes," "I'll Never Let a Day Pass By," "Find Yourself a Melody" and "That's How I Got My Start."

BMI Replies to Mutual Charge

Broadcast Music, Inc., music publishing firm established last year by the National Association of Broadcasters to rival ASCAP as a music source, this week replied to statements about it in a "White Paper" by the Mutual Broadcasting System, which that network issued several weeks after it had signed with ASCAP, and in which it differed with the other chains' opposition to a Federal Communications Commission report attacking monopoly in radio and recommending changes.

BMI's statement read: "BMI does not desire to be drawn into any controversy between segments of the broadcasting industry; but it does want the record kept straight on these points.

"BMI was not created 'under the aegis of the two older network companies.' It had its birth at an NAB convention. It received, and is still receiving, its support from the industry as a whole. . . . BMI, over one year ago, established the principle that all income from radio broadcasting was subject to tax. It has thus acted as a pioneeer in the field for which Mutual now acts as a spokesman. . . . BMI determined to reduce its scale of blanket fees long before the terms of the Mutual-ASCAP deal were made public, and, indeed, long before it was known that there was any likelihood of such a deal taking place. . . . BMI, therefore, needed no example in order to cause it to operate its business on the most economic basis."

The company disclosed this week it had been recognized by the Canadian Government as a performing rights society, with the country's Copyright Appeal Board granting it a tariff of one cent per licensed set, the "amount requested in October, 1940, when BMI was required to file its proposed tariff for 1941."

BMI remarked that in October, 1940, "music heard on the air was predominantly ASCAP's," and that it was also before BMI had acquired many of its catalogues.

In granting the BMI tariff, the Canadian board said:

"The entry of a second musical works licensing company in the Canadian field of radio broadcasting introduces a problem of considerable difficulty; and, if this continues, it is one that may require in the early future a careful reconsideration of the whole question of the licensing and performance of musical works, insofar as radio broadcasting is concerned."

JERSEY ASCAP MEASURE DEAD

New Jersey's anti-ASCAP bill—the Herbert Assembly bill No. 54—has no chance of passage, observers in Trenton reported this week, after the House steering committee frowned upon it and shoved it over to the miscellaneous business committee. The measure would provide a gross receipts tax of five per cent on licensing and selling performing rights of copyright compositions, particularly songs.

Tarkington "Penrod" Suit Against Warners Settled

The Booth Tarkington $100,000 damage suit against Warners, in New York Federal Court, was settled this week. Terms of the settlement allow Warners the right to produce films from Mr. Tarkington's "Penrod" series of stories, and give the author a cash payment.

Mr. Tarkington had charged that Warners, without authorization, produced "Penrod and His Twin Brother" from the "Penrod" series, after making "Penrod and Sam." The company claimed its contract with the writer allowed it to film many of his stories.

Tri-States Changes

Harry Holdsberg, manager of the Tri-States Des Moines theatre in Des Moines, Ia., for the past two years, and an employe of the organization for the past 15 years, has resigned and will enter the Army shortly. He volunteered some time ago. Kermit Carr, manager of the Tri-States Ottumwa theatre in Ottumwa, Ia., recently destroyed by fire, has been appointed manager of the Des Moines theatre.

Exhibitors Killed

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Carr, owners of the Radcliffe Theatre, in the town of that name, Iowa, were burned to death Tuesday in a fire that destroyed their building and theatre. The fire started in the projection room. Two young sons survive.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

Shorts on Shipping

The story of Britain's mercantile marine, her ships and her shipyards, her sailors and the commerce they carry from the four corners of the globe to Tyneside and Teeside, Clydeside and Merseyside, is being told in a series of films made by Liberty Films, Ltd., a British distributing and production concern.

First of these "Tyneside" and "Merseyside" have been made and are now under the wing of the British Council. Commentary on the latter was spoken by Lionel Gamlin, one of British Broadcasting's Number One voices. S. D. Onions was cameraman and Michael Chorlton cutter.

The films are two-reelers.

Liberty will now embark on six single reelers in color. They will each deal with one of the major shipping companies, their wartime roles and functions, and the way in which they have adapted themselves to the abnormal conditions of they day. Transatlantic appeal is particularly being considered in these shorts which will greatly cover Anglo-American trade relations.

No time has been lost by Max Milder in following up production at Teddington Studios of Warner Bros. With two supers already to his credit, one of them shown with considerable success, the other "Atlantic Ferry" awaiting trade show, work is well under way on the third in the new world marketing programme.

Working title for this is "You Can't Escape Forever," a Fifth Column thriller, set against a background of wartime France, with Paris the chief centre of the story's movements.

Chosen to direct this new Warner opus is John Harlow, whose work with "Spellbound" greatly enhanced his directorial prestige locally.

The cast includes Griffith Jones in the role of Bill Hamilton, British Intelligence Officer, who is sent to France to investigate Fifth Column activity. Ann Dvorak, as a New York society woman; Ben Lyon, as a journalist, Mary Maguire, Jeanne de Casalis, Robert Morley, and Elizabeth Welch.

Creator of gowns for one of the more important sequences of the film, set in a high-class Paris dress salon, is Norman Hartnell, who, it will be known, dresses Queen Elizabeth.

First Ealing film to come directly within the sphere of the new distribution agreement concluded with United Artists is "Ships with Wings" which Director Sergei Nolbandov has concluded this week.

The next film to go on the floor at Ealing also of course, to be distributed by U.A., is the new Will Hay comedy — "Black Sheep of Whitehall."

Appointed to direct the new picture is Basil Deardon, who, like Nolbandov, makes his directorial debut after having served as associate producer in the studios. Deardon worked on the Formby comedies and with Will Hay on "The Ghost of St. Michaels." He will be assisted by Will Hay who will not only star in the picture but function as co-director. Says Hay: "Call me a moral support director." Hay has, of course, always written his own stage sketches and produced them himself.

In the new film the school-master comedian will have the character of a correspondence school professor who bears the same name as that of a world economic expert and becomes involved in a plot to sabotage a British-South American trade agreement.

John Baxter has started work at Ealing on "The Common Touch." Leading the cast are Geoffrey Hibbert and Joyce Howard, who appeared with success in "Love on the Dole."

Robert Morley has been signed by Francis Harley (20th Century Fox chief in Great Britain) to play the part of Charles Fox in that Company's production of "Pitt the Younger." His work is dependent upon his call-up being deferred. Morley was to have joined the R.A.F. almost immediately, but application has been made for the postponement of his enlistment.

Robert Donat has already been signed for the title role. It is understood that filming will start shortly.

2,000 FILMS SHOWN TO BRITISH ARMY

More than 2,000 recreational films were shown in army centers in England during May, 150 programs were booked with the cooperation of the film industry, and more than 60 films were sponsored by the Production Section, according to the first report of the Army Council on the functioning of the War Office films plan. The report noted difficulties in training personnel and obtaining equipment, and indicated that the entire organization was being overhauled and revised.

The plan now aims at the production of instructional films and the training of personnel as well as the use of films in war training through the employment of 400 portable projectors. Approximately £500,000 ($2,000,000) has been provided for the operation of the plan.

'Hatter's Castle' Set

Paramount is one of the American companies here which has decided, notwithstanding the difficulties of man-power, to proceed with its production program. David Rose, to whose credit go some of the most successful British films in recent years, has now set producer I. Goldsmith to work on a picture which has been on his mind for sometime—the screen version of A. J. Cronin's "Hatter's Castle." The film was due to go on to the floor at Denham Studios last week. Appointed to direct the film is Lancelot Comfort who has just completed work for British National on "Penn of Pennsylvania." Casts announcements include Robert Newton, Deborah Kerr, Emlyn Williams, James Mason, Enid Stamp-Taylor, Henry Oscar, Tony Bateman, Beatrice Varley.

Materialising the title of his current film "He Found a Star" Director John Paddy Carstairs, now operating at the Hammersmith studios with Vic Oliver and Sarah Churchill as his stars, has found a star. The star is Negro singer Uriel Porter who was heard on the air and signed up for the role of dockside vocalist.

The ill-fated Cafe de Paris recently severely damaged in a bombing raid has been re-created in the studios for sequences in which Porter and other artists, including American Evelyn Dall perform numbers for the film.

His customary studio severely damaged by Nazi bombs, Producer F. W. Baker has turned his unit working on "Shepherd of the Hills" to the illustrious district of Burgh Island, Bigbury Bay, Devonshire. There, in the Burgh Island Hotel, Baker has made use of the ballroom and winter garden as a studio, using the surrounding countryside as a background for the open-air episodes of the film which stars Sheepdog Ben and other canine stars. Feminine lead is being played by a human—Helen Parry, taken from Provincial repertory to make her screen debut.

Ernest Gartside, formerly with Fox in their Wembley studio days has been appointed production manager of the new George Formby Company, Hillcrest Productions.

"Tower of Terror" is the title of John Argyle's new film for Associated British. The picture, which will be launched at Welwyn will have in its cast Wilfred Lawson, Movita, and Michael Rennie. Atmosphere and background shots are currently being taken around North Wales coast, where "Tower of Terror" (a lighthouse) is supposedly situated.

CANADA HEEDS EXHIBITOR PROTESTS, EXTENDS 20% WAR TAX TO SPORTS

Prizefights, Carnivals, Racing Included in New Provisions; Pascal Announces Plans for Film Production in Montreal

All provisions of the additional 20 per cent Federal Amusement Tax, which has been extended to include all forms of spectator sport as well as moving picture and theatrical entertainment of a business nature, have become effective by the promulgation of new and the necessary legislation. Protests of sport organizations against the application of the levy were disregarded by the Ministry of Finance.

Of interest is the description of "place of amusement" in the tax regulations, which indicates the wide scope of the enlarged jurisdiction. The official definition is as follows:

"Any theatre, concert hall, room, place, house, tent, building or structure of any kind, or any park or any premises whether enclosed or not, where any cinematograph or moving picture machine or similar apparatus is operated, or where any theatrical performance, carnival, circus, side show, menagerie, concert, exhibition, horse race or athletic contest is held, staged or operated, and to which the public is admitted upon payment of an admission price collected through the sale of tickets or otherwise."

Protested Original Form

The theatre interests had contended that the original form of the decree constituted discrimination against the motion picture houses because other amusement operators had been omitted from the scope of the war measure. No official complaint was made that the tax should be applied to sports events, particularly the strictly amateur type of recreation, but it was felt that other features, which formed direct opposition to the film houses should not be overlooked. Accordingly the exhibitors were satisfied when the regulations supplied the information that carnivals, circuses and amusement parks had been finally included in the taxable list. It was pointed out that carnivals cut into the receipts of nearby theatres and that they took considerable money out of a community with the result that the film houses feel the financial effect for some weeks after a carnival engagement.

Tax exemptions are granted to amusements conducted by religious, charitable, agricultural, or educational institutions, chambers of commerce, labor organizations, benevolent or fraternal orders, clubs societies or organizations operated solely for social welfare, civic improvement or recreation, or for patriotic and other non-profit purposes, so long as no part of the proceeds goes to the personal benefit of promoters. Despite vigorous protests, the tax is being collected on the gross gate receipts of horse-race meetings in addition to the new tax on horse-race betting of five per cent of the amount of wagers handled in the pari-mutuel system at all tracks, and cash returns must be made at the close of each day's racing.

Reassurance that Canadian theatres and film distributors have pledged themselves to support the Canadian war effort in every possible way, was given by J. J. Fitzgibbons, president of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, who has returned from a business trip to Western Canadian cities and is stopping over in Winnipeg.

CELEBRATE CAREY'S 33RD ANNIVERSARY

Forty-eight motion picture directors who have worked with Harry Carey—from Oscar A. Lund in 1908 to Henry Hathaway in 1941*—have been invited to attend a party celebrating Mr. Carey's 33rd anniversary in films. The affair will be held June 14th at the Carey ranch near Saugus, Cal., following the press preview of Mr. Carey's latest film. Paramount's "Shepherd of the Hills."*

He has heard no complaints from theatre managers or patrons about the new amusement tax, for it is being regarded generally as a direct contribution to the war effort. The only big difficulty is in handling pennies at wickets, he said.

Rather than any interruption in the distribution of British and American films because of the war, there has been an increase, Mr. Fitzgibbons believed. The British government believes films are a form of entertainment vital to maintaining morale of the people, and is endeavoring to keep up production and distribution of British films, so that the British industry will not lose its place in the world, he said.

American producers are cooperating directly with the British Ministry of Information in guarding against divulging information which should be censored, he said, commenting on the fact that all producers have direct wires to the British Ministry of Information office in Washington.

War Film Committee Aiding Loan Drive

Federal amusement tax or not, the Canadian Motion Picture War Services Committee of the Canadian Picture Pioneers is lending active cooperation to the Dominion Government in the campaign to float the Canadian war loan of $600,000,000 by popular subscription, the drive to terminate June 30th, according to official announcement of N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, chairman of the committee. In making this declaration, Mr. Nathanson made his first public statement since resignation as president of Famous Players Canadian Corp. and it had to do only with the patriotic bond issue, no hint being given with regard to his future business plans.

In his message to all Canadian exhibitors with respect to cooperation for Canada's war effort and its relation to the recently enacted tax of 20 per cent, Mr. Nathanson declared "As an industry, we have already contributed generously of time and money to our country's war effort. Recent events at Ottawa may tend to give the impression that our contribution has not been properly appreciated. However, this is still our war as much as it ever was and this loan is a national effort that we must support to the limit of our powers."

The committee set aside the week of June 9th as Victory Loan Week for the theatres of the Dominion during which the exhibitors have been called on to make a special display of loan posters, to decorate the theatres with flags and bunting and to run special loan trailers, in order to carry through the momentum of the official publicity during the initial week of the subscription drive.

Gabriel Pascal has completed arrangements to produce at the Associated Screen News studio in Montreal, he said in New York, Monday.

Mr. Pascal announced that he would leave for London at the end of the month to confer with George Bernard Shaw on which of the latter's two plays he will next produce for the screen, and would return to the United States about the end of July. Mr. Pascal's first Canadian production, however, will not be a Shaw play, but will be a Canadian story, as yet untitled. Work on it is scheduled to begin early in August, Mr. Pascal said, and it will be followed by the production of the Shaw play.

Mr. Pascal explained that his plans call for those two pictures this year and for three next year, all for United Artists release. The producer reportedly will receive financial backing from the Canadian Pacific Railway organization.

Grand National To Handle P.R.C. Films

Grand National Films, Ltd., Toronto, once the Canadian distributor of the former Grand National product, is being reorganized as the Producing Releasing Corp., of Canada with H. J. Allen of Toronto as general manager to handle the Producers Releasing product and British films.

Mr. Allen has appointed Gerald Chernoff, formerly of Kingston, as manager of the Montreal branch while Leslie Allen has been named manager at Vancouver, B. C., in succession to Willard Adamson who has joined the Navy. Other branch managers include I. H. Allen, Winnipeg; H. A. Kauffman, Calgary, and H. B. Shawn, Toronto.

The new Odeon Circuit in Canada has entered the Maritime Provinces. Clarence Robson, vice-president of Odeon, is on his first tour of the territory in his new affiliation after 21 years of covering the same ground as eastern supervisor of the Famous Players Canadian company.

At Halifax, the Casino has been acquired by Odeon after about six years in the FPC lineup. At Sydney, E. R. Lynn has allied his Strand theatre with Odeon, and at Moncton, F. W. Winter has taken over his Capitol and Empress out of the FPC circuit and moved to Odeon. The Odeon circuit also will have at least one theatre in St. John, with the likelihood that several others in this region will join Odeon in the near future. The Capitol, at St. Johns, Newfoundland, is with Odeon after being with FPC for many years.

Heavy Taxation In New Brunswick

Motion Picture exhibitors in the province of New Brunswick are carrying an exceptionally heavy taxation burden, even without the Dominion's 20 per cent war levy. Fixed imposts by the provincial government, and prevailing for many years are: amusement taxes of slightly over 10 per cent on tickets; a yearly tax on each theatre seat; a corporation tax on each theatre company or individual, and a theatre operator's tax collected annually. In St. John, largest center in the province there are also a business tax, a property tax and an income tax on everybody receiving over $300 a year. This income tax is exceptionally high. There is also a Dominion income tax to contend with.

It will be no surprise if the 20 per cent boost in prices of theatre admissions curtails patronage to some extent at least until the public becomes adjusted to the higher box office rates. Reaction also is possible on plans for building new theatres and remodeling others, because of fear that business will be reduced.

FCC BLAMES CONGRESS FOR RADIO MONOPOLY STUDY AND NEW RULES

Fly Tells Senate Committee Probe on Which Regulations Were Based Was Made at Insistence of House Group

by FRANCIS L. BURT in Washington

Prospects of an immediate Congressional investigation of the Federal Communications Commission dimmed this week in the face of explanations by Chairman James L. Fly that the chain broadcasting investigation was undertaken under compulsion from Congress, that the Communications Act specifically authorizes the commission to regulate chain broadcasting and that the proposed network regulations will neither make it impossible for broadcasters to contract for network service or force any chain company out of business.

Mr. Fly placed responsibility for the chain investigation squarely in the lap of Congress, reminding the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, which is studying the White resolution for an investigation of the network regulations and the commission's policies, that it was promised by former Chairman Frank L. McNinch in a "trade" to defer affirmative action on a House resolution for a probe of the FCC.

The only criticism which would be well founded, he asserted, should be that the FCC was "too blamed slow in doing the job."

Full Probe Debated

Although he was the first witness to be heard in what was designed to be a preliminary inquiry to determine whether a more complete investigation should be undertaken, the FCC chairman did not testify until after a rather lengthy discussion between Chairman Burton K. Wheeler (Dem., Mont.) and Senator Wallace White (Rep., Maine) over the desirability of a probe of the whole broadcasting situation.

Senator White pointed out that he had frequently proposed such an investigation and Senator Wheeler agreed that conditions in the industry as well as in the FCC should be studied. "If we are going into it at all, we ought to go into it generally, covering both the commission and the industry," Senator Wheeler declared.

Recalling that he had proposed an investigation as long ago as 1937, Senator White said: "I still very definitely favor a general study of the whole situation. I still feel that Congress perhaps ought to lay down more definitely than we have in the existing law the policies and principles that guide and control the regulatory body and keep this industry within what we believe to be appropriate bounds."

He disclosed, too, that for some months he had had on his desk the draft of legislation to more clearly define the appeals privileges of licensees and applicants to meet criticism that opportunity for court review of the commission's actions is too limited. "There is a complete inadequacy of appeal in the present circumstances," he charged.

Senator Wheeler injected an anticipated issue early in the proceedings when, on Tuesday, under his direction, the committee directed the FCC to obtain from every station in the country records and copies of all speeches on the "war issue." He charged many independent stations were presenting but one side of the question. Senator Tobey joined with the comment that he had been informed by a chain representative that independent stations had refused even applications by Congressmen to make anti-war talks.

The two Senators, however, praised the network's attitude.

The new facet to the hearings came after Commissioner Fly testified the FCC received "unmerciful" political pressure, on licenses and transfers. He added it had not been influenced by such pressure. He denied Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce, had received favors for his Houston, Texas, radio station KTRH, by showing records that the station had applied for permission to increase power to 50,000 watts in October, 1940, and this was not granted until April 5th of this year.

When Commissioner Fly dwelt again at length on FCC's right to issue anti-monopoly orders, Senator White, pointing to Mutual's growth in the face of the CBS strength, questioned whether there was a monopoly in radio. Mr. Fly replied Mutual's affiliates were mainly inferior in power; stated it was almost impossible for a new network to form, facing present competition, and suggested the nation might well have six networks.

Quoting from speeches by members of Congress and the several resolutions of inquiry that have been submitted during the past five years, Mr. Fly pointed out that Congress had always been concerned over the possibilities of monopoly in broadcasting. To that end, he said, the communications act contains a provision making the anti-trust laws applicable to radio, and that act also, in Section 303, gives the commission specific authority to make regulations on chain broadcasting.

He denied that any member of the commission had opposed the present investigation, answering a comment by Senator White that he had been "surprised and shocked" to find the commission "challenging" a Congressional review of its actions. On the contrary, Mr. Fly said, the commission was glad of the opportunity to make an explanation to the committee.

Reading from time to time from a prepared statement, the FCC chairman declared there was no truth in the charge the industry had not been given an opportunity to be heard on the new regulations. On the contrary, he said, there were 73 days of hearings at which 96 witnesses filled 8,713 pages of testimony and submitted 707 exhibits. After the preliminary report was issued in June, 1940, ample opportunity was given for the filing of briefs, and in advance of the oral argument the commission issued alternative proposals for regulations on which it invited comment and criticism.

Much of Mr. Fly's preliminary testimony was devoted to the question of monopoly. The investigation, he said, showed an "unhealthy centralization of power" in the two senior networks.

The network report contains statistics as to the operations of the networks, showing that the 23 NBC and CBS stations in 1938 had a net operating income equivalent to more than half the total operating income for all other stations in the country.

Tendency Toward Chain Control

At the moment there is a "very determined" tendency toward expansion of chain control, he said. To prove his point, he read from a recent CBS brochure expiating on the increased facilities secured since last July. As he enumerated the power increases secured by CBS stations, the Senate bell sounded the opening of the day's session.

Referring to the fact that the networks control the clear channel stations, Chairman Wheeler emphatically questioned the desirability of such a situation, and Mr. Fly admitted that the clear channel stations were not fulfilling their original purpose of serving the rural areas but have been used "to tap the cream of the market."

"That is like running Atlantic Coast Line trains over Seaboard Airline tracks," suggested Senator Ellison D. Smith (Dem., S. C.). Foreseeing possible difficulties for South Carolina stations which secured net affiliations only after great difficulty, the Senator refused to accept explanations that the situation was not as he saw it.

The whole purpose of the new regulations, Mr. Fly insisted, is to leave stations "free" to dispose as they wish of time which the network does not agree to fill. They will be permitted to make contracts as at present, but not left tied up for five years. and the way will be paved for the establishment of new networks which cannot be formed while the existing chains have contracts which bar competition, he declared.

Asked by Senator Charles W. Tobey (Rep., N. H.) for comment on the charges made by Mark Ethridge at the NAB convention, that the commission by favoritism and political influence had contributed to any monopoly which might exist. Mr. Fly denied there was any truth in the charges, and pointed out that Mr. Ethridge had made no specifical allegations which could be replied to in detail.

The Wednesday hearing, final one of the week, was marked by charges by Senator White that the Commission was attempting to usurp the work of the courts in determining what constituted monopoly, although not authorized to do so by the Communications Act. He engaged in frequent interchanges with Mr. Fly over the right of the Commission to promulgate the regulations, pointing out that as one of the men responsible for the writing of the law he was in a position to say what was in it.

HEARINGS JUNE 25 ON NEWSPAPERS

The Federal Communications Commission in Washington this week set June 25th for the opening of public hearings on newspaper control of broadcasting stations. The question whether a specific policy should be adopted with respect to newspaper participation in broadcasting has been one of concern to the Commission and Congress for several years, but the current study was prompted by the large number of applications from newspapers for Frequency-Modulation facilities when that field was opened up some months ago.

Because the FM field is new there is an opportunity for dealing with the situation before there has been any investment in facilities, it was pointed out.

It was explained that there is no opposition to newspaper ownership of radio stations, but that a study is being made to determine whether a general policy should be adopted and, if so, how it should be shaped for application to future cases.

Interstate Heads Question Gallup Attendance Poll

More than 200 managers and executives of the Interstate Circuit, Inc., who convened at Galveston, Texas, during a four-day convention last week, will take under advisement recommendations set forth by John Q. Adams, executive secretary, and R. J. O'Donnell, vice president and general manager, for bringing back to the theatres some of the 32 million persons who are not attending movies, as the Gallup survey asserted last fall.

Mr. Adams and Mr. O'Donnell questioned the Gallup findings and revealed the weakness of the questions on which the survey was based. "The real reason 32 million people are not going to the movies is that theatre-going is a habit, and these people are out of the habit, or else never acquired it," they contend.

Recommendations Made

Their plan specifically outlines recommendations and indicates effective measures for the nation's theatre men to utilize in the effort to bring about a resurgence of movie attendance.

During daily sessions of the biennial convention at the Galvez Hotel, current problems facing exhibitors were discussed by leading executives of major film companies, and open forums were held in which the theatre men participated.

Highlight of the convention was the appeal made by Karl Hoblitzelle, president of the Circuit, to exhibitors to pledge full cooperation with the Government's defense program.

"This country," Mr. Hoblitzelle declared, "is going to help England set the world right. . . . We are serene in our confidence that the forces dominated by Hitler will be annihilated by the legions that are spiritually right. . . . We must put forth every concerted effort to back our Government."

Spurred on by their leader's plea, circuit managers and executives sent a telegram to President Roosevelt in which they jointly pledged "our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor. America will not fail you."

Among the leading speakers who took active part in the convention program were: A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table of MOTION PICTURE HERALD; Stanton Griffis, chairman of Paramount's executive committee; Neil Agnew, Paramount's general sales manager; William A. Scully, general sales manager, Universal; Harry L. Gold, vice-president, United Artists; Robert Mochrie, RKO; John B. Underwood, Colombia; Herman R. Beiersdorf, Twentieth Century-Fox; Barrett C. Kiesling, MGM; and Robert H. Gillham, advertising and publicity director for Paramount.

Interstate executives who contributed addresses included: Mr. Adams, Mr. O'Donnell, John Moroney, general counsel; Frank O. Starz, advertising and publicity manager; Raymond Willie; Richard Stout, of the legal staff; and Jack Chalman and Charles Meeker, who discussed advertising.

The convention ended Thursday night, May 29th, with a gala banquet at the Galvez, at which tribute was paid to 48 former associates who left the circuit for military training camps.

Dietz Arranging Defense Program

The programs will be heard thereafter every Wednesday evening until September 17th. Permanent features will be Al Goodman's orchestra and Ray Block's chorus. Guest stars will appear. The Texas Company will pay for the air time, which during the winter months is occupied by its Fred Allen show. The broadcasts will originate in Columbia's New York Playhouse. There will be "cut-ins" from Washington, Hollywood and Chicago, it is anticipated.

New CBS Defense Program

The Columbia Broadcasting System announced this week a new program honoring individual defense workers for outstanding contributions. It will start Sunday, from 2 P.M. to 2:30 P.M., E.D.T., and until July 3rd will be heard at that time. After then, it will move into an 8-8:30 P.M. spot on Thursday nights. ACROSS THE SIERRAS: Bill Elliott, Luana Walters—Just another western. Business below average. Played April 12.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

ANGELS OVER BROADWAY: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Rita Hayworth, Thomas Mitchell—Terrible. Trade it for a two reel subject and you are better off. It is pictures like this that are ruining the show business. Many walkouts.—Norman Goodin, Lake Theatre, Oswego, Ore. General patronage.

GREAT PLANE ROBBERY, THE: Jack Holt, Stanley Fields, Vicki Lester—A so-so programmer. Jack Holt is all washed up here. Business poor. Running time, 53 minutes. Played May 16-17.—Harry Tishkoff, Empress Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Neighborhood patronage.

LONE WOLF TAKES A CHANCE: Warren William, June Storey, Henry Wilcoxon—Here is a surprisingly good series of pictures, this one best yet. Played with Monogram's "Land of Blazing Sun Guns" did excellent business. Played April 16.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

MEET BOSTON BLACKIE: Chester Morris, Rochelle Hudson—Excellent program picture. Ran this with "Riders from Black Mountain" with Tim McCoy. Did extra good business. Played April 9.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

First National

STRAWBERRY BLONDE, THE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—One of the best pictures from Warner Brothers this year. A real show for all classes of people. Will do extra business. Played May 18-20.—Norman Goodin, Lake Theatre, Oswego, Ore. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY BLONDE, THE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—Positively the best all around picture made this year by any company. It will pack them in and everybody will like it too. Running time, 97 minutes.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE SAILS AGAIN: Marjorie Rambeau, Alan Hale, Jane Wyman, Ronald Reagan—My Saturday night crowd enjoyed this feature very much, especially the comedy in same, but to me it was just another feature. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 17.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANDY HARDY'S PRIVATE SECRETARY: Mickey Rooney—Good business but not up to the Hardy standard. However, the picture is as good as any of the rest of the series and emphasizes humor more than usual. That's what they want here nowadays. As exams are starting next week, Mickey's troubles in that respect were appreciated more than usual. Kathryn Grayson is definitely going to go places, in my opinion. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 23-24—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, New York. Small college town.

COME LIVE WITH ME: James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr—In spite of Stewart's popularity this did not draw any above average. Believe that all who saw it were pleased but it did not get them in. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 18-19.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ESCAPE: Norma Shearer, Robert Taylor, Conrad Veidt, Nazimova—A very fine production. Something about this that makes you live every scene. Perfect cast. Norma Shearer was excellent.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GO WEST: Marx Bros.—I thought it was one of the best pictures the Marx Bros. ever made. Many of my patrons came back the second night and asked to let them hear Chico and Harpo play again. Played to a good crowd with good box office. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 14-15.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

LAND OF LIBERTY: Historical—This did fairly well on Friday night when our town people come but at the Saturday shows it fell flat. Many said they were fed up on war and thought this would be propaganda from beginning to end, which was not far from the fact. Yet it was a wonderful piece of directing and editing.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THIRD FINGER, LEFT HAND: Melvyn Douglas, Myrna Loy—Played old, but still plenty good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN, THE: Laraine Day, Robert Young—Far inferior to the "Mary Dugan" Metro gave us with Norma Shearer a few years ago. When an attempt is made to take the dirt out of this kind of a story, there's nothing left for entertainment. No drawing power. Audience divided, some liked it, some didn't. Running time, 90 minutes.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

Monogram

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE: Jackie Moran, Marcia Mae Jones—Very good little feature. Was well liked. Did good "Bargain Day" biz. Played April 21.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

QUEEN OF THE YUKON: Charles Bickford, Irene Rich—Good picture. Average business. On "Bargain Day." Played April 29.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

DOOMED CARAVAN: William Boyd—Played to a good house with good boxoffice. Hopalong is quite a favorite here. Played May 16-17.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

LADY EVE, THE: Henry Fonda, Barbara Stanwyck, Charles Coburn—Don't expect too much of this one, although it will do average business. A few little situations cause unfavorable comment but I think they liked it anyway. If they don't talk about them, they don't impress them, so they must like this one. Running time, 97 minutes.—D. E. Burnett, State Theatre, Larned, Kansas. General patronage.

LADY EVE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Henry Fonda—Good picture and good music. This is a swell comedy. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 21-22.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LIFE WITH HENRY: Jackie Cooper, Leila Ernest—Here's a radio program which drew exceptionally well. Many of our rural patrons, not regulars, came because they had been following this program on the air. And it gave definite satisfaction. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 20-21.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR: Jack Benny, Fred Allen—Good picture and good business. Everyone was looking forward to Rochester dancing and were disappointed that he did not. I have certainly seen Mary Martin play better parts. Seemed to please the public and that is what I want. Running time, 82 minutes. Played May 12-13.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT EARL CARROLL'S: Ken Murray, Rose Hobart—If your crowds like pretty women, you couldn't go wrong on this one. Very good musical. Did average business. Played April 22.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll, Robert Preston—Top flight money maker. Played against "Gone with the Wind" yet did above average business. Contains the most beautiful color I ever saw in a motion picture. Your best bet! Played April 17-18.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

POWER DIVE: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker—This is one program picture that didn't miss the boat. You won't be disappointed when you play this one, on the week-end, of course. The public seems to want air pictures now so give this miniature "I Wanted Wings." Played May 15-17.—D. E. Burnett, State Theatre, Larned, Kansas. General patronage.

QUEEN OF THE MOB: Ralph Bellamy, Jean Cagney, William Henry, Blanche Yurka. Good program picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

RANGE WAR: William Boyd, Russell Hayden—Played this repeat booking. It's good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

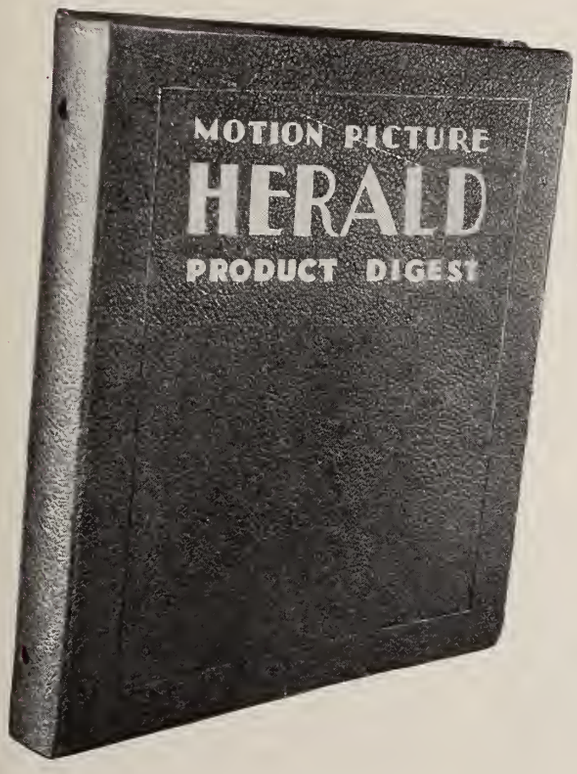
ROUND-UP, THE: Richard Dix, Patricia Morison, Preston Foster—Good picture and good business. This is above average for a western. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 23-24.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA: Fred MacMurray, Madeleine Carroll—Plenty of humor and excellent reactions to little Carolyn Lee's dialogue made this a real success in this spot. I must confess I was surprised at the box-office and comments on this one. I am sorry I didn't play it two days. Any audience anywhere will thoroughly enjoy this one. Don't muff it!!! Running time, 109 minutes. Played May 15.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

YOU'RE THE ONE: Bonnie Baker, Orrin Tucker and His Orchestra—A decided flop! Even with a giveaway to help, it could not get them in and all who saw it rated it a very silly piece of merchandise. Running time, 81 minutes. Played May 14-15.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Republic

MELODY RANCH: Gene Autry, Jimmy Durante, Anna Miller—Played this with "Friendly Neighbors." Showed it late, but stood them in the aisles. I have packed houses with each Autry picture for the past two years. I thought "Melody Ranch" was a pretty good entertainer. Running time, 84 minutes.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.



RIDIN' ON A RAINBOW: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Mary Lee—Our Autry pictures bring them in no matter what the weather and please even students. The "Rainbow" song is very good indeed and Autry, I really believe, gets better each day. All the power in the world to Republic and six cheers for marvelous Mary Lee. Running time, 79 minutes. Played May 23-24.—Ken Gorham, Town Hall Theatre, Middlebury, Vt. General patronage.

RIDE, TENDERFOOT, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—These features go over always with a bang and this one has plenty of comedy without too much rooting, shooting. This class of picture seems to please all my patrons. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 10.—A. L. Dove, Bengougb Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

ROOKIES ON PARADE: Bob Crosby, Ruth Terry—Good picture and good business. Lots of comedy and music. Will please all classes. Play it quick. Running time, 69 minutes. Played May 19-20.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby, Charles Butterworth, Jerry Colonna—Gentleman, this picture does not bulge out with marquee names, but for real, healthful, sparkling, digestible entertainment, "Sis Hopkins" takes the cake. Every customer here, and we had plenty, raved about the picture. It's grand, and I mean it. Running time, 91 minutes. Played May 18-19.—Ken Gorham, Town Hall Theatre, Middlebury, Vt. General patronage.

RKO Radio

KITTY FOYLE: Ginger Rogers, Dennis Morgan, James Craig—Very good picture for women's trade. Business above average. Running time, 108 minutes. Played May 18-20.—Harry Tishkoff, Empress Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Neighborhood patronage.

NO, NO NANETTE: Anna Neagle, Richard Carlson, Roland Young, Helen Broderick—While not a big picture, this is a pleasing comedy. Average business. Running time, 96 minutes. Played May 21-22. —Harry Tishkoff, Empress Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Neigbborhood patronage.

United Artists

BLACKOUT: Conrad Veidt, Valerie Hobson—Picture received good comments from all and as business was good for the first week we held it over for three extra days. This picture should do business any place. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Marcb 27-April 5.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

POT O' GOLD: James Stewart, Paulette Goddard, Horace Heidt and His Orchestra, Charles Winninger—Good musical comedy. Good cast and good business first week. Picture held over tbree extra days. Played this one Canadian premiere. Songs very catchy. Winninger as funny as ever and Heidt does good job for first appearance on screen. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 12-23.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THAT HAMILTON WOMAN: Vivien Leigh, Laurence Olivier—It is a marvelous picture. The Middlebury College students, girls in particular, went for it in a big way. Costumes are elaborate, acting excellent, scenes enormous and has the names and advertising to bring them in and please the patrons most thoroughly. Running time, 126 minutes. Played May 20-22.—Ken Gorham, Town Hall Theatre, Middlebury, Vt. General patronage.

THE GREAT DICTATOR: Charlie Chaplin—This was well attended and enjoyed both nights. It isn't the biggest picture or the biggest business we bave ever done but I wouldn't mind having them come along like this regularly. Some parts of this are extremely clever and funny. Running time, 109 minutes. Date played, May 15.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, New York. Small college town.

Universal

BACK STREET: Chares Boyer, Margaret Sullavan, Richard Carlson—Fine picture, excellent business. If you have class patronage, this picture will be a natural for you. Not as good as the '31 version, but still a very fine picture. Played May 4-6.—Norman Goodin, Lake Theatre, Oswego, Ore. General patronage.

FLAME OF NEW ORLEANS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, Bruce Cabot, Roland Young, Mischa Auer—It is a good picture, but did not go over so big with our audience. Marlene needs more names with her and a better story, I would assume. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 4-6.—Ken Gorham, Town Hall Theatre, Middlebury, Vt. General patronage.

HIRED WIFE: Rosalind Russell, Melvyn Douglas—A good comedy picture. No kicks from the audience nor from me. Only wish that I could be surprised like this more often. Played May 19-20.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

SON OF ROARING DAN: Johnny Mack Brown, Fuzzy Knight—Good western, but Johnny Mack Brown, even though he is an Alabama boy, does not do such good business.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SPRING PARADE: Deanna Durbin, Robert Cummings, Mischa Auer—Picture good. Business terrible. I wouldn't care if I never played another Durbin. Lost money on this one.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GAY CABALLERO, THE: Cesar Romero, Sheila Ryan—Nice program picture which pleased. Running time, 57 minutes. Played May 9-10.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN BROADCAST: Alice Faye, Jack Oakie, John Payne—While Alice Faye has a remarkable box office following, I feel this picture is below standard for her and that she will suffer loss of popularity if such pictures continue. Gross on this picture not satisfactory but allocations make it necessary to play on preferred time. Running time, 91 minutes. Played May 18-21.—D. E. Burnett, State Theatre, Larned, Kansas. General patronage.

THAT NIGHT IN RIO: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Carmen Miranda—Color is the biggest part of this picture and Ameche is next. Faye plays a remarkable part and Fox gave her every advantage in this picture. Settings beautiful and color splendid. Plug it hard on preferred time. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 11-14.—D. E. Burnett, State Theatre, Larned, Kansas. General patronage.

TIN PAN ALLEY: Alice Faye, Betty Grable, John Payne, Jack Oakie—This made a big hit here. Did not draw very well, which was no exception, but it certainly took with all who saw it. Running time, 94 minutes. Played May 11-12.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TOBACCO ROAD: Gene Tierney, Charley Grapewin, Marjorie Rambeau—Expected big business, but a great disappointment at the box office. In the long run, an exhibitor would be better off to double bill it. I didn't.—Norman Goodin, Lake Theatre, Oswego, Ore. General patornage.

Warner Brothers

FOUR MOTHERS: Priscilla Lane, Jeffrey Lynn—A sweet picture that should well please the ladies. Not much of a man's picture but should do good generally. Did average business on our best days. Played April 24-25.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

GREAT LIE, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent, Mary Astor—Good picture; fair business. The women liked it, the men said it was too long and too draggy. Running time, 110 minutes. Played May 25-26.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES HAPPINESS: Mildred Coles, Edward Norris—A jolly little program picture. Played on "Bargain Day." Did average business. Played April 28.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

LETTER, THE: Bette Davis, Herbert Marshall—Warners let us down with this one. Business way below par. Doesn't compare with previous Davis pictures. Played April 10-11.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

STRAWBERRY BLONDE: James Cagney, Rita Hayworth, Olivia de Havilland—A fairly good crowd seemed to enjoy this thoroughly. Plenty of action, comedy, and music, with an interesting story. After the "end" of the title the audience is invited to join in singing the words on the screen to "Band Played On." My bunch joined in excellently but I suppose you have all omitted it. Customers who saw the picture a second time at my place said the previous theatre bad gypped them. What about it? Running time, 97 minutes. Played May 22.—W. Varick Nevins III., Alfred, Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, New York. Small college town.

Asks $6,250,000 for Alleged Plagiarism

John Igual Montijo, describing himself as a ghost writer-producer-director-actor, filed two federal court suits in Hollywood seeking a total of $6,250,000 for the alleged plagiarism of his manuscript, "Viva Madero" or "The Rebel, The Birth of a Revolution," by Paramount, Cecil B. DeMille Productions, Ernest Heminway and others. He wants $5,000,000 from Mr. Heminway, who, he charged, used parts of his story in "For Whom the Bell Tolls," and $1,250,000 from Paramount and Mr. DeMille for the alleged use of parts of the same story in "North West Mounted Police."

Judge Samuel Mandelbaum of the federal court in New York has denied an application of RKO Radio Pictures to dismiss the plagiarism suit of Jesse Solomon, and ordered the suit to trial. The complaint charges the infringement of the plaintiff's play, "It Goes Through Here," by the RKO picture, "Radio City Revels."

Jury Disagrees In Davis Trial

Following a seven-hour deadlock, a jury sitting in the conspiracy trial of J. Warren Davis, retired United States circuit judge, and Morgan S. Kaufman, attorney and former bankruptcy referee, was dismissed last Thursday, May 29th. Judge Robert Nelson Pollard, trying the case in the United States district court in Philadelphia, an outgrowth of the litigation of William Fox's film and financial empire, dismissed the jury of 11 men and one woman after he had been assured no instructions of the court could dissolve the six-six split. Judge Davis and Mr. Kaufman walked from the courtroom after renewing their bonds of $5,000 each pending a new trial which, it was indicated, the government will seek to list for early July.

Some of the jurors, it was indicated, "did not like" the testimony of Mr. Fox, the government's star witness, in seeking to prove that Mr. Davis, Mr. Kaufman and Mr. Fox conspired to obstruct justice and to defraud the United States in the litigation involving the bankruptcy of Mr. Fox's holdings.

Mr. Fox was not in the courtroom during the last day of the trial, nor in sight of the federal building during the hours in waiting for the jury. He had pleaded guilty and theoretically, Judge Pollard could sentence him immediately. In actual practice, however, this is never done. The usual procedure is to wait and see what happens to the other members of the alleged conspiracy.

Summing up the government's case before it was turned over to the jury for deliberation, Walter Gahagan, Jr., special assistant to the United States attorney general, told the jurors "defense workers are not playing a part as important as yours" in preserving American institutions.

The prosecutor's closing summation followed the end of the defense case, during which Judge Davis and Mr. Kaufman flatly denied the government's charges.

Following the jury's dismissal after not being able to reach an agreement, the prosecuting counsel disclosed that at the new trial new evidence would be introduced.

Record Plan Approved

The plan of reorganization of the United States Record Corp., was formally approved by Judge Vincent L. Leibell in the federal court in New York, Monday, June 2nd. Under the plan a group of officers of the old company have agreed to pay 14 per cent of all unsecured creditors.

Although the common pleas court in Cincinnati has authorized Harry Abrams, who was recently appointed received for Strand Enterprises, Inc., operating the Strand Office building and the 1,200-seat Strand theatre in the downtown business district, to continue operation of the projects, the theatre has closed. As yet the future of the house has not been determined.

Chaplin Victory Upheld

The plagiarism case in which Michael Kustoff charged Charlie Chaplin with theft of the story used in "Modern Times" was decided in the comedian's favor by the United States circuit court in San Francisco. A 20-page decision upheld the verdict of the federal court in Los Angeles.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

WHAT SAY THE FIGURES?

Who does all the work in spotlighting showmanship? From what type of situation is the keenest exploitation to be expected? Do all the bows go to the big city first-runs? Where does the small-town theatreman fit in?

Why all the questions, you ask? Well, a visiting Round Tabler just came by. He hails from a small town theatre in the Midwest, where he is doing a very sweet job of work. In the course of conversation, it was asked why the lad had not entered more actively into the Quigley Awards. His answer was that, since most of the material appeared to come from the big town first-runs, he kinda laid off.

So, how do you answer that one? With the records, of course. We dug up the April 5th issue, carrying results of the First Quarter of the year in the Quigley Awards. Here is how the judges called 'em:

Of the 74 "Quarter-Master" Awards—Plaques, Medals, and Citations—

Twenty-two were voted in cities over 100,000, 6 in cities under 100,000, 8 in cities under 50,000, 15 in cities under 25,000, 11 in communities under 10,000, 3 in towns under 5,000, and 9 in neighborhood and downtown subsequent-runs.

Thus, in all cities in the top three brackets, 36 Awards were posted, as against 38—a majority—going to spots of 50,000 or less, all the way down to the less-than-5,000's and subsequent-runs.

Further, of the three Plaques voted, one went to a 20,000 town, one to a 3,500.

Of the five Medals voted, one went to a 20,000 community, one to a 9,100, one to a 6,200, and one to a subsequent-run.

And, we suppose, of all the entrants, winners and non-winners, a good 20 per cent were newcomers to the Competitions, mostly from the smaller situations and encouraged to participate by the success of other theatremen from the lesser spots.

The above findings are typical of the cross-section of entrants, small town and big city, who have accepted the Quigley Awards as the theatreman's own competition wherein his work is judged solely by impartial, knowing judges. And let it be added that these entries also credit the Quigley Awards alone for bringing promotions, salary rises and bonuses which otherwise, they admit, might not be had.

Convention-hardened as is this observer, it is to be set down here that attendance at last week's Interstate Theatres meeting in Galveston opened your Chairman's eyes to a demonstration of brotherly love as is not everyday's experience. In the spreading domain of Karl Hoblitzelle and Bob O'Donnell, one must really meet up with their boys in convention-time to realize how significant a part the human element plays in relations between bossman and manager.

Nothing is too good for the manager. By the same token, nothing is too good for the boss. Which is to be noted in the way those showmen go after the job; and, if one says they go singing, that would be the tip-off on how the lads feel about it.

Any final answer to relationship between employer and employee is to be checked only in the happiness each obtains from his labors and in doing for each other. The Texans have found that answer.

Men need not be driven, nor beaten, nor threatened to function fully—and profitably. Karl Hoblitzelle says so. Bob O'Donnell says so. And, judged by circuit results, every last Interstater says so.

'GOOD NEIGHBOR', GOOD THEATRE

Theatre cooperation in the defense program and Americanism promotions encircles a wider horizon with the "good neighbor" project, the "All-American" campaign recently concluded in the Skouras Theatres under the skilled guidance of George Skouras, president, and William White, partner and general manager. Described in the issue of last week, six representative units of the circuit in Long Island, Westchester, New Jersey and New York were selected. Here leading Americans combined with Latin-American prominents in patriotic exercises. Colorful lobbies of Latin-American decorations and products added interest.

Success of the project opens another road for the theatre toward the building of hemispheric good-will. Right now that would be especially significant in national defense.

Round Table In Pictures

Reported by Warner District Manager Charles Smakwitz was the 24-sheet bally promoted by Arnold Stoltz week ahead of his opening of "Flame of New Orleans" at the Avon, in Utica.

Bob Busch at the Jeffery, in Chicago made a clean sweep of his lobby display for "Come Live With Me." Concealed motor propelled broom, copy overall reading: "You'll sweep away your blues when you see," etc., etc.

Used on all lobby doors in advance of "A Woman's Face" at Loew's, in Harrisburg, Pa., was Round Tabler Bill Elder's teaser stunt. Title, cast and question marks carried out suspense atmosphere.

With local Post-Telegram taking their newies to Washington for an annual two day trip, Matt Saunders at Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, recently acted as host to the lads and is shown above alighting from plane with the contingency. Round of entertainment was planned, stunt breaking local and Washington papers.

Fitzpatrick Ready For 'Old King Sol'

As stimulants for summer business Ed Fitzpatrick at Loew's Poli, in Waterbury, Conn., has a campaign of no mean proportions lined up. First of which to be held on Saturday morning, June 21, is what he chooses to term a "School's Out" party for kids, and scheduled two days after local schools close for the season. Cooperating merchants have purchased large blocks of tickets and are distributing them in any manner they desire.

Following this, on Tuesday night, Fitz brings his Conga contest to the stage with a large number of local teams already lined up to enter the competition. Another stunt will be a combined local dancing school revue, tieup effected with teachers of all the larger studios, promoted prizes going to winners.

For four consecutive weeks in July, the Round Tabler will run bathing beauty contests with two winners picked each week and the finals held on the fourth week. In this connection, Fitz has promoted local jeweler for watch giveaway, cash prizes, etc. In addition Ed has already laid plans by contacting the Chamber of Commerce to try to put over a Merchants' Awards Day tieup for sometime in August.

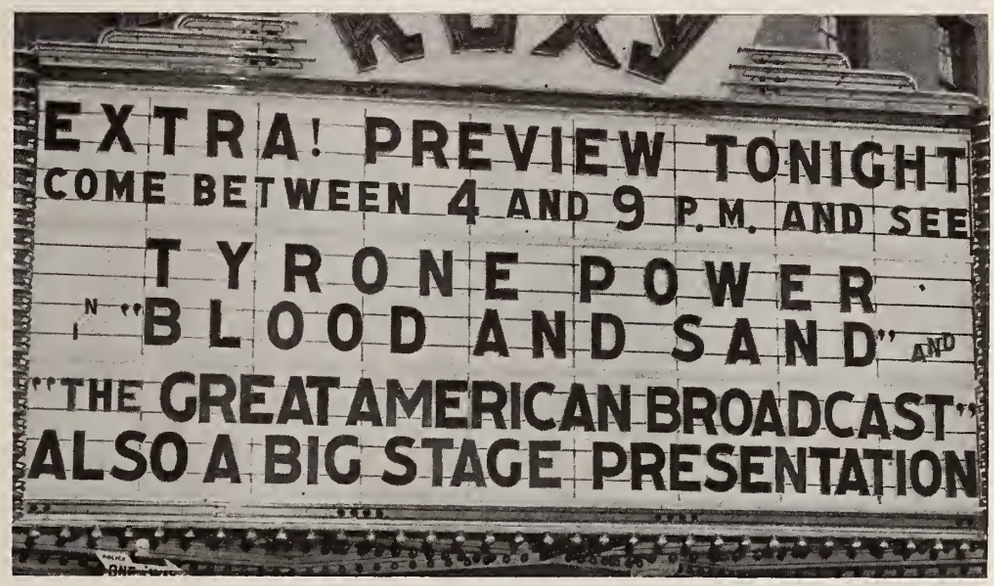
Cinderella Contest Aids Golden on "Miss Jones"

Jay Golden of the Palace Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., arranged a Cinderella contest for his campaign on "The Devil and Miss Jones," which was held on stage and preceded by publicity which included announcements at several balls.

Golden tied in with department store for a movie quiz and window display. Stills from previous Jean Arthur productions were mounted and contestants asked to name the titles, with guest tickets being the awards. The Max Factor cosmetic department cooperated and distributed contest blanks.

A novel 40x60 was used in the lobby. Red ribbons were tabbed from adjectives in four dictionaries on tables adjacent to the display. These adjectives were "gay, bright, magnificent, colossal." With the display this caption was used: "Webster Writes an Ad for Jean Arthur in 'The Devil and Miss Jones.'"



News agency trucks were bannered with copy pertaining to the Screen Guide's selection of "The Devil and Miss Jones" as the picture of the month with a newsstand tie-in on this factor as well. Shopping bags were imprinted with the cooperation of five-and-dime store.

Sparrow's "Ziegfeld" Break

Reportedly the biggest movie page art break ever to appear in the Richmond Times-Dispatch was the six-column layout on "Ziegfeld Girl" planted by Allen Sparrow, Loew's, in that city, as part of his campaign for the musical.

MARQUEE TYPOGRAPHY

Reproduced above are three examples of typographically composed marquee copy in selling seats for the New York Roxy, situated at one of the world's busiest corners. Quick and frequent changes are made in accordance, Homer H. Harman, ad head, reports. The illustrations here show daily changes of the Wagner interchangeable letters in three sizes—8, 10 and 12 inches.

At top is a "Blood and Sand" preview layout installed on a Wednesday morning, with the regular change copy made on Wednesday night (shown in center) for the Thursday morning opening. In both instances the 10 and 12 inch letters dominate. Bottom illustration shows layout flexibility in the stressing of newspaper quotes on the previous date for "Great American Broadcast", replacing opening copy on the following day, the quotes displayed mostly in 8-inch letters. In all instances, white space and easily readable typography are given close attention.

REMOTE CONTROL LOBBY

Complete with cellophane windows, sound proofing velour drapes, featuring heavy picture display and stills of various artists from city's two affiliated radio stations, was the Remote Control Lobby Studio constructed for "Great American Broadcast" by Joe Ruddick at the Gillioz, in Springfield, Mo. Control line was installed by station and one of their feature combination vocal and instrumental acts broadcast direct from lobby nightly at seven p.m. week ahead of playdates as a buildup for the picture. Broadcast was featured in theatre ads and public address system carried it out to the street front.

Lyons Promotes Gifts For Stage Wedding

Of no mean proportions was the stage wedding held by Harry Lyons at the RKO Alden, in Jamaica, for which innumerable gifts were promoted for the bridal party by the theatreman and his assistant, Barney Feingold. Advertised through screen, program, newspaper ads, the stunt was built up weeks ahead with record crowd attending the ceremonies themselves.

Among the gifts secured by the enterprising theatremen were three complete rooms of furniture, gowns for entire bridal party, wedding reception for 30 at leading restaurant, suite at well-known hotel for two days and week's honeymoon vacation at a country club. Additional promotions included supply of meat for the first month, month's supply of bread, laundry service for a month, bank account and safety deposit box, etc., etc.

Army Officials Aid On "I Wanted Wings"

Arnold Van Leer, Paramount exploiteer in Boston and Paul Levi, head of publicity for the M&P Metropolitan, arranged a tie-up with army officials for the New England premiere of "I Wanted Wings."

Squadron of Army planes droned over the city while from the ground, huge searchlights probed the sky to pick out the planes. Army officers assembled to a drum-and-bugle-corps accompaniment. Four huge searchlights were placed on Boston Common and another in front of the house. Each of these was of approximately 800,000,000 candlepower, capable of picking out a plane four miles away.

Special releases were sent out by the press division of the First Corps Area Army Headquarters, and officers of the air corps and other branches attended the opening. A regulation Army Recruiting Booth was established in the lobby of the Metropolitan to supply information about the Army Flying Cadet Corps, with attaches on hand to accept recruits.

Paramount Makes Available Follow-Through Exploitation

Follow-through exploitation being given more serious attention now by the home office ad forces is illustrated in the recent service inaugurated by Paramount, wherein Sid Mesibov of Bob Gillham's department reports an exploitation manual for subsequent and neighborhood runs, this on "Road to Zanzibar" and "Reaching for the Sun." Designed for situations where exploitation budgets are limited, ideas, contacts and stunts included are covered from the field and when properly handled are favored for extra grosses in those situations.

Mesibov has selected a number of ideas in addition to those he suggests on his own, all of which if tied in properly should mean something for theatremen in other situations in addition to those in the big first-runs.

Arkin's Laff Show Boxoffice Tonic

A theatre event of which there cannot be too many was a hilarious "Laff Week," as put on by Eli Arkin at Warner's Avalon, in Chicago, the Round Tabler featuring it with every screwey stunt he could think of. Week ahead the theatreman ran a trailer with such copy as: "Are you a sour puss? If you are don't come to this theatre during our giant double-laff show. It's good clean fun for the entire family, 180 minutes of roaring, rocking laughter" etc., etc. Features booked for the occasion were "Road to Zanzibar" and "A Guy, A Girl and A Gob."

Flash lobby was featured consisting of two panels topped by huge laughing head and still displays on features. A stringer of laughing heads connected these panels with laff copy, and was well illuminated. Stair risers on all stairways leading to mezzanine carried "Ha, Ha," and "Ho, Ho" stickers.

Other stunts included a large red laugh barrel which was planted out front and appropriately stencilled. Pole through center carried sign that revolved in window reading: "There's a barrel of laughs in store for you at our Laff Show." Loud speaker placed inside barrel connected to phonograph playing laff record. Center panel of boxoffice carried broken laugh meter with copy: "Our laugh meter couldn't take it. All broken up with laughter over" etc., etc. Giant cards having laughing heads were posted in all windows leading to theatre on both sides of street and in the theatre's three parking lots. Newspapers sold at stand on corner and in lobby carried special sticker with copy: "Even the headlines will seem more cheerful after you see."

Working on the old axiom that if you laugh, the world laughs with you, Arkin reports the entire show as bringing in the anticipated do, re, mi at the boxoffice.

Singer's Midgets Welcomed By Mayor for Rosenthal

For the personal appearance of Singer's Midgets at the Poli Majestic, in Bridgeport, Morris Rosenthal took one of the midgets to the local Naval recruiting office for enlistment. Photographers on hand took shots and ran them together with story which broke papers. Parade was held from the theatre with cars, elephants, and midgets headed by police escort, which marched to the City Hall where they were greeted on steps by His Honor the Mayor. This too was good for art and stories. Co-op ad featured one of the midgets standing in a refrigerator, photo of which was used in ads for three column display ad. Reception tie-up with Times Star brought story and coupon in paper, each child presenting one of them was entitled to go on stage at matinee to meet the midgets.

"Buck Privates" brought distribution of the "Did the draft get you?" throwaways, inside plugging the show. These were distributed at cigar and newsstands, bowling alleys and taverns. Officials of the six local draft boards were invited in a body opening night and classified ad contest was planted four days ahead.

Soldiers Compete for State Title

Spud-Peelers Vie On 'Navy' Contest

The potato peeling soldier stunt used widely in lobbies and windows on Universal's "Buck Privates" was elaborated considerably for the opening of "Abbott & Costello in The Navy" at the Rialto, in Louisville, Ky., where Manager J. J. Musselman, working with Universal field exploiteer Milt Crandal ran the idea into a State Championship Spud Peeling Contest credited by Musselman for giving the date one of the theatre's biggest openings. Staged under the auspices of the Louisville Service Club at the organization's headquarters, enlisted men from the armed forces and air corps stationed at nearby Fort Knox were invited to participate.

Over 25 expert peelers, seated at individual tables, were given 40 minutes to do their stuff, judges being chefs and stewards from leading local hotels. The entrants used up over a ton of spuds, which as quickly as peeled, were distributed by special trucks to the various charities. In addition to the requirements that all entrants must be males, machine or gadget peelers were barred, contestants confined to the usual paring knife.

The event was given another lift with special recognition from the Governor of Kentucky and brought to the attention of the public invited to view the contest. Newspaper publicity was in keeping, the tiein receiving a lot of attention, the winner getting an Abbott & Costello trophy, as well as a prize of fifteen dollars in cash. Other cash awards were given for second and third.

ONE FORTNIGHT TO GO

Here are the results in the next-to-last Fortnight of the Second Quarter of the year's Quigley Awards. Just one two-week period remains, which obviously is kept in mind by the 63 entrants listed below, the majority of whom are right in the front line of the running for Quigley Awards consideration. In most instances, the credits are taken down by individual theatremen.

Sufficiently important to be emphasized again is the advantage of entering material regularly in as many Fortnight Periods as possible to insure consideration for the Quarter-Masters. As stressed in the rulings, with everything else equal, it is expected that those who are more widely represented will be favored as against those who forward entries only now and then.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Running along entire side of lobby wall was the "Tobacco Road" display created by Dave Dallas at the Kansan, in Parsons, Kan., with giant cutout letters, at either side of which were also cutouts of Elly Mae and Jeeter Lester. At base of display was a chair reserved for Jeeter and large basket of turnips with card addressed to the character care of Dallas at the theatre.

Entire front of the W&V Colonial, in Allentown, Pa., was transformed by Manager Charlie Bierbauer and publicist Nick Todorov for the opening of "The Great Dictator." One side of box office carried blow-up of Chaplin in the character of Hynkle, while other side carried cut of Charlie as the barber, with back facing the street. Scene stills were also used to advantage.

To launch his serial, "The Mysterious Doctor Satan," at the Jeffery, in Chicago, Manager Robert Busch constructed a robot for street bally. Body of figure was made from a large cardboard drum with sheet metal at the bottom to give it greater length. Legs and arms were made of cardboard tubes with upper parts of inner tubes to give flexibility. Buzzer was fastened inside to make noise as robot walked and was operated from flashlight batteries. Bally visited schools, parks and wherever crowds gathered.

Santa Claus gag was used to good advantage by Pat Notaro at the Columbia, in Sharon, Pa., for advance on "A Girl, a Guy and a Gob." Appropriately bannered, Kris Kringle covered downtown section at rush hours, card reading: "If you think I'm nuts," etc. For his mezzanine, Notaro constructed a 30-foot display of the deck of a ship with maritime instruments, etc.

Crowd-stopper was Lee Kline's "Love Thy Neighbor" lobby display at the Orpheum, in Philadelphia, consisting of cutouts of Benny and Allen with boxing gloves, planted in miniature ring. Animation was supplied with motors running the arms of both in fistic postures.

Employing multiple colors, third dimension art layout, tinsel, etc., John Murt, artist, turned out an effective display for "Ziegfeld Girl," which was conceived by Manager Al Reh at the Stanley, Philadelphia. In addition to the landscape display, giant easel stationed elsewhere in the lobby featured stills of the girls which were effectively encased in flitter, musical notes spotted around for further decoration.

Geneva College supplied a local Ziegfeld Girl and the winner was presented with gifts by local merchants as part of the "Ziegfeld Girl" campaign put over by George Pappas, Rialto, Beaver Falls, Pa.

Three thousand numbered inserts were placed inside bread wrappers as part of the "Men of Boys Town" campaign put over by Bert Wild, Butler Theatre, Butler, Pa., with lucky number holders awarded guest tickets.

Adapting a daring plan for ads on "A Woman's Face," United Detroit theatres for the date at the United Artists Theatre, took clips from the print showing the scarred face of Joan Crawford and blew them up for use in the ads as illustrated above. Box-office results were most encouraging according to Ralph F. Stitt, circuit ad head, to hold up the thought that the curiosity angle would bring in the business and that a glamour girl need not always be a glamour girl. The line "A Female Scarface" was stressed in all copy for holdover returns.

Set aside for the use of "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary" was the desk with complete office equipment stationed in the lobby of the Dunkin Theatre, in Cushing, Okla., as Joe Stribling's advance on that date. Gag cards such as "In conference, very private" were conspicuously spotted and silhouette cutouts of Rooney and Ann Rutherford were hung above desk.

Ahead of "Blackout" at the Capitol, in Brampton, Ont., Jack Campbell secured a board approximately 20 feet long and a foot wide and painted it black. On it silver flitter title letters reading "Blackout Is Coming" were used and board then hinged to floor of stage, in front of curtain and directly behind footlights. Thin wire held board in position and rope from board in center leading behind curtain enabled usher to raise or lower the sign as required.

With the assistance of his doorman Murray Keillor, eye-arresting front was featured by Leslie V. Campbell at the Strand, in Trail, B. C., for "North West Mounted Police." Covered entirely with compo board, sides were covered with scene stills which were set against a painted North West background.

Doing his bit for the National Salvage Campaign, Bob Berezin at the Elgin, in Ottawa, Canada, has stationed a large receptacle on the corner of the theatre's parking lot with card alongside inviting folks to "Save Scrap to Scrap Hitler." Passersby are asked to deposit paper, metals, etc., and Bob reports the stunt as an attractor with generous donations resulting.

Secured from the Roosevelt Aviation School by Ken Rockwell at the RKO Jefferson, in lower New York City, was a 1,000 h.p. Pratt and Whitney Twin-Wasp engine which was displayed in lobby for "Flight Command." Motor and propeller was geared for instructional purposes with special lighting to show the movement of pistons, etc. By jacking up the front at an angle so that the propeller would clear the floor, it was possible to plug into a wall socket and have the propeller turn slowly.

Man in tails carrying giant simulated copy of "Philadelphia Story," covered downtown streets of Cleveland as part of Arnold Gates' advance on that opening at Loew's Park. Copy on back of book pertained to the picture, playdates, etc., with one side devoted to James Stewart's winning of the Academy Award. As folks would gather, bally man would stop and read bright, witty passages to the curious.

Special photographs and stills were promoted from the local Navy Recruiting Office by Ed Goth at the St. George, Staten Island, for advance lobby on "Flight Command." Six-foot boat in center of display was replica of the U. S. S. Indianapolis, overall was a cutout of plane in nose dive, wings carrying title letters and cast.

F&M Theatremen Celebrate Spring

Activities among the Fanchon and Marcomen, in St. Louis recently bound around entrance of spring, brought out a number of colorful and effective promotions by the various theatremen and reported here by Les Kaufman, circuit zone ad head. Represented by Jack Rosenzweig at the Manchester, a "Masked Movie Star" contest was staged with 16 sets of weekly passes going to winners. Tying in as many merchants, stills were displayed in cooperating store windows featuring various marked stars, entry blanks were available at stores and in theatre for contestants identifying votes. Stunt was plugged through trailer, stores, programs and throwaways.

To herald his Spring campaign at the Shady Oak, Manager Ray Parker held a Boy Scout parade through the city, lads carrying appropriately tied-in banners, winding up at the theatre where they were greeted by the Mayor and Chief of Police. Mayor gave a little address on the campaign and finished by inviting all Scouts to attend the show. Feature picture was "Sante Fe Trail" and in this connection, Parker transformed entire front into wooden fort, promoting the display from local Standard Oil agency. Entire service staff wore streamers during run and effective lobby setpiece with foliage was used for the occasion.

Goldstein Holds Fashion Show

Of no mean proportions was the fashion stage show put on by Joseph J. Goldstein at the Mikado and held on two nights through the cooperation of local merchants. Entire proceedings were broadcast over Station WIL and in addiiton to this interview, spot announcements were carried on same station week ahead. Co-op ads were featured and newspapers came through with stories and art, while each store featured window displays and plugged the event generally. Each merchant contributed a proportionate share to underwrite cost of such and the Lions Club sponsored the event to add additional prestige.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Classified Ad Contest Clicks for Prytz

With his town particularly quiz conscious, Roy Prytz ahead of "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" at the Granada, in Duluth, Minn., planted a contest in the classified ad section with guest tickets going to those correctly answering questions pertaining to various merchants' ads. Ordinarily, Prytz, says he would have written finis to the stunt as far as he was concerned, but so exceptional was the response, that when movie editor reported on the great number of entries, Prytz went to town and further promoted a three-column ad which carried cut of girl in newspaper office snowed under with the quiz responses.

After trying for some time to crack his papers, in connection with comic strips, the Round Tabler finally sold editors on idea of credit line on the Blondie comic strip in connection with his opening of "Blondie Goes Latin." This was carried ahead and during run.

POORMAN OPENS THEATRE NURSERY

So that mothers may see the shows at the Lyric in Newmanstown, Pa., with free minds, Charles B. Poorman has recently established an up-to-date nursery at his theatre with uniformed nurses in attendance. Patrons are invited to bring their off-spring and deposit them in the playroom, which is equipped with the latest in toys and other facilities.

The nursery is open for inspection at all times and walls are adorned with paintings of comic characters, done by Poorman himself, who also designed the modern indirect lighting used.

Stage Quiz Contest Aids Brien on "Go West" Date

Effecting a tieup with local coffee merchant, Lige Brien at the Belmar, in Pittsburgh arranged for a radio broadcast which aided in plugging "Escape" two days ahead of opening. Held at theatre, announcer from KDKA carried on a quiz program, calling on five people from the audience to participate. As each was quizzed a separate transcription was made of their voices. During these three separate quizzes the theatre and picture were mentioned. Then one large transcription containing each of the previous nights' activities was made and this put over the air two days later on the "Hear Yourself Program." Arrangements were made for each participating patron to receive a transcription and a pound of the cooperating merchant's coffee.

On "Go West," Brien dressed usherette as cowgirl and had her distribute promoted nut confection in imprinted bags, at local games, street cars, stores, etc. Inserted in local papers were score cards for patrons' use to keep check on their laughs during the picture. In addition guest tickets were offered in connection with weight scale at five and ten, the ducats going to those receiving weight cards bearing photo of any of the Marx Brothers.

Edelstein Holds Search For Local "Kitty Foyle"

Special contest was arranged by Michael Edelstein at the RKO Tilyou, in Coney Island, to find a local "Kitty Foyle." Out of all the contestants, five were picked to appear on the stage, three of which were awarded cash and merchandise prizes awarded by cooperating merchants. One sheets were placed in store windows and special setpiece used for lobby announcing the giveaway of picture versions of the book in connection with a lucky number stunt. Heralds were distributed throughout the territory, Rogers dairy planted in lobby and cashier was dressed as "Kitty Foyle" ahead and during run.

Ahead of "Tall, Dark and Handsome" theatre doorman was dressed in full dress suit with chest banner heralding opening, a six-sheet float was stationed at busy intersection with "now showing" snipe across top and heralds were planted here, too.

Members Report "Penny Serenade"

To make folks in Fulton, Ky., "Penny Serenade" conscious, Malco City Manager Harold H. Thomas for that date at the Fulton promoted a novel window display with title spelled out in new shiny pennies, as were playdates. Bags of pennies were placed on floor of window and guessing contest was brought in through fish bowl filled with coins, tickets going to those coming closest to guessing correct number.

Highlight of campaign was offer of local bank and theatre to present a ten dollar bank account to first baby born during the engagement, front page newspaper story announced the gift and also one stating the winning of the account. Another contest featured by Thomas was used in connection with award of guest tickets to those presenting oldest dated pennies, this also good for readers in paper. Ahead of run shiny pennies were place in imprinted envelopes and handed out with change received at boxoffice when purchasing tickets. Promoting use of an RCA radio and victrola, Round Tabler planted attractive girl in lobby 15 minutes ahead of each show, playing hit tunes.

While up in North Adams, Mass., Manager Francis J. Faille at the Paramount, stationed usher in front of theatre behind desk on which were placed a number of pennies face down. Guest tickets went here too to those calling date on the coins.

Round Tablers Feature Contests

Contest which was started 10 days ahead at Warner's Hippodrome, in Cleveland and arranged by Dave Bachner of the ad department consisted of tieup with Adams Hat store whereby headgear was filled with pennies, closest guesser being awarded a hat, runnersup receiving tickets. Special cards with copy: "A record romance, ask to hear the latest recording of 'Penny Serenade'" were distributed to all music stores and placed in packages leaving music shops.

And in Boston we find publicist Joe DiPesa for the date at Loew's State and Orpheum landing generous newspaper breaks with stories and art featuring Irene Dunne and Carey Grant. Columnists also devoted space to advance plugs for the picture and the series of star endorsed ads were run in dailies.

Takes Movies of Kids at "Death Valley" Opening

To launch his "Riders of Death Valley Club" at the RKO Temple, in Rochester, Round Tabler Lou Mayer announced via newspaper readers that movies would be taken of kids attending opening chapter. Further insuring later attendance and also making a play for the adults, pictures were shown during the entire following week with parents and kids flocking in to catch the reel.

Membership pins and cards were distributed at first show, with offer to kids attending all 14 chapters being admitted as guests of the management at the last. Serial was played up in regular newspaper ads and readers and souvenirs given to each child.

MARTIN QUIGLEY, Editor-in-Chief and Publisher

Vol. 143, No. 11 — June 14, 1941

Whose America? Whose Screen?

FOR a while now not so much has been heard from the Hollywood-of-the-Left. That contingent went into a publicity diminuendo almost immediately upon the announcement of the Nazi-Stalin pact. But across the last weekend, with the meeting of the Fourth American Writers Congress, held in New York, with much flourish of motion picture writers' names, came cheers for Stalin and the Russian idea, jeers and hisses for Roosevelt and America. For details, names, see the news pages of this issue.

Because of the few persons concerned, and despite the literary and screen status of some of them, this expression is of little import, save that it is another contribution, of a sort, to the repute and public standing of the institution of the motion picture.

It is, especially at times, unfortunate, but the public mind and judgment does not discriminate between individuals, corporations and separate policies within the world of the screen. It is all just "the movies".

All of the individuals concerned, and the American Writers Congress, are within their rights entertaining and expressing any opinions they may hold. It is not, however, practical to make clear to all the customers, of box office and book and printed page, that those American writers are not all of the American writers, nor that the picture writers concerned are not all the picture writers, nor perhaps, either in numbers or weight, anything resembling an important proportion. The organization name is sweepingly inclusive.

It is also erroneously inclusive. It represents just another pressure group, a label for exaggerated minorities, laden with woof-woof.

Speaking of writers, when the First American Writers Congress was held in 1935, Mr. Ernest Hemingway was in prominent attendance. This year, despite the fact that he seemed to be about, as indicated by a four-page disquisition in that eccentric journal called PM, he has not been reported in attendance at the Fourth Congress. Maybe that was an accident, or oversight. Maybe not.

IN terms of practicality, it must be observed that, like it or not, the United States is in the war. This very day an American ship has been reported sunk, and at press time hope was abandoned for the possible survival of Mr. Ben Cohen of the Loew theatre organization, who had sailed for a post in South Africa. No matter how many of us may feel about war in the abstract, we are confronted by "conditions, not a theory". It is not given to us to decide in this world whether there is to be war or not. Civilized people are commonly opposed to rape, murder and arson, too, but they have to be dealt with from time to time. No writers' congress, and no array of resolutions, can do much about it.

None of this pertains importantly to what people go to the theatre to buy. But, to say it again, the Fourth Writers Congress is making its social and political position and views a part of the contemporary news of the motion picture. It is no help.

The quality of protest and objection, voiced by the Writers, against the content, tenor and policies, if any, of the screen's offerings, might be taken as decidedly undemocratic. There have been, and ever will continue, the most indisputable evidences that the great public which buys admissions at the box office, the majority of Americans, seek entertainment at the theatre as definitely as they look for food at a restaurant.

If they want a diet they go to a doctor.

If they want advice and something to worry about they will not be going to the theatre for it.

If they want to know what these, or any other, American writers have to say they will rent a book.

These observations will probably raise again a time-worn line of plaint against Motion Picture Herald's policy declaration in behalf of the box office, summarized in the phrase "entertainment only".

But that policy, so often and vigorously urged for the screen, is the box-office customer's policy, too.

THIS week's issue gives attention to a statistical examination of the state of the motion picture theatre—which, despite all "slump" talk, seems to be doing rather better, nationally, than the press that it has been getting would indicate. In that connection, in a discussion of the figures upon which the Herald's box-office graph is based, one of the industry's ablest statisticians observes:

"The most outstanding situation in the amusement industry is the relative failure of pictures with serious themes as compared with the results obtained with the same stars in productions of the same quality, devoted to so-called 'escape' or pure fun and entertainment. The relative failure of the public to respond to some of these well-made pictures of serious theme probably has caused some exhibitors to feel business was off, as much as anything else."

The Writers Congress has had its say and passed resolutions, in convention assembled.

The public never passes resolutions, but it has its say at the box office.

YOUR editor defers to no man in admiration of the flowers of the art of nature-faking. At the moment the medal for the year, maybe for the decade, goes to that anonymous correspondent of the Associated Press covering Madisonville, Texas, and reporting that the other day Mr. Al Connor's best hound got lost because he discovered fox tracks impressed in the cement of a thirty year old sidewalk and took off in full voice. Mr. H. G. Wells, author of the "Time Machine" could do a handsome job about the foxhound who left today and earthed his quarry in a hole of so old a yesterday. That's retroactive, completely.

This Week in the News

Three Years for Decree

DEPARTMENT of Justice officials Wednesday denied statements attributed to Albert J. Law, former assistant attorney general, before the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners (see page 4) that Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general, expected the consent decree to be in effect for only one year. On the contrary, it was declared, the Department and Mr. Arnold are hopeful and confident that the decree will work out satisfactorily for the prescribed three years.

In other quarters it was learned that the situation has been somewhat disturbed by the Minnesota law but that the consenting companies were prepared to contest the constitutionality of the act. Department officials were confident that the measure would fall in a court test, thus giving the decree an added measure of stability.

Mr. Law in his formal statement to the PCCITO, as reported on page 14, said that from his talk with Mr. Arnold he had understood that the decree would run the full course of its three-year trial period. He urged exhibitors to build up a background of usage with which to seek decree changes at the expiration of the trial period.

Newsreel Defalcation

JUNE 23rd has been set for sentencing of Max Hyams, former Twentieth Century-Fox Movietone News comptroller, who last week was convicted in New York General Sessions Court of misappropriating $35,000 in 1939 from the newsreel's funds.

The conviction was on 22 counts of grand larceny, one of forgery. Though the counts are for 1939, Mr. Hyams admitted taking $141,000 for five years ended in December, 1939, when he was arrested. There were 72 counts in the indictment.

Guild Hits Layoff

PERIODIC layoffs of the majors' field exploitation workers, heretofore unchallenged by any organized group of labor, on Tuesday were challenged by advertising and publicity workers acting as members of the Screen Publicists Guild, which seeks a closed shop in all majors' New York offices.

United Artists members of the Guild said, in a resolution approved by the Guild's executive council, that they did not accept their company's reasons for recent dismissal of 14 exploitation men. The company had said the small quantity of product made maintenance of the positions unnecessary.

The resolution was to be acted upon by the Guild general membership meeting in New York's Hotel Piccadilly Thursday night.

Joseph Gould, president of the Guild, is a UA pressbook writer.

The 14 men dismissed comprised the company's entire field staff.

Pasternak to M-G-M

CLEARING somewhat this week was the fog which had surrounded the future actions of Joe Pasternak, and shrouded, as well, the reason or reasons behind his rift with Universal, causing a split described as "amicable" by all parties to the action.

Mr. Pasternak, connected with Universal for 16 years, and producer of that company's Deanna Durbin pictures, among others, will remain on the lot until completion of the latest Durbin film, "Almost an Angel." After that, according to the grapevine extending from Universal City south to Hollywood's Vine Street and west to Beverly Hills, he will be reporting to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, perhaps accompanied by director Henry Koster, who has been working with Pasternak-produced pictures in Hollywood and assorted European capitals these many years.

The main reason behind the Pasternak-Universal break-up is thought to be his desire for more autonomy in his operations, and Universal's feeling that it could not grant a completely free hand without resorting to unit production.

No Product Shortage

FOUR distributors are selling pictures now in Minnesota without stint, and other majors are in "certain deals," Northwest Allied, instigators of the new Minnesota law banning selling-in-blocks-of-five (consent decree method), asserts, in answering reports that exhibitors of their state will face a product shortage if the law remains effective.

Meanwhile, an application was awaited in Minneapolis Federal Court for a restraining order against the law from the five majors in the decree, counsel for which have spent several weeks in New York home offices and in conferences with sales executives, preparing documents. The restraining order would pave the way for a test of the state law's constitutionality.

The four companies said to be doing "normal business" in Minneapolis are Republic, Universal, Columbia and Monogram, non-signers of the decree. Northwest officials also asserted that RKO, Warners and United Artists were circulating "Fantasia", "Meet John Doe", "The Great Dictator" and "That Hamilton Woman".

The Allied unit replied to charges that exhibitors disapproved the law by noting that "at two district meetings in Chatfield and Morris, Minn., at which 57 members and officers were present, both meetings went on record as backing and supporting passage of the act."

Visit Hays

WILL HAYS, president of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., was at week-end nearing the conclusion of his rest cure at St. Luke's Hospital in Chicago, expecting to depart for his home in Sullivan, Indiana, for a short sojourn. then to come to New York for a period before returning to Hollywood and its assorted problems.

Joseph I. Breen of the Production Code Administration, newly under contract to go to RKO studios in charge of production, eastbound for New York conferences, and Francis S. Harmon, executive assistant to Mr. Hays and coordinator for the motion picture industry's defense organization, westbound to Hollywood to make a convention speech, crossed paths in Chicago, both pausing for bedside interviews with Mr. Hays.

Mr. Breen was this week in New York meeting and greeting at the RKO pre-convention gatherings. The official date of his transfer from Code to Production has not been announced, perhaps not set.

The considerably discussed possibilities of the appointment of John Costello, California congressman, to a post in the Production Code Administration reached publication in the West Coast press this week.

Congressman Costello, in Hollywood, Wednesday, was invited to address the MPTOA convention of exhibitors.

Product in Color

SOMETHING of a challenge for leadership in the use of Technicolor is being made by Twentieth Century-Fox studio, which will offer five features in that medium during the first half of the new season. Until now, according to the studio, the company has been tied with Paramount at six Technicolor features, each, in a single year. The five are to be "Belle Starr," "Weekend in Havana," "My Gal Sal," "Sioux City" and "Rise and Shine." In the can, awaiting release and not included in the challenge, is "Moon Over Miami."

Priorities & Sound

THE ever-widening sweep of the Government's priority demands for materials essential to national defense extended to theatre projection booths on Monday when the Office of Production Management at Washington placed all motion picture projection equipment on the critical priorities list. Over 300 articles are now so listed. Henceforth all orders from the Army and Navy for film equipment receive precedence over commercial purchases. Lenses, nickle, aluminum, magnesium, steel and many of the raw materials requisite for motion picture, as well as war machinery are already on the Government's reserved list. Sound equipment is included in the order. At Hollywood the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' sound committee, through John O. Aalberg, chairman, and head of sound at RKO, advised that there was no possibility of introducing "three-dimensional" sound into theatres until after the end of the war emergency.

The three dimensional sound of "Fantasia", reduced to a single sound track for standard projector-reproduction, is now being presented in various engagements, notably at the National Theatre in Washington, D. C., where the run is in its fifth week.

Mrs. FDR Backs 'Doug'

A DEFENSE of Douglas Fairbanks' mission to South America has been taken up by the First Lady in answer to criticisms made Sunday by Miss Giselle Shaw, of Buenos Aires, visiting the U. S. Mr. Fairbanks was appointed 'special emissary' to South America by President Roosevelt.

Replying to Miss Shaw's charges that Mr. Fairbank's appointment "is not looked upon with much favor by the South Americans," Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, in her daily Scripps-Howard newspaper column, declared Tuesday, "Miss Shaw must have been under a misapprehension, for Mr. Fairbanks went only as an ambassador of good will to study the particular subject of the movie as its affects our relationship with our South American neighbors."

Miss Shaw, speaking before the Eastern Regional Conference of the National Women's Party in Atlantic City last Sunday, declared, "It would have been so much more of a compliment to us if a scientist, an educator or a jurist had been named to the post." Whereupon, Mrs. Roosevelt replied, in her column, that Miss Shaw "perhaps does not quite know the scope of the program being carried out under the Department of State and Mr. Nelson Rockefeller."

Mrs. Roosevelt believes that Mr. Fairbanks, who was appointed by the President to further good will and cultural relations between the American republics, "is extremely well fitted to make this study, and, on returning, to put his findings before his own industry."

Australia Releases $ $

WITH their allowance 28 per cent less than last year, the eight American major film companies this week learned that definite allocations of $2,300,000 will be allowed to be withdrawn from Australia this year. Last year they withdrew $3,200,000.

This week also, the companies reported receiving their first remittances this year.

After decreasing the allocations Australia informed each company, privately, of its prorated share in the cut.

GWTW Taxes High

CHICAGO subsequent run exhibitors contemplating playing MGM's "Gone With the Wind" find a little regarded facet of their city's licensing ordinance will interfere considerably with their profits, under the current MGM "return engagement policy" for that picture, of 50 per cent of the gross at a 50 cent admission price.

The exhibitors find they have to pay city fees of from $7.50 to $33 additional daily, at the 50 cent price, depending on seating capacities. Some examples, under the ordinance: a theatre of 750 seats or less, charging a 25 cent maximum pays $275 yearly and the same house with a 50 cent admission pays $15.75 additionally, daily. A theatre of 1,500 seats, with a 40 cent admission, and now paying a yearly license of $850, would, with the 50 cent admission, pay an additional daily cost of $1.50. A majority of Chicago owners are now charging less than 40 cents admission, and would feel the added burden consequent upon an increased admission.

Stitches in Time

UNIQUE in Hollywood procedure are stitches in time being taken by RKO-Radio in connection with I. A. R. Wylie's novel for 1941. One-half of the as yet untitled work was received by the studio this week, the rest of it to follow when and as written. "Scripters at once started breaking it down," as the phrase goes, for screen purposes, and announced that it shaped up as a likely vehicle for Cary Grant. The studio has no commitments from Mr. Grant for a picture, but "he is available for a story he likes." The novel, purchased by the studio in advance of writing and upon the author's verbal description of the subject matter, will acquire a title upon publication. It is by way of taking stitches in time to the end that release of the picture may the more closely coincide with publication date that the studio is working on it in the order of its appearance, so to speak, from the pen of the novelist.

HOW'S BUSINESS?

Figures Show not Slump but Upturn

BECAUSE of many and emphatic expressions concerning box-office business conditions coming from several regions of the national market, Motion Picture Herald has sought access to the most authentic and nationally indicative figures that exist in the operating records of distribution and exhibition. Broadly, and taken in the large, the figures do not indicate a box-office slump. Quite to the contrary, they point to a bit of upturn for the first six months of 1941 as compared with the same period last year. The accompanying graph gives the findings.

This curve shows, up and down, the 1941 box-office records for both attendance and dollars paid in admissions in comparison with the figures for the same period of 1940. In other words, the 1940 record is taken as the flat one hundred per cent line. This gives comparison between the two years, week by week, but, of course, with 1940 a flat line, not recording seasonal and other fluctuations of the 1940 period.

Detailed regional figures and some conspicuous special situations, which are not reflected here, save as they are components of the averages that rule the course of the line, appear to have given rise to the slump reports, real enough for their special instances but not reflective of the over-all picture for the industry.

It is also to be recognized that many exhibitors will be feeling that business is "off" because there most certainly has not been box-office response to increased industrial payrolls. Such an increase did become apparent to exhibitors and distributors in both Canada and England at a much earlier period in war spendings.

In this graph and all related calculations it has been necessary to take into consideration the effects, and after-effects, of "Gone With the Wind". The influences of that production, so special and extraneous to the normal flow of normal product, taking its amazing totals at the box office, have had to be set to one side and excluded from the graph. Due to "Gone With the Wind" takings, it is clear enough that the total amount paid into all box offices has been less this year than last. But, being so utterly unique, this "Gone With the Wind" cannot be used in calculations and measures of normal box-office performance and conditions. Had "Gone With the Wind" figures been held in the graph, they would have thrown February and March figures for 1941 from 20 to 40 per cent behind those for the 1940 period.

It will be noted that, while the red line, or box-office dollars, was above the black, or attendance, line, the first of the year, there is now, notably since about May 10th, what the statisticians call "a slight residual down trend", even in the upturn of the first week in June. This means lower average prices per admission. It can be taken as perhaps due to changes in prices arising from the tax situation.

Another aspect of importance is that the Easter recovery from the annual Holy Week dip was less this year than usual, due to the late Easter running into weather conditions adverse for theatre operation.

In view of all conditions, the summation of the comparative figures as shown on the graph, with the extraneous factors removed, indicates that this year the attendance and gross, both, are better this year than last. Certainly there is no evidence in this array of box-office facts to support a widespread assertion of press and gossip that "they are staying away from the box office in droves". Nothing devastating has happened, either to the industry or its customers. T. R.

DEMANDS PRIORITY OF TRADE REVIEWS TO SERVE EXHIBITOR

by MARTIN QUIGLEY, JR.
In Hollywood

For the first time since the screen theatre began, Exhibition is officially declaring itself to Production and Distribution on public relations, and asserting Exhibition ownership of the product that Exhibition buys.

The practice of holding "press previews" for newspaper columnists, commentators and critics in advance of the time the exhibitor shows the pictures in his own locality was vigorously attacked as "one of the industry's most serious problems" by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in his annual report delivered Tuesday afternoon to the delegates assembled for the 21st annual convention of the MPTOA and the second of the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners, held jointly at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles.

Mr. Kuykendall put up to the distributors and producers full responsibility for taking action on his proposed solution of the situation which was said to have resulted in a "ruined market" for many pictures:

"First, that the trade press alone see and review new pictures in advance of actual release and at the trade showings under the consent decree, for the information and guidance of exhibitors and those within the business.

"Second, that no advance press reviews be provided or permitted in Hollywood in advance of the first public exhibition or opening of the picture anywhere in the country."

The editorial by Terry Ramsaye on "Press and Product," in the May 17th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, was quoted by Mr. Kuykendall to document his position in this matter.

Mr. Kuykendall commented on "the evils and unfairness of this system of arbitrarily prejudging and classifying motion picture productions for the general public, based on the personal opinion of the Hollywood reviewer, without the benefit of genuine audience reaction and before we have a chance to advertise and present the picture in any of our theatres as a new show should be presented to the public.

"There is no other commercial enterprise of comparable size and importance in the world today that would tolerate such prejudgment and arbitrary, unofficial grading of its product," Mr. Kuykendall continued.

"We do know," he added, "from our own experiences as exhibitors, that a columnist's or commentator's personal opinion, widely published and circulated, can offset any advertising we can do in the same newspaper. After the picture has been condemned and branded as no good before it is ready to open, there is not much value to any advertising we, or anybody else, can run on it."

The practice of the Hollywood "press previews" for the lay press isn't fair to the picture, to the exhibitor who has to show it, nor to the newspapers throughout the country which have their own capable photoplay critics and reviewers, who cannot review and appraise the picture until it has its public exhibition," the MPTOA head said. "The custom seems to get worse and to do more damage to our business as the years go by."

The problem will be made "even more acute and critical" under consent decree operations, it was pointed out.

"I believe, Mr. Kuykendall said, "the time has come for you here in Hollywood to recognize the distinction between the trade press, which reviews and describes pictures for the buyers or exhibitors, and the lay press—newspapers, columnists, commentators and magazines—who advise the public on what to see and what to stay away from." He further noted that the consent decree recognized the distinction and defined a trade publication as one devoted

Hollywood Convention Says—

Stop Hollywood previews for the lay press. They hurt business at the local box-office. The trade press alone should be permitted advance reviews on pictures to guide exhibitor buying, Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president warned production in behalf of the exhibitors.

The consent decree is law, make it work, don't damn it. Self discipline is the best defense against anti-motion picture legislation. A new nationwide promotion drive would aid industry business. Taxes, television, daylight, time, labor and conciliation are among exhibitor worries the MPTOA head keynoted.

Arbitration is the cheapest, best way to settle disputes, declared William F. Rodgers, MGM sales manager. "This is not a two-for-one-business," he added, attacking double bills, games and give-aways.

MGM starts trade shows in mid-July. The future may see a new percentage basis for film rentals. Exhibitors must fight box-office slumps, the Metro chief told delegates.

A central legal bureau will be formed to advise MPTOA members on arbitration. All officers and directors of MPTOA were reelected.

Television may lure back the "lost audience" of 30 million persons, Nathan Levinson, of Warners, thinks. Sports events are ace television program possibilities. They may make matinees popular again, said Mr. Levinson.

"Not now" is the television verdict of A. Charles Hayman and a MPTO of New York committee. Present costs and program lack make it still "impractical for theatre use at present" they said.

Hope and cheer were in Mary Pickford's welcoming address. "There is no box-office recession that will not yield to good product, intelligently exhibited."

Uncle Sam will not modify the consent decree until after the three-year trial is completed, Albert J. Law, PCCITO counsel predicted. He urged exhibitors to build up a background of decree machinery usage on which to seek future changes.

Sour notes for ASCAP are due from the West soon when the Coast Conference starts restraint of trade court action against the music men.

New battles await Hollywood lay press representatives as they draft Douglas Churchill (N. Y. Times) for another term as chairman.

USE ARBITRATION EXHIBITORS TOLD

primarily to news concerning the motion picture industry.

"It is time the producers in Hollywood and the distributors in New York faced this issue and did something about it. It is eating into our business at the theatres, more so every day. It kills our advertising and our efforts to present your product with showmanship and appeal."

Mr. Kuykendall said, "The job of reviewing and describing the picture should belong to the local newspaper in each locality, whose critic knows his community and is perfectly competent to judge the picture when it opens there."

In his introduction Mr. Kuykendall said the trade press, under consent decree operations, could and would be more helpful to the average exhibitor than ever, "being able, with the cooperation of the producer, to intelligently guide the exhibitors' buying and planning."

In London the Kinematograph Renters Society at a meeting Tuesday inaugurated a new policy of inviting the press to attend. Council meetings heretofore have been secret.

Indicative of the changed attitude at Tuesday's session was the gesture of five council members who sacrificed their own cups of tea so that reporters might have some.

On the subject of the consent decree, he said, "I must express the opinion that now that it is a law, we should devote our time to making it work and stop wasting time cussing it." The Minnesota law banning the decree blocks-of-five sales in that state he criticized as "a grievous mistake" and something which would undoubtedly bring "chaos and much trouble to exhibitors" in that territory.

As a stimulus to business "another national motion picture drive of coordinated national scope" was suggested by Mr. Kuykendall.

All officers of the MPTOA were re-elected at the annual meeting of the Board of Directors held late Monday evening. The post of general counsel, held by Frank C. Walker until he resigned upon being named Postmaster General was not filled. But Mr. Walker was renamed as one of the five vice-presidents. All members of the executive committee, the board of trustees and the board of directors were continued in office.

At the session of the California regional PCCITO convention Tuesday morning, a central legal bureau to be headed by Albert J. Law, general counsel, was authorized. Advice will be given members on the Consent Decree and especially on individual arbitration complaints. Decision to establish the bureau followed an open forum discussion.

Golden Urges Campaigns To Bring New Customers

Nathan D. Golden, motion picture consultant in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce at Washington, Tuesday afternoon told the delegates that vigorous and systematic measures must be taken by the motion picture industry to attract new customers. He advocated a three-point program: Intensified efforts to produce pictures of highest quality, aid and encouragement of school use of films and cooperation with all plans for showing entertainment motion pictures at army camps.

"The percentage of the producers' revenues from abroad has been cut from an estimated 40 to about 15 per cent," he reported; with American films no longer shown in about 20,500 theatres in Europe alone, not including the Soviet Union, he remarked.

Rodgers Attacks Duals, Giveaways

William R. Rodgers, general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, on Wednesday told the convention, "We, as an industry, are occupying a most uncomfortable position. Theatre receipts are below normal and the entire industry is alarmed at the facts.

"I am in firm conviction," Mr. Rodgers remarked, "That the type of showmanship that offers a gas range, five big prizes, and a second feature with "Men of Boys Town" for 25 cents, is not the type of showmanship that will ultimately be successful and bring back our patrons. I am firmly convinced that this is not a two-for-one, or triple feature business.

"Unquestionably there are elements in this industry that need correction, and on this question I heartily recommend the use of arbitration as the cheapest, speediest and most effective method to correct our difference within the industry," Mr. Rodgers also remarked.

Mr. Rodgers hinted at a sales plan which he said MGM planned for the new season "based on the premise that the gross receipts must be the barometer of what you pay as film rental." The plan, it was said, "applies the proper slide rule to each individual situation."

MGM will start its trade shows in July, Mr. Rodgers announced. "We propose to encourage your attendance at our trade shows," he added.

Short subjects, as before, will be offered in a year's supply at a time, but, he said, "You are not compelled to buy them, we know. You will not be pressed to lease them if your inclinations are otherwise."

A pledge to give the consent decree a fair trial was reaffirmed.

Television Hailed As New Stimulus

Colonel Nathan Levinson, Warner Brothers sound department head, reported to the convention on theatre television as a means of recapturing "the lost audience."

He cited the RCA Theatre television demonstration he had witnessed in New York a month earlier, and compared the skepticism currently extant toward television to the attitude which greeted the advent of talking pictures.

"We must face the fact that even if the drop in attendance is only 30,000,000 a week, that's about $350,000,000 a year in revenue lost," said the sound head in his report, adding, "Our problem would seem to be to bring them back or to attract new patrons." Noting the much greater newspaper space given sports than films, and noting also that newsreel coverage was bound to be late, he said that in theatre television all this could be different; the suspense factor would hold audience interest to the end.

Emphasizing the specific appeal television has for recording sports events, Col. Levinson said, "In theatre television, the suspense factor would hold audience interest to the end . . . pictures through the air, bringing patrons an event exactly as it is happening, before any one else knows the result—that enables theatre television to present a possible interesting box office potential."

In describing the television recording of a horse race at Belmont Park in New York, Col. Levinson said, "Frankly, what I saw was good, real good, I mean. . . . The thought came to me, gentlemen, that matinee business in the theatre particularly, might not only get back many of its old audience, but might possibly win many new patrons with horse racing, baseball and other sports.

A. Charles Hayman, president of the MPTO of New York, presented to the convention the report of the fact-finding committee on television which was headed by Max A. Cohen, president of New York Allied. The RCA demonstration of theatre television was reviewed and it was said, "It is our belief that while television is here, it is far from being practical for theatre use at the present time."

In conclusion the report said, "We believe theatre television will command only a minor place in exhibition operations as long as its present cost and dearth of major program material continues. In addition, there is the danger of opening our theatres to a medium already under government control and regulation. Such regulation could lead ultimately to the federal regulation of the exhibition business."

Mr. Hayman also read the report of the committee on Axis films, recounting efforts to bar the showing of those pictures "because they are propaganda films and consequently circulation of such product in our country is contrary and dangerous to our American institutions."

Giving a report for his organization, Mr. Hayman urged reduction in production costs, saying, "The time has come when the studios must inaugurate a drastic form of economy in their production schedule, and by this I do not mean cheap pictures. Producers, directors and studio executives must stop talking in millions of dollars when they lay out their production schedule."

Workings of the motion picture arbitration system and its relations to the individual exhibitor were the subject of the convention address of J. Noble Braden, executive secretary of the American Arbitration Association. Mr. Braden reviewed the history of the Association's appointment to administer the New York consent decree, and the establishment of 31 localized tribunals in chief exchange centers.

Drawing from the records of the 77 arbitration cases filed to date, Mr. Braden explained the operation of AAA tribunals. He reviewed in detail for the benefit of the exhibitors the procedure for filing arbitration complaints, the method of selecting arbitrators and the mechanics of motion picture arbitration hearings.

Y. Frank Freeman attacked double bills, calling them an evil which had caused stagnation of the business.

Mr. Wanger told the delegates, "We must rid our industry of the unfair type of gossip and unfair criticism driving people away from our theatres." He also attacked double bills and urged scientific study of the public's tastes, and experimentation with new types of pictures to bring new audiences to theatres.

Other speakers scheduled for MPTOA business sessions on Wednesday and Thursday afternoon included, J. F. T. O'Connor, U. S. Federal District Judge in Los Angeles; Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; George Stevens, president Screen Directors Guild; Dore Schary, Screen Writers Guild; Edward Arnold, president of the Screen Actor's Guild; Walter F. Wanger, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences; Louella O. Parsons; Spyros Skouras, president of National Theatres; Louis B. Angeles, Max A. Cohen, president of the New York Allied, an affiliate of MPTOA, recommended that the motion picture industry establish a public relations committee which, he said, if operated efficiently, "could do more to restore public confidence in the motion picture than any other medium we presently possess."

Decree and Product Discussed on Floor

The effects of the consent decree on exhibition, causes of and cures for decreased theatre attendance, and ever-important product were among the chief topics considered on the floor by about 500 exhibitors assembled for the convention.

Mary Pickford welcomed the delegates to both conventions. Robert H. Poole, executive secretary of the PCCITO, called the convention to order at 10:30 Monday morning and introduced Miss Pickford, who said, "Next to the free press the motion picture is the most effective means of unifying the country. Next to the church the motion picture is the greatest gathering place." She pointed out that pictures were "the greatest form of mass entertainment ever created" and concluded, "There is no box-office recession which will not yield to good product, intelligently exhibited."

Bob White, PCCITO trustee and representative of the Independent Theatre Owners of Oregon, chairman for the day, introduced Albert J. Law, general counsel for the Pacific exhibitor conference, who reported on his activities for the organization regarding the consent decree and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Reports on Decree, ASCAP

Mr. Law explained to the delegates that he had recently made a trip to Washington during which he urged Thurman W. Arnold, assistant U.S. attorney general in charge of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice, to modify the decree to permit buying in the old manner with a 20 per cent cancellation clause. Mr. Law quoted Mr. Arnold as saying that he "was very strongly opposed to any change in the decree," at least until the test period had elapsed.

"We can't say that the decree is no good, can't help us—if we haven't tried it," Mr. Law said, urging exhibitors to assist "in building up a record" so that material would be available for presentation to Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard, who signed the decree, if the matter comes up in the future for further consideration and possible modification. Exhibitors were asked to send information about anything which they considered a violation of the decree to their local group for forwarding to the PCCITO and thence to the Department of Justice.

Mr. Arnold was also said to have remarked, "Undoubtedly many situations which will arise are not covered by the decree, and the Sherman Anti-trust law is still in effect to cover those situations." Exhibitors were instructed to send details of such happenings to their exhibitor organizations.

The supreme court, in its decision upholding the constitutionality of the Florida anti-ASCAP law, "practically adopted the position that the Society is an illegal combination acting in restraint of trade," Mr. Law remarked, announcing that the PCCITO was about ready to take legal action involving ASCAP. Exhibitor members were given until June 20th to send in details of their ASCAP licenses over a period of years.

L. O. Lukan, representative of the Independent Theatre Owners of Washington, Northern Idaho and Alaska—and a PCCITO trustee, spoke on "Why We Oppose Double Bills." He remarked that the topic was "a good subject last year but antiquated this year," adding that he believed that no long discussion was needed because every argument previously advanced against double bills still stands. He announced that he brought with him from Seattle a petition signed by every local exhibitor, independent and affiliated, with the exception of Fox West Coast, advocating single bills in that territory. A resolution attacking the double feature policy will be introduced, Mr. Lukan said.

Mr. Poole, the next speaker, delivered a general report on the PCCITO activities during the past year.

The part the PCCITO played in the consent decree negotiations and discussions was recounted. Mr. Poole explained that the Conference wrote to the Department of Justice explaining its position and outlining its 15-point program. The organization also communicated with Judge Goddard.

Warns On Overselling

Hugh Bruen, another PCCITO trustee and representative of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, was the final speaker on the first morning's program. "There is greater opportunity for an exhibitor to be oversold on a single picture or a small block than on a whole year's supply," he warned, urging the exhibitors to be sure that they do not pay too much for pictures under the consent decree system.

Monday afternoon exhibitors and guests toured the studios. Fred S. Meyer, of Universal, was in charge.

First business meeting of the MPTOA was convened Tuesday afternoon. Rotus Harvey, general chairman presided. Mr. Kuykendall delivered his annual report. The Reverend J. Whitcomb Brougher delivered the invocation. Morris Loewenstein, secretary, also reported to the convention.

Reports and forum discussion from MPTOA regional association were given by Charles H. Arrington of Rocky Mount, N. C.; R. R. Biechele, Kansas City, Mo.; E. M. Fay, Providence, R. I.; H. V. Harvey, San Francisco, Cal.; A. C. Hayman, Buffalo, N. Y.; J. M. Hone, Seattle, Wash.; O. C. Lam, Rome, Ga.; Arthur H. Lockwood, Boston, Mass.; Morris Loewenstein, Oklahoma City, Okla., Sidney B. Lust, Washington, D. C.; Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia; James C. Shankin, Ronceverte, W. Va.; Roy L. Walker, Lampasas, Tex.; Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis, Mo., and R. X. Williams, Jr., Oxford, Miss.

The third PCCITO session, Wednesday morning, was presided over by L. O. Lukan.

The second MPTOA business session was held Wednesday afternoon with speakers including production and distribution executives.

Jack Y. Berman, PCCITO trustee and representative of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona, was to preside at the third Pacific Coast Conference meeting Thursday morning at which resolutions submitted during the week were to receive final consideration.

The final MPTOA business meeting was to be held Thursday.

The convention banquet was held Thursday evening at Earl Carroll's restaurant theatre in Hollywood. Studio executives and stars were present.

Delegates and guests included at the MPTOA and PCCITO meetings representatives from practically every studio and distributing company in the business and circuit and independent exhibitors from practically every state.

Among organizations with booths at the convention were National Theatre, National Carbon, Wagner Sign Service, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Research Council of Academy of Motion Picture Arts, B. F. Shearer, Manley, Inc., Ideal Seating, Kroehler Manufacturing, Heinsbergen Decorating, and others.

Addressing the convention Wednesday, Louella Parsons, Hollywood columnist and hostess of the radio show "Hollywood Premiere," picked the ten most promising of the younger screen players, who, in her opinion, are potential stars, as follows: Joan Leslie, Warners; Katherine Grayson, MGM; Eddie Bracken, Paramount; Glenn Ford, Columbia; Sterling Hayden, Paramount; George Montgomery, Twentieth Century-Fox; Susan Hayward, Paramount; Jack Beutel, with Howard Hughes; Todd Karns, under contract to Leo McCarey and Anne Gwynne, of Universal.

Miss Parsons urged the studios to pay more attention to the boxoffice opinions of the nation's exhibitors.

Correspondents vs. Kuykendall

Convening at Hollywood's Brown Derby Tuesday noon to discuss previews and other interests which drew them together nine weeks ago, and into conflict with the studio directors' publicity committee, the correspondents' group headed by the New York Times' Douglas Churchill as chairman, listened politely to his plea for reduction to ranks and appointment of a successor. Mr. Churchill professed weariness of the prominence and responsibility thrust upon him by the chairmanship. The membership declined to demote him, praised his works and pressed him into continued service.

Tuesday afternoon, as reported elsewhere in this edition, President Edward J. Kuykendall of the MPTOA in convention at the Ambassador Hotel down Vine Street and left on Wilshire, gave the Brown Derby group a new problem with which to replace the one which had been, until settled a fortnight back, the keystone of their program.

It will be recalled that the correspondents were demanding a minimum of two weeks' clearance between release date of pictures and date of Hollywood preview. Mr. Kuykendall's recommendation to the convention, and in the name of MPTOA to producers and distributors, is to deprive the lay press of any and all preview privileges whatsoever.

The Churchill group did not attack that problem on Tuesday, however. It had not been born yet, by some half an hour. They did attack the problem, inherent in the studios's granting of two weeks' clearance on previews when practical, as to what a magazine writer with a 30 to 60-day deadline was to do about seeing a picture to write about for publication while it was still unseen by the potential reader.

The Kuykendall recommendation would take care of that problem too, doing away with it in toto. Mr. Kuykendall would eliminate magazine appraisals of pictures.

Upshot of the Brown Derby session was appointment of a committee to seek a meeting with the studio publicity directors' committee to confer on ways and means for magazine writers to see pictures early enough to suit their editors. If and when such a meeting is had, the committee will argue that a magazine piece about a picture seen is not a preview but a special article.

40% OF 1942 FILMS LISTED TO DATE; 64 FROM COLUMBIA; RKO'S SALES MEET

Programs Announced to Date All Show Increase; Goldwyn Tops in RKO Program; Para., Fox and Warners Push Plans

Columbia Pictures' annual program announcement, last weekend, of 64 features, raised to 282 the total features listed to date by distributors for 1941-42. This is 40 per cent of the pre-seasonal product announcement.

Here, in mid-June, only five of the 11 distributors have reported on feature product commitments—Columbia, 64; Monogram, 53; Producers Releasing, 42; Republic, 62; Universal, 61—a total of 282. By the first of June last year, some 394-to-406 pictures had been detailed by eight companies, with only Columbia and Warner announcements still to come at that date.

However, considering all the ramifications, influences and interruptions of delay, uncertainty, speculation and whatnot attending the large-sized "revolution" in sales policy, procedure and production growing out of the Government's imposed consent decree order which becomes effective on September 1st, the "state-of-the-nation," product-wise, appears, finally, to be showing signs of clarification from the viewpoint of what and how much exhibitors can expect for the new season.

Monogram, Republic and Producers Releasing, the three "non-majors," have already held sales conventions and made their product announcements; likewise, two of the "Little Three" majors—Columbia and Universal, with United Artists, third in this group, still to meet at some still unannounced date.

"Big Five" Conventions

The "Big Five" decree signatories, those which are committed to offering exhibitors' blocks of no more than five features, at advance trade screenings, start their conventions on Monday, when RKO Radio opens in New York. Twentieth Century-Fox is set for July 14-16. Warners will also probably meet in mid-July. MGM is down for late June or early July, Paramount is not set.

Significantly, or otherwise, the five non-decree signatories which have disclosed programs to date have all raised feature totals over last season: Columbia, by four; Monogram, three; Producers Releasing, four; Republic, four, and Universal, by two, a total promised increase of 17 from these first five companies reporting to date.

Turning to the business of deliveries to date on commitments made for the present season, an even more favorable situation exists in so far as a product flow is concerned. As the distributors turned the final quarter of 1940-41, last week, deliveries were running virtually on time table precision—three-quarters of all features promised last summer had been released (see comparative table on page 17).

Looking ahead into the distributors' summer schedules, for the balance of 1940-41 deliveries and for the first deliveries for 1941-42, the schedules of the distributors show 103 pictures set for release through the rest of June, July and August, Columbia reporting 15; MGM, 10; Monogram, 12; Paramount, 11; Republic, 13; RKO Radio, three at this writing; Twentieth Century-Fox, 7; United Artists, 6; Universal, 13; Warners, 13.

MILWAUKEE THEATRES HURT BY CARNIVALS

Milwaukee motion picture exhibitors will be faced with serious competition from the number of carnivals to be conducted by various veteran and civic organizations. To date 14 permits have been issued by the mayor's office despite Section 1316.5 of the city code, passed by the city council in 1922, which prohibits the granting of licenses for carnivals in the city.

Columbia's Convention And Product Lineup

Columbia Pictures will have 48 features for the 1941-42 season, and its executives and division and branch managers know 40 of them in specific detail, as the result of an outline given them by Abe Montague, the company's general sales manager—an outline which was a feature of the company's national executive sales meeting, which began Saturday at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, was to end Sunday evening, and later extended through Tuesday.

The meeting, itself unusual because it was the first of two Columbia conventions this year—this one being for home office sales executives, and division, and exchange managers, and the next being intended for all the company's sales personnel—was also notable for announcements of policy as well as product.

Those assembled were informed that, with the policy of "smart" comedies by the company so successful, much attention would be given them, in next season's program; that the sales staffs would receive greater autonomy, in line with the decentralization being practiced by the other companies, for operations under the Federal consent decree; that the company has a 1941-42 goal of an additional $10,000,000 in gross business; that pictures, as before, but increasingly, must be sold on individual merits, for everything in them; that exhibitors are assured, by the company's decentralized policy and its conviction pictures must be boosted for individual merit, of cooperation of personnel, from top to bottom. The company's officials also saw, as a surprise convention feature, more than 40,000 feet of film brought to Chicago by Harry Cohn, president, and representing the rough cuts of six "A" productions. This was the first time such a large number of films has been shown at one of Columbia's conventions, and represented the increased pace at the studios.

While the announcement of the 48 features, 40 of which were specifically described by Mr. Montague, was a feature of the convention eagerly awaited by the men who have to sell them, they were already cognizant the company in addition is to have, for its 1941-42 program, 16 western, four serials, and 140 short subjects. This had been announced previously.

The specific productions described at the meeting were the following:

A George Stevens production on the scale of his "Penny Serenade," to be decided later.

"You Belong to Me," a Wesley Ruggles production, co-starring Barbara Stanwyck and Henry Fonda, from the screenplay by Claude Binyon, based on a story by Dalton Trumbo.

A second Barbara Stanwyck production.

"My Sister Eileen," the Broadway comedy hit, to be produced by Max Gordon.

Two Gary Grant productions.

Two Jean Arthur productions.

"Pal Joey," the Broadway musical comedy success, to be produced by George Abbott.

Two Melvyn Douglas productions.

"Woman of Desire," a Gregory Ratoff production, starring Loretta Young, with Conrad Veidt, Eugenie Leontovitch and Otto Kruger.

A second Loretta Young production.

Two productions directed by Alexander Hall.

"Wild Is the River," based on the new Louis Bromfield novel.

"Gloria Is Willing," a Mitchell Leisen production, starring Marlene Dietrich.

"The Things They Do in Rio," co-starring Rita Hayworth, Brian Aherne, William Holden and Glenn Ford.

"Eadie Was a Lady," starring Rita Hayworth.

"Ladies in Retirement," the Broadway melodrama, produced by Lester Cowan and Gilbert Miller, directed by Charles Vidor, with Ida Lupino, Louis Hayward and Elsa Lanchester.

A second production to be directed by Charles Vidor.

"Every man for Himself," from the stage comedy by Milton Lazarus.

"Martin Eden," from the Jack London novel, with B. P. Schulberg as producer and Samuel Bronston as associate producer.

Two Joe E. Brown productions.

"Harvard, Here I Come," with "Slapsie" Maxie Rosenbloom.

"Honolulu Lu," with Lupe Velez.

"Two Girls from Argentina," comedy with music.

New "Toiler" Series

Two "Tillie the Toiler" productions, a new series based on the cartoon strip, with Kay Harris, William Tracy, Ernest Truex, Daphne Pollard and Franklin Panghorn. Sidney Salkow will direct and Robert Sparks produce.

Three "Blondie" productions, with Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake and Larry Simms, produced by Robert Sparks, and based on the cartoon strip.

"Harmon of Michigan," starring Tom Harmon, with Anita Louise, in a football story.

Two "Boston Blackie" productions, featuring Chester Morris in Jack Boyle's mystery stories.

Two "Lone Wolf" productions, starring Warren Williams in Louis Joseph Vance's adventure stories.

"The Boogie Man Will Get You," co-starring Boris Karloff and Peter Lorre in a comedy-horror story by Robert Andrews.

A series of "Ellery Queen" productions, with Ralph Bellamy, Margaret Lindsay, Charles Grapewin and James Burke, with Larry Darmour as producer.

The balance of the company's feature productions will be based on story properties either on hand or to be acquired as the season progresses.

The Columbia Westerns will be in two series of eight each, with Charles Starrett and Russell Hayden co-starred in one series and Bill Elliott and Tex Ritter in the other. In addition, there will be four serials, "Holt of the Secret Service," with Jack Holt; "Captain Midnight," "Pirate Gold" and "Perils of the Royal Mounted."

Harry Cohn, who flew in Saturday from the Coast with the six productions screened that night, returned to Hollywood by plane following the showing. He was accompanied by Alexander Hall, star Columbia director, who was present at the sales meeting.

Following the early morning session, Sunday, Jack Cohn, Columbia, vice-president, returned by plane to New York, accompanied by Nat Cohn, New York division manager, Irving Wormser and Saul Trauner, New York branch managers, and Jerome Safron, Western division manager.

Individual meetings were held Monday with members of the Southern, Mid-East and Western Division. Delegates who left Chicago during the day following these sessions were:

Southern Division Manager Sam Moscow of Atlanta, Branch Managers R. J. Ingram of Atlanta; Joseph Gins of Charlotte, N. C.; J. B. Underwood of Dallas; J. J. Rogers of Memphis; G. A. Gibbs of Oklahoma City; and H. Duvall of New Orleans.

Mid-East Division Manager Sam Galanty of Washington; Branch Managers A. S. Moritz of Cincinnati, Ohio; L. Zukor of Cleveland; A. J. Levy of Pittsburgh.

Western Division: Branch Managers R. C. Hill of Denver, Col.; W. G. Ball of Los Angeles; J. R. Beale of Portland, Ore.; W. G. Seib of Salt Lake City; L. E. Tillman of San Francisco; L. N. Walton of Seattle.

Also Branch Managers Joe Miller of Albany, I. H. Rogovin of Boston, Phil Fox of Buffalo, R. F. O'Toole of New Haven and H. E. Weiner of Philadelphia.

Tuesday's individual meetings were to be held with the Midwestern and Central District, with the following in attendance: Midwestern Division Manager Phil Dunas of Chicago; Branch Managers M. H. Evidon, Des Moines; O. J. Ruby of Milwaukee; H. J. Chapman of Minneapolis, and J. H. Jacobs of Omaha. Central Division Manager Carl Shalit of Detroit; Branch Managers W. Guy Craig of Indianapolis, B. C. Marcus of Kansas City, C. D. Hill of St. Louis.

Immediately after the Tuesday sessions were completed, home office executives headed by A. Montague, left for New York. Returning to New York were: Rube Jackter, Lou Astor, Lou Weinberg, M. J. Weisfeldt, David A. Lipton, Hank Kaufman, Bernard Zeeman, Maurice Grad, George Josephs, Seth Raisler, Vincent Borelli and Joseph Freiberg.

Also leaving Chicago on Tuesday were delegates from Midwestern and Central divisions mentioned above.

Columbia's Selling Plans

The message that the salesmen and exchangemen generally will receive the greatest autonomy in the company's history, for operations under the consent decree, and to assure the best marketing of the quality pictures, was conveyed to the convention by Mr. Montague, who at the same time assailed "machine-like operation" and remarked that "the show business has been built on the diversified approach in the dating, and individualized publicizing of pictures."

He added: "It is important that each Columbia salesman not only sell his company's product, but also become its propagandist in the full sense of the word" and said, of the current selling situation—"we have eliminated all stalling for action asked by exhibitors, and there is no need for a consent decree, so far as we are concerned. The operation of our system has created, and proved to be, its own decree."

Mr. Montague asserted each branch office now is an individual unit, as if the branch manager were operating a state-rights exchange; and the issuing of a weekly audit shows just how the branch stands in cost of operation.

Covering comedy, drama, music and epic themes, the pictures screened by Harry Cohn were "Our Wife," produced and directed by John M. Stahl, starring Melvyn Douglas, Ruth Hussey and Ellen Drew; "Heaven Can Wait," starring Robert Montgomery and directed by Alexander Hall; the Fred Astaire-Rita Hayworth musical "You'll Never Get Rich," with Cole Porter music; "Woman of Desire," starring Loretta Young and produced and directed by Gregory Ratoff; the epic "Texas," co-starring William Holden, Glenn Ford and Claire Trevor under George Marshall's direction; and "Ladies in Retirement," co-starring Ida Lupino and Louis Hayward, directed by Charles Vidor and produced by Lester Cowan and Gilbert Miller.

Printed Word Most Potent Factor In Attracting Customers: Warners

Newspaper ads and reviews are the two most potent exploitation factors in attracting movie patrons to the box office, it is shown in a poll of customers conducted this week by Warner Brothers and its New York Strand theatre.

From approximately 2,300 customers queried in the Strand lobby and in waiting lines outside the theatre following the opening of "Million Dollar Baby", these facts were obtained:

Patrons who had read the newspaper ads	67%
Patrons who had read the newspaper reviews	41%
Regular patrons who saw advance trailers	19%
Patrons attracted by theatre front display	11%

"Million Dollar Baby" was selected for the survey because of the well-rounded campaign it was given, including special radio promotion. Despite the unusually strong radio exploitation, however, the percentage of patrons who credited their attendance to this source was comparatively small.

Three different groups of customers were interrogated: waiting lines before the box office opened in the morning, the afternoon trade and the night crowd.

In the morning waiting line there were a few who mentioned that their interest had been aroused initially through fan magazines. The night attendance showed a big majority responding to newspaper ads and reviews. Afternoon patronage was mixed, but still strongly on the newspaper side.

Queried on the influence of reviews, many of the patrons said that, while a critic's opinion carried some weight, it did not necessarily make them go to see a picture or stay away from it, but that their action was determined in a large measure by information about the nature of the picture, story, cast, etc. Frequently, the ads gave more specific information of this kind than the reviews, some of the patrons declared, and they urged bigger advertising space after the opening of a picture as well as before.

Prominent names in the cast were admitted to have a good deal of drawing power, but here again it was pointed out that the casts of screen atractions seldom were exploited to their fullest extent—and in many cases it was again up to the newspaper ads to do the job.

A special train has been chartered from the New York Central Railroad to leave Chicago on Saturday, June 14th, with delegates from the mid-west, far west and southwest. About one hundred representatives, many of them to be picked up at exchange cities along the route, will be aboard when the special pulls into New York Sunday morning.

The special will carry staffs from Chicago, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Des Moines, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, St. Louis, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Seattle and Sioux Falls.

Prior to the opening of the convention the company announced preparations for its 1941-42 production program, involving expenditures for plant expansion totaling over a quarter of a million dollars during the fiscal year just ended.

Enlargement of stage facilities, general remodeling and equipment installations at the Gower Street and RKO Pathe studios on the coast accounted for the huge outlay.

After two years of idleness stemming from legal technicalities of his recent change in releasing arrangements from United Artists to RKO, Samuel Goldwyn now has his studios working at full tilt on the productions he will deliver next season and which will be announced at the company convention.

First of the Goldwyn units for RKO will "The Little Foxes," from Lillian Hellman's stage play. It is reported to be well into production with Bette Davis in the starring role supported by Herbert Marshall, Richard Carlson and Teresa Wright. William Wyler is directing and the picture is scheduled for late August release.

Upon the completion of "The Little Foxes," Mr. Goldwyn will commence production on a Gary Cooper starring vehicle, as yet untitled. It will be a light-hearted comedy based on the story of a professor and a strip tease artist.

On Tuesday, Mr. Goldwyn announced his third picture for RKO release. It will be the recently purchased "The Singing and the Gold," with Gary Cooper also in the starring role and William Wyler directing.

Edgar Bergen, one of the stars of RKO's "Look Who's Laughing," will plane from Hollywood to Evanston, Ill., on Friday, to receive an honorary master of arts degree from Northwestern University.

In "Look Who's Laughing" Edgar Bergen shares top honors with Charlie McCarthy, Fibber McGee and Molly and Lucille Ball. It is reported that this will be one of the outstanding pictures to be produced in 1941-42 by RKO, and will be the subject of a special announcement at the convention. Allan Dwan will produce and direct it.

Fox Delays Convention To Miss Holiday Jam

Twentieth Century-Fox has postponed its annual sales meeting, originally set for the Waldorf Astoria at New York on July 9th to 11th until July 16th to 18th in Los Angeles. Herman Wobber, distribution manager, announced the change in dates after railroad officials informed Irving Lincer, Fox transport manager, that the movement of troops on furlough or maneuvers, and July 4th vacation travel would make it difficult to transport salesmen from the coast and other distant areas to the New York meeting.

According to Mr. Walker, Twentieth Century-Fox plans to transport salesmen and branch managers, to Los Angeles from the east, southwest and mid-west in special cars to attend the meeting. Railroad officials informed the company that the Government has notified the railroads that approximately 600,000 draftees will be on the move between July 1st and 10th en route to maneuvers or on furlough.

Republic, Fox in Deals for Product

J. R. Grainger, president of Republic Pictures Corp., this week reported three additional deals for 1941-42 product with New England and Florida circuits. The Interstate Theatre Circuit of New England, operating 35 theatres in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut, have purchased the entire season's program from Republic. Edward Ansin and Harold Stoneman signed for the pictures with M. E. Storey, Republic's Boston manager, and Mr. Grainger.

The Maine and New Hampshire Theatre Circuit, operating 30 theatres in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, also signed this week for the entire 1941-42 Republic output. John J. Ford, general manager, and William Sullivan, chief buyer, signed for the circuit with Mr. Morey and Mr. Grainger.

In Florida the Sparks All-Florida Circuit, operating 100 theatres in Florida, purchased the Republic 1941-42 program through Frank Rogers, its general manager, at New York this week.

Herman Wobber, general distribution manager, and Spyros Skouras, head of National Theatres, will meet with chiefs of three affiliated circuits on a trip to the west next week to close bookings for the company's next year product. Meetings will be held with H. J. Fitzgerald, E. C. Rhoden and Rick Ricketson, heads of the Milwaukee, Kansas City and Denver circuit divisions. W. J. Kupper, western division head, will handle discussions with the West Coast divisions. Mr. Wobber will confer with production heads on the coast prior to the opening of the company's sales meeting on July 16th in Los Angeles.

ARBITRATION UPHOLDS DISTRIBUTOR'S RIGHT TO PROTECT OLD CUSTOMERS

Arbitrator in Baltimore Case Rules Clearance Properly Used to Protect Regular Accounts; Colorado Clearance Reduced

The right of distributors to protect with clearance older and better established neighborhood theatres against the competitive encroachments of new and even more modern houses was upheld this week under the decree in a decision by Sefton Darr, arbitrator of the third Washington arbitration complaint. In dismissing the clearance complaint of the Westway theatre, Baltimore, Mr. Darr ruled that the defendant distributors were within their rights in protecting with clearance the theatre which produces the largest revenue within a given competitive area.

The Washington decision was one of four arbitration rulings handed down during the week by the arbitrators of cases at Washington, Denver, Cincinnati and Portland, Ore.

Colorado Clearance Reduced

A second arbitration decision, on the threefold complaint of the Star theatre, Fort Lupton, Colo., delivered by arbitrator John Carroll, dismissed the theatre's "withholding prints" and "some run" action against the Big Five but reduced to three days the 21 day clearance margin held by a competitive theatre six miles away.

At Cincinnati the first case, a dual complaint by Willis H. Vance, Newport, Ky., operator asking some run and clearance for his State theatre in Newport and Ohio and Eden in Cincinnati was decided by Judge Stanley Matthews, arbitrator. The award granted a defense motion to dismiss the "some run" part of the complaint as falling under Section X of the decree inoperative until September 1st. Judge Matthews ruled also that the clearances granted by Paramount, Warner Brothers and 20th Century-Fox to the Hippodrome and Strand theatres at Newport.

Portland's first arbitration complaint was dismissed on Monday by Joseph K. Carson, Jr. less than two weeks after conclusion of hearings on the "some run" action filed by P. R. Henderson, operator of the Rialto theatre in Albany, Ore. Mr. Carson held that the evidence indicated there was no basis for Mr. Henderson's charge that MGM, Warner Brothers, RKO and 20th Century-Fox had refused to sell him pictures subsequent to national release date. During the hearings exchange managers testified that the complainant had been unable to agree with the distributors on rental prices. All costs were levied against the complainant.

Three settlements and the withdrawal of complaints were also reported during the week. Arbitration actions were ended by the agreement of all parties in Memphis, New York and Buffalo. Four new cases, all involving clearance, were added to arbitration dockets however. All were in areas which have already received cases.

The motion picture arbitration Appeals Board, at New York, on Monday received final briefs following the Department of Justice's intervention in the first appeal of an arbitration decision. (see MOTION PICTURE HERALD, June 7, page 25) At Cleveland a decision on the tribunal's first case was postponed by Dan B. Cull, arbitrator, until the Appeals Board makes its ruling. The Cleveland case involves an interpretation of the arbitrator's jurisdiction in clearance, as did the appealed Chicago Ken case.

Dismissing the complaint filed by Lee H. Homand, operator of the suburban Westway, in Baltimore, Mr. Darr, a Washington attorney, handed down a 1,200 word decision analyzing the competitive situation between the Westwood and the Durkee circuit's Edgewood, named in the complaint, and holding that the evidence showed that equal clearance had not in fact been promised the Westway, and that it was not entitled to earlier run through its equipment, locale, patronage, size or potential revenue.

The complaint filed on February 24th named Warner Brothers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and Twentieth Century-Fox alleging that they granted an "unreasonable, injurious and unjustifiable" 14 day clearance to the 1,150 seat Edgewood.

The Alpha and Irvington theatres, small neighborhood houses in the area sought to intervene as interested parties shortly after the case came to hearing on April 15th. The arbitrator denied the application for intervention following the objection of the complainant, and ruled that the only issue at arbitration was whether the Edgewood's clearance over the Westway was "unreasonable" within the definition of Section VIII of the consent decree.

Mr. Darr ruled that the facts presented in oral testimony and exhibits showed that while the Westway and Edgewood were both theatres of modern construction, well equipped and well appointed, the Edgewood was superior to the Westway in "cost, size and location."

All costs were assessed against the complainant.

In the Denver decision arbitrator John Carroll, former district attorney, ordered a decrease from 21 to three days in the clearance now enjoyed by the Rex theatre at Brighton, Colo., over the Star at Ft. Lupton, six miles distant. E. K. Menagh, owner of the Star, had also charged withholding of prints, but this

Text of Decision Upholding Right of Distributors to Protect Old Accounts

The first arbitration decision upholding the right of distributors to protect with clearance their revenue from established theatres against the encroachment of newer competitive houses was delivered at Washington on Monday. The full text of the findings of Sefton Darr, arbitrator, in the complaint of the Westway theatre, Baltimore, follows. It is the second arbitration award to be published in full:

"The arbirator considers that the only question here to be decided is whether, under the consent decree, the clearance applicable to the Westway Theatre is unreasonable, that is to say, whether the 14 day clearance which the Edgewood enjoys over the Westway is unreasonable as it affects the Westway Theatre and in accordance with the consent decree, Sec. VIII.

"Upon the oral evidence and the exhibits, and being guided by the provisions of the consent decree, and particularly Sec. VIII thereof, these findings of fact are made:

"1. For varying numbers of years prior to the opening of the Westway Theatre, each of the respondent producers and distributors granted the Edgewood first run after downtown Baltimore theatres. This was the situation when the Westway opened in April, 1939; that the clearance allowed the Edgewood over the Westway was designed merely to preserve the historical development of clearance in its effect upon the Edgewood.

"2. When the Westway first opened, and for sometime thereafter, it charged identical prices with the Edgewood; these prices were subsequently lowered by the Westway in an effort on the part of its management to meet competitive conditions in the neighborhood; that the Westway at the time of the admission price changes, was making no profit. and the change was made for no other purpose than to attempt to increase patronage and show a profit in the operation; that the changed admission prices continued in effect up to the time of the arbitration hearing.

"3. While the only theatres directly involved in this arbitration are the Edgewood and Westway, there are two other theatres in the competitive area, which by virtue of the Edgewood's clearance over the Westway, have resulting clearance over the Westway, and are indirectly involved; of all four theatres the Westway is the newest, being built in 1939; the Edgewood is the next newest, having been built in 1930; and the Alpha and the Irvington are comparatively much older theatres; the Edgewood is the largest, having a seating capacity of about 1,150 seats; in order following the other theatres have seating capacities of 700 in the Westway; 570 in the Alpha, and 580 in the Irvington; that both the Edgewood and Westway are theatres of modern construction, well appointed equipment and appointment; there is no substantial difference between the two other than cost, size and location, in all of which the Edgewood is superior to the Westway; the management of the Edgewood is in the hands of an organization which controls a large number of theatres in Baltimore, and devotes its entire attention to motion picture theatre operations; it has a house manager who devotes his entire time to the theatre; the manager of the Westway Theatre has other interests and does not devote his entire time to the operation of the theatre; the type of entertainment at the Edgewood is of the highest, and superior to that of the Westway; that transit facilities play little part in the business of either theatre, most of their patrons come in automobiles; that there is little, if any, difference between the two in parking facilities, although this phase of the problem was not stressed at the arbitration hearings.

"4. That the Edgewood theatre does not make use of any of the practices of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut rate tickets, lotteries, or other such inducements to patrons; the Westway has made a limited use of some patronage inducing practices other than ordinary advertising; that the finding of the count was dismissed. The case originally involved all five signers of the consent decree, but before the end of the hearings MGM arranged a settlement favorable to Mr. Menagh. Twentieth Century-Fox withdrew after Mr. Carroll dismissed all charges against them early in the hearing. Costs were divided equally among the complainant and the three remaining defendant companies by Mr. Carroll's decision.

Cleveland

Judge Cull's decision at Cleveland to postpone arbitration of that city first case, filed in March by Louis Israel, operator of the Ellet theatre, Akron, closely followed the government intervenor in the pending appeal of the Chicago Ken theatre case. The U. S. brief asserted that it was within the arbitrator's province to hold that any clearance could be unreasonable clearance. The Cleveland case, filed first as a some run request, then changed to clearance when it was held the complaint requested a specific run, is based on the same question as the Chicago appeal. Hearings were postponed originally from April 5th to June 17th. They will be deferred indefinitely until the Appeal decision is released.

New York

At New York, meanwhile attorneys for RKO, Paramount and 20th Century-Fox jointly, and the intervening Schoenstadt circuit filed short replies to the intervening government brief reiterating previous contentions that the arbitrator did not have jurisdiction in the Ken complaint. A ruling from the three members of the Appeals Board was expected shortly.

Washington

Washington meanwhile received its seventh arbitration complaint on Monday when the K-B Amusement Company, owned by Fred S. Kogod and Max Burka filed a clearance complaint for their Apex theatre against MGM and the Warner circuit.

The new complaint brought into the film picture again two men who were prominently connected with the consent decree proceedings as members of Thurman Arnold's staff—James V. Hayes and Robert Sher—who, as Hayes & Sher, filed the Apex complaint that it was subjected to unreasonable clearance by Loew's in having to run not less than seven days after the Calvert theatre and immediately after the Uptown Theatre which, with the Avalon Theatre, also named, are Warner houses.

The Apex is a new 1,047-seat house in a neighborhood section now undergoing great development. The Calvert is an older, smaller house in a more settled neighborhood in the same competitive area, while the Uptown is a recent and the Avalon a somewhat older house outside the immediate area.

San Francisco

San Francisco's second arbitration complaint was entered on Friday by A. C. Karsky, operator of the Laurel theatre in Oakland, Calif. Mr. Karsky asks a reduction of the 45- to 50 day clearances with which he alleges RKO, Warner Brothers and Twentieth Century-Fox favor competing bay area theatres. He names nine competing theatres; the Allendale, Hopkins, Foothill, Diamond, Capitol, Eastmont, Palace, Parkway and Tower. All are in Oakland.

New York

The fourteenth New York case, on clearance, as are all its predecessors, was entered this week against all five consenting distributors by the Cornwall Amusements Company, Inc., operator of the Storm King theatre at Cornwall-on-Hudson, New York. The complaint asks that the 30 day clearance now enjoyed by the competing Ritz and Broadway theatres at Newburgh, N. Y., be cut to seven days.

Philadelphia

Philadelphia's seventh complaint filed by Herman Bronstein, operator of the Hatboro theatre, in suburban Hatboro, Pa., is directed against Paramount, RKO and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Mr. Bronstein asks that he be permitted to follow immediately the Grove theatre, Willow Grove, Pa., which now enjoys a 7 day clearance over the Hatboro. The grove is operated by Stanley-Warner and the case is the fourth Philadelphia complaint attacking clearances enjoyed by the Warner circuit.

New York

The clearance complaint of the Majestic Theatre, Patterson, N. J., New York case No. 8, against all five consenting companies was settled by all parties and withdrawn before it reached the hearing scheduled for June 9th. The Majestic named the Brandt circuit's State and asked a reduction of the seven day clearance to day and date.

Buffalo

At Buffalo the fourth case, a clearance complaint by N. M. Konczakowski, operator of the Marlowe, naming all the "Big Five" and the Shea circuit Niagara was settled before hearings started on June 4th. The complaint asked clearance ahead of the Niagara for the older Marlowe. It was indicated that the Marlowe may file again under Section X in September.

Memphis

Memphis's first case, a "some run" demand filed against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by V. D. Guest, operator of the Camden at Camden, Arkansas, was withdrawn before it reached hearings. MGM was reported to have offered product on new terms to the Camden, starting on September 1st. For the current year MGM sold 16 features and 12 shorts to the Camden.

Boston

Hearings on the complaint of Lucien Descoteaux, Manchester, N. H., exhibitor who operates the Rex Theatre, were concluded last week before arbitrator Henry Channing in Boston. A decision is expected within the next few weeks.

Arbitration Ruling Upholds Clearance Right of Established Theatres

arbitrator in this respect has no material bearing upon the conclusions reached.

"5. The Edgewood has always produced for the respondent producers and distributors the largest income of any theatre in the competitive area, most of the films being rented on a percentage basis, i.e., a percentage of the box office receipts; that on the films rented by these respondents to the Westway their return has been substantially lower.

"6. The theatres in the fair competitive area in which the Westway is located are the Edgewood, the Alpha, the Irvington and the Astor; the Edgewood is located on Edmondson Avenue, close by to a thickly inhabited residential area; two miles west of the Edgewood is the Westway, on the same avenue at its intersection with Aldershot Road, near a residential neighborhood, which while not now so thickly populated as in the case of the Edgewood, is fast growing. The Alpha is located in Catonsville, about two miles west of the Westway. The Irvington is located on Frederick Road, about a mile from the Edgewood, with cemetery property intervening and preventing a direct route between the two. An almost direct route connects the Irvington and the Westway, the distance being about one and one-half miles. The Alpha and the Westway are connected by an almost direct route; the Astor is located east of the Edgewood, a little over one-half mile; a direct route connects them.

"Because of their proximity, the character of the neighborhoods surrounding them, the types of the theatres, the accessibility of each to contiguous neighborhoods of residences, the Westway offers the greatest competition to the Edgewood; the fact that it is a new and modern theatre, easily accessible to a large number of prospective patrons of the Edgewood, has sufficient transit and automobile routes and parking facilities, makes the Westway the Edgewood's most powerful competitor; the distributor and producer respondents, failing to give the Edgewood a reasonable clearance over the Westway, can be reasonably calculated to substantially injure the business, not only of the Edgewood, but of their own.

"Because of the geographical situation, as well as the character of the neighborhoods involved, the Irvington offers competition to all of the theatres in the area, but this competition is the least of any; the Alpha, for the same reasons, offers the next most active competition to the Edgewood's, while the Westway's most logical competitor, other than the Edgewood, is the Alpha. The Astor, now subject to a clearance of the Edgewood, offers the least competition to all the other theatres.

"7. That the producer distributor respondents did not promise to supply the Westway Theatre with films or 'product', prior to its being built, and the theatre was not built on such promises.

"8. That the Edgewood, built in 1930, at a large cost, much larger than that of any of the other theatres involved, was regarded as an outstanding neighborhood theatre, with fine appointments, modern equipment and good management; from the very beginning the owners demanded that the producers and distributors protect them by proper clearance over other theatres in the neighborhood which might offer injurious competition; large theatres are built for the purpose of attracting large numbers of patrons, and by reason thereof require large numbers in order to maintain a successful operation. Clearances and runs are recognized as a large part of the moving picture industry, first, because of the high costs of prints and the limited number available for that reason within a given area, and second, to bring about an even and protracted distribution of the films so that the entire public may have an opportunity to patronize the theatres at times and at prices convenient. In this case the Edgewood Theatre was and still is the outstanding theatre in the neighborhood. The evidence shows clearly that large revenues have been derived by the producer and distributor respondents from the Edgewood. To allow a much smaller theatre, although modern and up-to-date in every respect, to move into the area and not be subject to a clearance in favor of the larger and more modern theatre, could and probably would produce bad results, not only for the theatre, but for the producers and distributors.

"9. For the aforegoing reasons, and in consideration thereof, the arbitrator finds that the clearance of 14 days of the Edgewood Theatre over the Westway Theatre, granted to the Edgewood Theatre by the producer and distributor respondents herein, is reasonable."

Coast Variety Tent Organization Set

John H. Harris of Pittsburgh, national Chief Barker of Variety Clubs, during his visit to Los Angeles, will hold a meeting for the purpose of organizing a Los Angeles-Hollywood Variety Club, which, it is reported, may be headed by Walter Wanger.

On Monday, July 21st, Pittsburgh's Club will hold its annual Golf Tournament at the South Hills Country Club in Brentwood, it was announced by Chief Booker C. C. Kellenberg. Archie Fineman and Art Levy will be co-chairmen of the affair, and J. T. McGreevey will be chairman of the prize committee. Labor Day will mark the opening of the Pittsburgh's Tent sponsored football game, with the Detroit Lions meeting the Pittsburgh Steelers at Forbes Field. The Club's split of one-third of the gate will be used for charitable purposes. This is the first time that the Club has had a hand in a sports event promotion.

Rodney Collier, manager of the Stanley in Balitimore, is chairman of the Baltimore Variety Club's committee which is planning a golf tournament for July.

The dividend is payable June 30 to stockholders of record on June 20th. A similar dividend was voted in March. The reelected officers are: Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president and general manager; George F. Lewis, vice-president and secretary; L. G. Clark, treasurer; L. A. Skinner, assistant secretary.

Rivoli Appeals Assessment

Review of the New York City tax commission's assessments for the past 10 years on the Rivoli Theatre, that city, may come as the result of hearings on certiorari proceedings next Monday in New York Supreme Court, before Justice Charles McLaughlin. The theatre was assessed at $1,900,000 for the first two years of the disputed period; and at $1,650,000 annually, the remainder of the period.

Gomersall Named Universal's Western Sales Manager

Completing the executive revision of Universal's top sales staff, William A. Scully, vice-president and general sales manager, has appointed E. T. Gomersall, former Chicago district manager, to the post of western sales manager. The appointment was announced Monday from the New York home office. Succeeding Mr. Gomersall in his former post is M. M. Gottlieb, who has been Chicago branch manager for the company.

Mr. Gomersall replaces William J. Heineman, who was made assistant sales manager of Universal last week in the sales realignment which brought Fred Meyers into the company as eastern sales manager and made F. J. A. McCarthy southern and Canadian sales manager.

Los Angeles Censor Bill Discussed in Secrecy

The Los Angeles Police Commission and studio and church interests on Friday, June 6th, at a meeting behind locked doors, discussed a proposal of a majority of the commissioners for a drastic censor ordinance which would require the licensing of all film and stage theatres. Under the proposal, theatre licenses would be revoked immediately upon action by the city attorney of district attorney to close shows deemed to be salacious.

Some time ago when Councilman Norris J. Nelson introduced a licensing measure in the city council he proposed to exempt Production Code seal films from the commission's regulations, and last week he threatened to fight the new version of the proposed law in the council.

STALIN CHEERED, ROOSEVELT BOOED, WRITERS SEE 'CULTURAL EMERGENCY'

Hollywood Writers Urge Aid in Opposing Industry's "War Propaganda Film Program"; Stewart Presides at Session

The recently smouldering, silent, ardent Left of Hollywood gave voice again last week-end in attendance at the Fourth American Writers Congress held in New York. In a sequence of sessions, from secrecy at the Hotel Commodore to publicity at Manhattan Center—Oscar Hammerstein's old opera house—there were cheers for Stalin, boos for Roosevelt.

In that "executive session" from which the press was barred, held last Friday at the Commodore, Charles Page, executive secretary of the Hollywood chapter of the League of American Writers, especially urged "closer cooperation" between the Hollywood group and the New York chapter in opposing the motion picture industry's "war propaganda film program."

The writers declared "an unlimited cultural emergency" in paraphrase of the last fireside chat from the White House.

Warn Against "Censorship"

The theme which characterized the "business" meeting, at which Donald Ogden Stewart, president of the League, presided, was that American writers in the motion picture, newspaper, radio, magazine and other fields, should guard against impending censorship of the press, screen and radio, and that every effort should be made by the writers to tell "the facts about this war" to the American people.

During the entire proceedings of the three-day Congress, screen writers, novelists, radio writers and others were concerned with political and international problems.

At a mass meeting held at the Manhattan Center on Friday night, speeches marked with declarations of hatred against the "imperialist war," were made by Dashiell Hammett, Genevieve Taggard, Rockwell Kent, John Howard Lawson, Samuel Putnam, Richard Wright and Vito Marcantonio, the only representative of the people in Congress who voted against government appropriation for defense. During the course of the evening the delegates and audience joined in cheering the Soviet Union, when Richard Wright paid tribute to its leaders for their "living testimony to the profound hatred of war and sincere love of peace that resides in the hearts of the common people of the world."

When Samuel Putnam, in discussing the Office of the Coordinator of Commercial and Cultural Relations between the American Republics, asked the audience "say the name of Rockefeller" and then add "culture" in the same breath, the crowd booed the Rockefeller committee. Mr. Putnam urged that the important word "'commercial' comes first" and culture follows, in the name of the committee which is headed by Nelson Rockefeller.

At one point in the meeting when Earl Browder's name was mentioned, the delegates and audience applauded and cheered at great length.

Among the Hollywood writers who came on from the Coast to convene at the Commodore and were present at the mass meeting were: Mr. Stewart, Mr. Hammett, John Howard Lawson, Viola Brothers Shore, John Bright, Marion Spitzer, Charles Page, Michael Uris and Paul Strand.

At the Screen Writers' panel discussion held on Saturday night, papers written collectively by Hollywood screen writers who are members of the Coast branch of the League, were read. Mr. Uris read a paper, "The Screen Writers Have a Union," which dealt with the early history of the Guild and outlined the "political and economic" condition of Hollywood writers which called into existence a craft union. Another paper, "Motion Pictures and the War," read by Mr. Page, analyzed the use of the movies in developing a war spirit which has as its objective "the involvement of this country in the present conflict."

Paul Strand gave a talk on the "Independent Film and the Democratic Struggle" in which he discussed the "documentary film," naming such productions as "Heart of Spain," "Spanish Earth," "The Plough That Broke the Plains" and "The River" and called for greater development of this medium of expression to acquaint the American people with "the true conditions" of their country. At the end of the panel, which was presided over by Viola Brothers Shore, chairman, the members selected "The Great Dictator" as the "best recent picture" out of Hollywood.

Denies Communism

On the first day of the Congress, Mr. Stewart, when interviewed, was asked to describe the function of the League in the present emergency. He replied that the League was "united in the fight for peace, civil liberties, support of labor and suppression of Fascism, all of which, under the present threat of war is endangered in the name of 'democracy.'" Mr. Stewart decried the Communist label as tagged onto the League and said it was "put there by those who wish to destroy any progressive movement which aims to tell the people the truth about this war. It was done in the last war. Right now the best way to destroy anything is to say it is 'Communist dominated.' The same tactics are being used against the C.I.O."

Mr. Stewart, who went to Hollywood in 1931, was the author of the successful "Mr. and Mrs. Haddock Abroad" books, and of the Broadway play, "Rebound." He has been writing scripts for MGM since 1932, and collaborated on the films: "Smilin' Thru," "Dinner at Eight," "Another Language," "The White Sister," "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" "No More Ladies," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and more recently, "The Philadelphia Story."

Dashiell Hammett, author of the popular "Thin Man" series, was elected by the Congress to succeed Mr. Stewart as president of the League of American Writers.

Delegates voted "Native Son," written by Richard Wright, as "the most distinguished novel published since 1939."

To combat censorship, the Congress voted to establish a radio committee "for the purpose of furthering education and informative and entertainment programs of a progressive nature." A suggestion also was approved to establish a monthly magazine which would feature fiction, drama, poetry, criticism and folklore. In the discussion which followed this suggestion, it was recommended by Mr. Charles Page, delegate, that such a magazine should be "keynoted" for "trade union readership."

"Unlimited Cultural Emergency"

Declaring an "unlimited cultural emergency," pledging the Congress to "resist" any effort of "curbing or obstructing free expression of the true aspirations of the American people as manifested in the stream of our culture," constituted one of the resolutions passed by the delegates before the Congress closed. Another, "in Defense of Culture and Peace," condemned America's entry in the war on the grounds that "war is a blow to democratic culture," and argued identities existed between the "Anglo-American war makers and their German opponents."

In the "Resolution on the Rights of Labor," which pledged support to organized labor and condemned efforts to deport Harry Bridges, inclusion was to be made by the Resolutions Committee of the support expressed in the business meeting of the Congress for the strikers of the North American Aviation Company in Los Angeles.

A general resolution asking for "complete independence of Porto Rico" and for the restoration of the Spanish language culture in that country, opposed the Government's decision to make English the official language instead of Spanish. The State Department was condemned on three other points in this resolution; refusing visas to two Cuban writers, Juan Marinello and Nicolas Guillen, making it impossible for them to attend the Congress; refusing entry to this country to Constancia de la Mora who wanted to collect funds here in behalf of Spanish refugees; condemning the State Department's "general attitude" concerning the Spanish refugee question as "inconsistent with the pretenses of democracy of this Administration."

The Congress sent greetings to Chinese writers "who are in the forefront of the fight for democracy in China," to writers of the Soviet Union, and the antiwar writers of England, many of whom sent greetings to the Congress.

Other officers elected by the delegates included: Mr. Stewart, Meridel Le Sueur, George Seldes, Richard Wright and Albert Malz, vice presidents; and Franklin Folsom, national executive secretary.

Of the League's 750 writers, one-third are in Hollywood; the majority in New York and the East. About 450 members were present at the three-day session in New York.

EIGHT RESOLUTIONS IN "SECRET" SESSION

Eight resolutions passed by the Fourth Writers Congress were not released in complete form to the press.

Highlights of the resolutions were: Declaration of an "unlimited cultural emergency"; declaration that "war is a blow to democratic culture"; support of organzed labor and the American Peace Mobilization; condemnation of efforts to deport Harry Bridges; denunciation of Martin Dies, Senator Coudert and the government's action in jailing Earl Browder; condemnation of the State Department's "general attitude" toward the question of Spanish refugees; and maintenance and expansion of civil rights.

Warners Plan Bragin Dinner

Associates of Sol Bragin, head booker for Warner's in Cleveland, are planning to hold a farewell banquet in his honor, at the Hotel Allerton, before he leaves for a Pittsburgh post. Charles Albert, former manager of the Lake Theatre, will succeed Mr. Bragin.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Showmanship and politics can be mixed. Returned to the government of Miami Beach as city councilman, last week, was the motion picture's Mitchell Wolfson, who, with his partner, Sidney Meyer, operate 20 theatres in the Greater Miami district, and others in the Bahamas.

Mr. Wolfson ran for reelection, and, again, as in his last campaign, his own theatre press agent, Sonny Shepherd, put on a show which gave some of the townsfolk and visting firemen the idea that the "Big Eight" movie companies were all working together to put over a Hollywood opening in Miami Beach. The resultant blast of good old movie showmanship, with its electric signs, photographic blowups, flags, parades, bunting, newspaper publicity, bands, radio stuff, entertainment and even refreshments startled the community. Sonny Shepherd reports "otherwise it was a bloodless campaign."

Mr. Wolfson first entered the councilmanic race two years ago because he didn't like the trend in local politics. He won then by only two votes, had a three months battle in the courts about it. That campaign also was a sort of continuous movie premiere.

Mitch Wolfson was once in the dry goods business of Louis Wolfson, his father, who had settled at Key West in 1887, on arriving in the U. S. from Europe. The elder Wolfson, in his first days in Florida, refused to wait on customers who could not speak English. Key West had a big foreign population, particularly Cubans at that time, and this little idiosyncrasy probably cost the old gent a lot of business.

Producers in Hollywood and distributors in New York have hundreds of thousands of feet of film in their vaults on the subject of war. But they're complaining that the stuff is almost valuelessly outdated for dubbing in pictures on World War II. Even the roar of airplane motors of a few years ago is archaic. So you see, Hollywood has its war troubles, too, Mr. Churchill.

Merely by way of reminding that someone else had a little something to do with a little number called "Gone with the Wind" and its gross of $31,000,000 at film box offices, is the invitation from the United States Navy to Margaret Mitchell to christen the new Atlanta battle cruiser on August 9th. Miss Mitchell, of Atlanta, will probably be remembered as merely having written "Wind."

Our alert Hollywood Bureau rushes word, with grave misgivings that the new, and austerely titled Subcommittee to Investigate Studio Acoustic Problems, appointed by the film moguls to eliminate extraneous noises on sound tracks, already reports that actresses and other ladies around the sets cannot wear any silk taffeta, that film dancers must wear socks over their shoes, that chipped cork must be substituted for gravel in walks and driveways, that hereafter all alcoves, window recesses, dormer windows and ceilings must be made of cloth (to be painted only with water colors), that all four walls of a set are to be eliminated, that hardly any glass is to be used in windows, etc., etc. They'll get to the blustering yes-men later.

"IMMOBILITY" OF BRITISH WOMEN

British exhibitors, facing a grave shortage of movie projectionists through extension of military registration, have an even more troublesome problem in the matter of increasing mobilization of women to work on munitions. Seeking to protect their usherettes, cashiers and other women employees, exhibitors sought relief at the Ministry of Labor and were informed that each case would be considered on its individual merits. The guiding principle, the staid British Ministry said, would be whether a girl applying for exemption, "a young mobile woman," could be replaced by an older "immobile" woman.

Because of the participation of William Fox in that Philadelphia Judge Davis alleged bribery matter, we report that the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette exemplified real justice, perhaps, with this headline:

Runyon says he does not necessarily know the answer, but he suggests a cure for the situation, if he may be so bold. He suggests that the producers just spread Miss Rita Hayworth out more. He believes that plenty of Miss Hayworth would not only cure bad business but corns, bunions, eczema, tuberculosis and the heaves. He got his most recent load of Miss Hayworth in a picture called "Blood and Sand," which he thought a gorgeous production.

Why, ladies and gentlemen, the night he saw the picture a man fell down in the theatre and broke his leg in three places and they were carrying him out on a stretcher when Miss Hayworth came on the screen, and what do you think? The man turned his head and took one look at her and immediately got up off the stretcher and walked back to his seat as good as new.

In searching for original possessions of Billy the Kid, the old badman, for the use of exhibitors exploiting the picture of his name, MGM has come across a six-shooter, with 21 notches carved in its butt. And they weren't put there to mark the number of Sunday schools he attended, either.

The aged six-shooter was received from Sheriff Charles Hennessy, of Lucas County, Toledo, Ohio.

According to Sheriff Hennessy, the gun was presented to him by a friend who had received it from Chauncey Thomas, Western story writer. Previously, the sheriff had met the writer at a marksmanship meet at which time Thomas told him: " 'While crossing the pass through Capitan Gap westward from Lincoln, New Mexico, Billy the Kid turned off the trail a little north of the crest of the Divide, and lightened his load by hiding one of his six shooters in the fork of a juniper tree'." ..The gun later was found by a native, Jose Cordoba, who gave it to Thomas.

The original 21 notches are darkly outlined in the palm side of the grip. The barrel of the gun has been reduced from its original seven and one-half inches to five inches. That was from the wear and tear.

MUTUAL BACKS FCC ON REGULATIONS, DENIES 'CHAOS' SEEN BY NETWORKS

Counsel Tells White Committee Restrictive Contracts Were Adopted Only After Station "Raids" by Roosevelt Chain

Representatives of the national networks this week began the presentation before a Congressional committee of their views on the White resolution for an investigation of the Federal Communications Commission and the network regulations issued May 2nd, with Mutual Broadcasting System, which is supporting the regulations, in lead-off position.

Urging the committee to reject the resolution, Louis G. Caldwell, counsel for Mutual, testified on Tuesday that his network would be affected substantially only by the regulations prohibiting exclusivity and time options, and maintained that the other networks also would be able to live within the new rules. Mr. Caldwell declared that many of the restraints on stations imposed by the older networks were adopted after the newer network attempted to break in, and told the committee that had it not been for the "raids" on Mutual stations, chiefly that of the Transcontinental chain projected by Elliott Roosevelt, his organization would not have adopted restrictive contracts.

Fly Invites Conference

James Lawrence Fly, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, finally completed his testimony Monday, after four sessions on the stand, with an invitation to the networks to confer on the new regulations, but always with a view to the "removal of power over what the public may hear and of restraints on competition."

Mr. Fly made his gesture after telling the committee that the Commission had foreseen the "barrage of criticism and misinterpretation" which followed publication of the regulations of May 3rd.

Most of his final appearance on the stand was devoted to a denial of the charges made against the regulations—that they would result in chaos and confusion, that the industry could have taken care of the situation itself, and that public service programs will have to be eliminated.

None of these, he asserted, is founded on fact; there will be no chaos, the industry has shown no disposition actively to clean house although two years ago the Independent Radio Network Affiliates scheduled a number of matters which should be dealt with, and there is no reason to fear any contraction of public service programs.

Digressing momentarily from his theme, the FCC chairman called the committee's attention to the hold that Radio Corporation of America had on the entire industry, charged it was "in effect" a self-perpetuating management because the stockholders are so scattered, and suggested that Congress some day might want to study the way in which the RCA "far-reaching empire" dominated the radio field.

Most interesting feature of the session was an outburst by Chairman Burton K. Wheeler of Montana against the failure of some stations to give both sides on controversial questions, particularly the war question, in which he is a leader of the isolationist group.

The chairman, however, absolved the networks from all blame in this respect, saying, "I think the chains, in that respect, have been very decent." He declared, however, that individual stations had refused to accept a speech by Charles Lindbergh, naming WCAU, Philadelphia.

A telegram from Leon Levy, president of the station, however, was distributed in the committee room, in which it was denied that Lindbergh had been refused time. The station did not receive a request to broadcast the speech in question and that, in fact, it broadcast a Lindbergh speech May 10th and one by Senator Wheeler May 23rd.

The Senator declared that the Commission should call offending stations on the carpet when their licenses came up for renewal and demand that they show they have operated in the public interest, giving both sides of controversial questions equal play. He also criticized commentators, and declared the equal facility rule should apply to sponsored as well as sustaining programs.

Usurpation of Courts Charged

The Wednesday hearing of June 4th, final one of last week, was marked by charges by Senator White that the Commission was attempting to usurp the work of the courts in determining what constituted monopoly, although not authorized to do so by the Communications Act.

Mr. Fly contended that the framework for the determination of monopoly was laid down in the law, but Senator White asserted that only the courts could determine whether a person or organization was in violation of the anti-trust statutes. Revocation of licenses, he said, was one of the penalties which might be imposed for violation, but only after, and not before, a court decision.

Senator White also was critical of the past tendency of the Commission to change its regulations from time to time. "One of the great troubles now," he commented, "is these regulations are promulgated today and it is expected a great industry will conform. But six months from today these regulations may be revolutionized and the industry thrown into confusion. I think the industry is entitled to certainty and stability."

Getting back to a discussion of the regulations themselves, Mr. Fly declared the principal objective had been to relax the restraints on stations. He asserted that no impediment would be placed in the way of stations contracting for programs, but that they would be relieved from ties that now bind them, pointing out that they were tied to the two senior chains for five years while the chains were tied to them for but one year.

"I have no doubt that the Supreme Court ultimately will uphold these regulations," he said confidently.

The Commissioner denied that the rules would wipe out one of the NBC networks, or any network, declaring that to permit such a step would be a "business indiscretion." He predicted that NBC could dispose of its Blue network "lock, stock and barrel," without difficulty, that the public would hardly notice the change and that the network itself would be made healthier.

However, he admitted in response to an observation by Chairman Wheeler, 90 days probably is too short a period in which to perfect a transfer, and further time will be afforded.

"Unfairness" Denied

Mutual based its presentation through Mr. Caldwell on Tuesday on the three issues of whether there was anything unfair or arbitrary about the procedure of the commission, whether there was any real doubt of the commission's power to issue the regulations and whether the regulations would have the disastrous effects that had been prophesied. All of these questions, Mr. Caldwell said, can be answered in the negative.

The fact that Mutual could develop a continous service without restrictive contracts demonstrates that the new regulations will not force any organization or program off the air, the company's counsel maintained. The rules will cause no difficulty in cities having four or more stations, while where there are fewer stations the broadcasters will have greater freedom of selection than they now enjoy.

He told the committee that of the more than $71,000,000 reported by the FCC as the time sales of national networks last year, Mutual received $3,600,000 as against $31,000,000 for Columbia and $37,000,000 for National Broadcasting Company.

Regulation of chain broadcasting is not new, Mr. Caldwell said, explaining that the commission has been doing it for years, "but under another name" in deciding individual license cases. In those cases, however, the commission rendered diametrically opposed decisions on practically every major issue because no settled policy had been laid down, and he characterized the FCC's hearings and regulations as a great step forward.

In the past, he said, there has been "shadow boxing" and broadcasters could not know from one day to another how the commission stood on any particular issue.

The Wednesday session turned chiefly to the question of monopoly; the jurisdiction of the Commission to deal with that problem, and the right or minorities to adequate and equal representation on the air on controversial questions.

Throughout his testimony on Wednesday, Mr. Caldwell took the position that there are many provisions in the Communications Act empowering the Commission to deal with monopoly and contended that the the network regulations were promulgated under that authority.

FCC NEWSPAPER HEARINGS JUNE 25TH

Public hearings have been set for June 25th in Washington, by the Federal Communications Commission on the question of joint ownership of newspapers and radio broadcasting stations, it was announced recently by the Commission, in an effort to counteract the impression that the issue was "prejudged."

"The Commission stated when it called for an inquiry into this question, that its investigation does not imply that it is opposed to newspaper ownership of radio stations in general or in any particular situation," the announcement read. "The purpose of the inquiry is to obtain for the Commission sufficient information to decide whether or not a general policy should be adopted, and if a general policy seems advisable, to shape such a policy for application in the future to particular cases involving newspaper interests."

INTERSTATE REFUTES GALLUP POLL, BUT ADMITS MORE SELLING NEEDED

Circuit Officials Recommend Intensive Institutional Selling Campaign, Contend Gallup Findings Were Not Complete

Ever since Dr. Gallup told the motion picture industry last fall, "32 million persons who are financially able are not attending the movies," some exhibition leaders have been looking for a way to bring numbers of those people back to the theatre.

Interstate Circuit's John Q. Adams, executive secretary, and R. J. O'Donnell, vice president and general manager, among others, have analyzed the Gallup survey and have recommended specific methods to operators which, they claim, would help to re-inculcate the movie-going habit in some portion of the abstaining millions.

Poll Challenged

At the outset, Mr. Adams and Mr. O'Donnell refute Dr. Gallup's findings and indicate the unfairness of the questionnaire on which the much-publicized survey was based. They contend that these 32 million people are not attending movies only for the reason that they lost, or never acquired, the theatre-going habit, and that Dr. Gallup's conclusions were not entirely representative of the true picture.

In stating their premise, the Texas executives said: "Even if we question Dr. Gallup's findings and choose to discount them to a substantial degree, he nevertheless has revealed disturbing statistics on non-theatre attendance which has challenged our thoughts ever since."

They declared, "Great numbers of our people have been temporarily diverted from the theatre have lost the impelling desire to see a movie. They have gotten out of touch with their one-time favorite stars. . . . This type of person has been lost to the theatre except possibly when we play the film version of an outstanding book which may so provoke their interest that they will be moved to see the story on film.

"We submit that these people are lost to the theatre and will remain lost if we continue to pursue our present method of selling our attractions to the exclusion of any other medium. Our problem, therefore, in returning people to the theatre calls for a new approach and new methods."

Before submitting ideas for a new approach and new methods, Mr. Adams and Mr. O'Donnell enumerate the Gallup questions and cite their refutations.

The first reply in the Gallup questionnaire was, "An insufficient number of good pictures," to which, Mr. Adams and Mr. O'Donnell answered: "This of course, is beyond our control, but certainly it is a fallacy. . . . Never before have we had so many pictures which are entertaining, instructive and timely."

Next: "Aversion to double features": "This has little weight in our territory (Texas), where we single feature with few exceptions."

Third: "Preference for sports": "It is hard to conceive where sports would consume any individual's time to the complete exclusion of moving pictures."

Fourth: "The desire to stay home and listen to the radio": "We all have our favorite programs, and certainly, during times of international stress, most people hang onto their radios for news of the war, but here again we cannot treat radio as really serious opposition to the theatre."

Proceeding on the premise that new "approach and methods" may turn the trick, the Interstate executives outline their recommendations under three classifications.

Recommendations in the first classification are: reduction in admission prices for the teenage group, 12 to 16 years; furnish a "cry-room" for use of mothers who wish to park their babies during performances; encourage people to wear comfortable clothes to the movies, and reject the idea that one must "dress up" to go to the theatre; designate specific sections of the theatre for people who smoke; institute broadcasts of local, popular radio programs from the stage; introduce more "life, color and glamour" into the theatre to make it more attractive.

Further Recommendations

In the second classification, a plan is developed whereby the exhibitor can directly contact the people in his neighborhood, by instituting a house-to-house canvass, using the questionnaire method to determine how many people go to the movies, their preferences, their names and addresses. With this information first hand, the exhibitor can directly contact those individuals who do not attend the theatre, and, it is suggested, he can write personal letters to them enclosing special passes, inviting them to attend his theatre. In spite of the general objection to passes, Mr. Adams and Mr. O'Donnell contend that in this instance, a free pass will do more good than harm in the long run.

In the third and last classification, the executive set forth the need for the industry as a whole to do an ambitious, well-planned institutional advertising and public relations campaign. Aware of the many difficulties which may prevent the development of such a campaign on a national scale, they advocate regional break-downs, whereby managers in certain well-populated sections can get together, pool their ideas and resources and set in motion a sure-fire public relations plan.

Other suggestions presented in the study included ideas for contest, prize awards, quiz programs, merchandising tie-ups with local business men, talent shows, carnival nights and comedy give-aways.

Following up the theory that 32 million persons who are financially able do not attend movies, exhibitors will be interested in recently published statistics showing where the nation's buyers are concentrated.

According to figures published in, "Population and Its Distribution," compiled by J. Walter Thompson Company, a New York advertising agency, and published by Harper & Bros., residents of 13 states, in which 58 per cent of the country's total population reside, buy more goods and services than all the other 35 states combined. Moreover, approximately three-fourths of the nation's individual federal income taxpayers live in these states, which are: California, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas and Wisconsin.

Statistics show that 68.19 per cent of all residence telephones are located in these states, as are 63.26 per cent of the total passenger automobiles and 63.38 per cent of home radios.

The deduction follows that the greatest concentration of people who can afford to go to the movies reside in the 13 states mentioned.

Exhibitors who operate in the other 35 states may do well to study the recommendations presented by the Interstate Circuit executives, for it may be that they, as well as other exhibitors who are concerned with the problem of bringing some of the 32 million persons back into movie houses, will profit from utilizing the ideas suggested in the Adams-O'Donnell study.

Philadelphia Papers Urge Public To Take Vacations at Movies

Philadelphia newspapers, concerned over the prospect of a cut in theatre advertising appropriations during the Summer, have joined with exhibitors in trying to halt any slump at box-offices.

A series of institutional house ads have been spotted throughout the paper by The Evening Bulletin, to direct greater attention of the reader to amusement pages. Started last Saturday, the ads read:

"Ever Try a Movie Vacation?

"The cost is counted in pennies, not dollars. It's apt to take you to the farthest corners of the earth. It's bound to show you unusual scenes and interesting people. And you can have it not far away from your own home—at the movies.

Also this week, a tie-in was made by The Philadelphia Record for its $12,500 Rebus Puzzle Contest with Sidney E. Samuelson, business manager of Eastern Pennsylvania Allied. Although the puzzle contest started on May 12th, display space is used prominently in all editions this week that all Allied member theatres will distribute to their patrons the first five weekly series of Rebus Puzzles to enable them to get up to date in the contest.

The full-page ads list all the cooperating theatres and current programs, the copy emphasizing:

"If you haven't entered The Record's new Rebus Contest, don't fail this week to visit your neighborhood theatre, listed below with its program of movies for the week. You'll see a swell movie, secure all the puzzles to date absolutely free, and get started toward a cash fortune."

Fun in the Runyon Manner

Remember "Broadway Bill"?

Remember "Little Miss Marker"?

Those pictures were Damon Runyon on the screen.

Those pictures were money in the bank.

This picture is Damon Runyon on the screen, somewhat more the "Broadway Bill" Runyon than the "Little Miss Marker" Runyon, and if it isn't money in the bank a houseful of Glendale Californians must have experienced a mass attack of laughing-gas last Friday night.

They were screaming, these Glendale Californians, when they weren't catching their breath in the two or three interludes provided them for that purpose, and a considerable number of Runyon-isms probably as funny as those that came through the uproar were lost in the laughter. The rafters of the theatre, exposed to more previews than all the others in Southern California these past several weeks, were vibrating an echo sweeter than music to the collective ear of press and profession present to share the merriment with the natives. It was no atmosphere in which to discuss declining grosses and nobody did.

The picture, produced by Jules Levey and directed by Albert S. Rogell, presents a collection of Runyon-type citizens of a big town in various degrees and conditions of conflict. These citizens, all of them sharply characterized, include the venal politician, the bosses of the rackets, declared and undeclared, a managing editor who makes his own news in behalf of circulation, a blundering thug and his bumbling associates, a show girl as hard outside and human inside as he is, two young people who get caught up in the mad doings of these citizens, and assorted others. The details are told on page 134 of the Product Digest. The story is unimportant in comparison to the telling it receives at the hands of producer, director and a cast that misses nary a trick.

In common with the other pictures that have been based upon the Runyon writings—and far too few they've been, according to a reading of the profit record—this one is rough, slangey, impolite, rowdy and totally lacking in gloss and glitter, but clean as a hound's tooth and a lot sharper.

Brod Crawford as a Broadway bully and Binnie Barnes as a battling show-girl who bounces him around set new highs for themselves in the field of comedy.

Out of the Fog

(Warner Brothers)

Oppression on the Waterfront

This is a sombre study in oppression of the weak by the strong, presented in terms of a petty racketeer's operations on the Brooklyn water front. It is from the stage play, "The Gentle People." Produced proficiently by Henry Blanke, and directed by Anatole Litvak with emphasis on brutality and suffering, the film stresses moods and characters, castings being such as to allow each principal to record impressive portrayals.

John Garfield plays a sadistic racketeer preying upon owners of small boats, vending protection against himself, making the character wholly reprehensible. Ida Lupino plays an impressionable girl enamoured of the racketeer although knowing his depravity, making a somewhat incredible character credible. Thomas Mitchell plays a poor tailor persecuted by the racketeer to the point of seeking escape via murder, John Qualen playing his partner in ownership of a small boat.

Incidents in the story, which ends with accidental death of the villain, are detailed on page 147 of the Product Digest.

A finely produced picture, it is heavy in tone and theme, a study of crime and its consequences, exposing the evils of racketeering and suggesting, in a screen foreword, that the gangster's doings in this picture are typical of offenses being committed on a large scale throughout the world at this time.

A commanding picture, on artistic grounds, it is of unpredictable box office calibre.

Previewed for press and profession at Worners' Beverly Hills theatre, the film evoked proise for individual performances and discussion, obout 50-50, regarding its commerciol possibilities.—W. R. W.

Western

Republic's hard-riding trio, The Mesquiteers, are at it again—repelling the forces of evil and providing excellent western entertainment in the doing. The Mesquiteers—Robert Livingston, Bob Steels and Rufe Davis—are supported by Gale Storm, the girl in the case, and Peter George Lynn, who holds down the villain spot.

The Mesquiteers here are Rangers whose particular task it is to seek an elusive Indian chieftain, who is stirring up trouble. The boys return from one of their scouting expeditions to discover that a change in boundaries has placed their district in the hands of the U. S. Army. They are transferred to an army post, and are about to resign, having no desire to be soldiers, when they meet the Colonel's daughter. From there in the Mesquiteers have plenty of adventure and climax things by saving the Colonel's wife and young son from a wagon train that is being raided by Indians.

Rufe sings one novelty song, entitled "Just Imagine That," written by Smiley Burnette, himself a western comedian of some repute.

Man Hunt

(20th Century-Fox)

Anti-Nazi Melodrama

This is a heavy and starkly melodramatic story about the functioning of the Nazi secret service in Germany and in England from July, 1939, to the invasion of Poland. It is a richly produced picture outspoken in its adverse references to Hitler and blunt in its presentation of brutality, cruelty, cunning and perseverance attributed to the agents of the Reich.

The central character is a British big game hunter apprehended at the opening of the film while aiming a loaded rifle at Adolf Hitler, who is seen on the balcony of his palace at Berchtesgaden. Offered his freedom in exchange for his signature to a declaration that he was attempting to assassinate Hitler on orders from the British government, he refuses to sign and is tortured, finally escaping to England when an attempt to kill him fails. Agents of the Reich pursue him to London and to a cave in a rural area where, trapped by them, he escapes again, recovers from wounds received, and finally is flown over Germany, after the outbreak of the war, to be dropped down by parachute, with an assignment to assassinate Hitler.

Walter Pidgeon gives a powerful performance as the Briton, George Sanders an equally impressive one as chief of the Nazi secret service. Joan Bennett is effective as a girl of the London streets who aids the Briton in escaping and is killed by his pursuers.

Production values obtained by Kenneth MacGowan, give the picture suspense, and direction by Fritz Lang generates a steady tension. The story was published in the Atlantic Monthly under the title "Rogue Male," and was a best selling novel.

West Point Widow

(Paramount)

Comedy

"West Point Widow," first of the Paramount pictures to come from the new Sol C. Siegel unit, is a comedy dealing with the attempts of a nurse, whose baby is born after annulment of her marriage to a West Point cadet, to take up her marriage again after he graduates, only to find happiness with another husband.

The production is in the category of lightweight program material.

Anne Shirley as the nurse, Richard Carlson as the doctor whom she finally marries, and Richard Denning as the cadet whose love for the girl has grown cold during the two years, and who is kept in the dark about the birth of his child, enact the principal roles. Their support includes Maude Eburne, in an outstanding comedy characterization as a slatternly landlady; Frances Gifford, Janet Beecher, Cecil Kellaway.

Robert Siodmak, European director, makes his American debut with "West Point Widow." Colbert Clark was Mr. Siegel's associate.

The Nurse's Secret

(Warners - First National)

Murder Melodrama

In its transposition from the pages of fiction to the motion picture screen this Mary Roberts Rinehart story has not lost any of the thrills or suspense common to the work of the mystery writer, but rather has been enhanced by its transfer. With Lee Patrick as the nurse assigned to the house of mystery to aid an ailing dowager, and Regis Toomey as the police inspector solving a murder committed in the residence, director Noel M. Smith has kept the air of mystery predominant. Romance between Miss Patrick and Toomey, and dry humor on the part of the former are subordinate elements which aid in the progression of the theme.

The plot itself is novel in its presentation and concerns a murder and the usual number of suspects, each of whom might profit from the crime. With the aid of the nurse, who also becomes implicated, the police official introduces new suspects giving the audience an opportunity to match their collective wits against those of the film detective and the nurse.

Supporting the stars are Julie Bishop as the secretary to the lawyer handling the estate, Ann Edmonds and George Campeau, arrested for the murder, Clara Blandink, aunt of the victim who feigns sickness, Leonard Mudie in the role of the house butler and the most likely suspect, and Charles D. Waldron and Charles Trowbridge.

Knockout

Prizefight Melodrama

As the title implies "Knockout" is a story of the pugilistic art, and also a story that has been told before on the screen with variations. It is a simple story but like many of its predecessors it has been produced and directed within its limits and presented as entertainment for its worth.

Arthur Kennedy and Olympe Bradna are cast as struggling newlyweds trying to save enough money to open a health farm. When the husband loses his job he is forced to make a living by prize fighting. From that point the story develops through his varying degrees of success, his romance with a female sports writer, and his eventual downfall.

William Clemens, the director, has kept the plot within its confines and in so doing presents an interesting story of romance and pathos and eventual happiness sprinkled throughout with humor and simple comedy on the part of Cliff Edwards.

With Virginia Field, Anthony Quinn, Cornel Wilde and others who will be recognized by theatre patrons, fans who enjoy the above mentioned elements should find entertainment here, while boxing enthusiasts will be pleased with the many scenes of "in-the-ring" bouts and "behind-the-scenes" activities of the boxing game.

The Richest Man in Town

(Columbia)

Pastoral Comedy-Drama

Apart from two sickbed sequences in which Frank Craven and Edgar Buchanan deliver sound entertainment by sheer force of talent, this small town comedy-drama produced at relatively small expense offers little challenge to interest or attention. Good as they are, in themselves, these interludes are hardly enough to sustain appeal of a story lacking in plausibility and suspense.

Craven and Buchanan portray a small town banker and editor, respectively, who have been friendly enemies since boyhood and find themselves divided on the question of whether the community should support a summer (barn) playhouse. Roger Pryor, as an itinerant impresario, and Eileen O'Hearn, as the editor's daughter, work out a romance while the oldsters are conducting their feud, which ends at the death of one of them.

Essentially a character study, the film suffers from lack of coordination, coherence, and care in the making.

The Get-Away

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Cops and Robbers

Exhibitors and their patrons alike will be remembering the plot of this picture—a story concerning the young FBI investigator who poses as a criminal, helps a notorious killer escape from prison in order to track down his gang, and then complicates matters by falling in love with the gangster's sister, who is as innocent as he is guilty.

Robert Sterling appears as the Federal agent, Charles Winninger as a doctor devoted to alcohol and his outlaw patients, Donna Reed as the romantic interest, Henry O'Neill as a warden and Dan Dailey, Jr., as the criminal.

Produced by J. Walter Ruben and directed by Edward Buzzell, the film balances its action sequences with humor deriving from the Winninger performance and with the romance as indicated.

Sound technicians in Hollywood last week turned their attention to silk taffeta, shoe socks and chipped cork. In the interest of improving acoustics and eliminating extraneous noise on sound tracks, they recommended various changes in current production tactics. The austerely named Subcommittee to Investigate Set Acoustic Problems of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, after studies and experiments of several voted in favor of:

Substitution of cellanese taffeta for silk taffeta in women's dresses.

Requiring film dancers to wear socks over their shoes.

Replacement of gravel in walks and driveways with chipped cork which looks the same and is silent.

Included in the subcommittee's report, which was distributed throughout the studios, were recommendations for set designing changes. Among these were:

Construction of all alcoves, window recesses, dormer windows, ceiling pieces of cloth (to be painted only with water colors) to eliminate "boominess."

Parallel walls in small sets should be avoided unless opposite walls are made of cloth, or easily removable.

All four wall sets should be eliminated, or if not possible, at least two of the walls should be removable. If such construction is not possible at least two of the opposite walls should be of soft material.

The treads of all stairways should be covered with soft material.

Use of glass in windows should be kept to a minimum.

The noise from artificial rain striking metal roofs often causes trouble and the use of such roofs, unless treated with a tar coating, should be avoided.

Where it is necessary in a shot that rain strike a window pane, use of an additional window pane located adjacent to, and outside, the regular window pane, is recommended.

SHORTS BOOM AT WARNERS

Busier than at any time in its history is the Warner short subjects department, where this week eight subjects were being edited and five others were shooting or being prepared.

Before the cameras are "The Tanks Are Coming", Technicolor preparedness subject, and an anti-aircraft subject. In preparation are "La Boheme", in Technicolor, directed by Jean Negulesco, "Minstrel Days" and "Ice Frolics", the latter two being two-reelers.

In the cutting room are "Miracle Makers", "Carioca Serenaders", "Dick Himber and His Band", "Salmon Fishing", "Monsters of the Deep", "Hobbies of the Stars", "Valley of Heroes", "Glenn Gray and His Casa Loma Orchestra".

Teamwork

Set to start shooting shortly is "Ride 'Em Cowboy," fourth of the Universal Abbott and Costello pictures which are currently bright spots in a Hollywood very much depressed about falling theatre receipts.

As in the case of preceding films starring the two comedians, a production group of three men will collaborate on this latest of the Abbott and Costello pictures, and will also continue to function in similar capacities on succeeding features. The trio is composed of Alex Gottlieb, associate producer; Arthur Lubin, director, and John Grant, writer of the Abbott and Costello gags and dialogue.

The great success of the comedians' films is attributed in large measure by Mr. Gottlieb to the spirit of cooperation existing among the two acting principals and the production group.

Gottlieb's former experience fits neatly into the Universal pattern of making films with the primary purpose of pleasing exhibition. Entering the newspaper field after attending the University of Wisconsin, he then became publicity director of the New York Paramount Theatre, a post he held from 1930 to 1933. In 1934 and 1935 he was advertising manager of United Artists, and for the next two years performed similarly on behalf of Columbia.

Hollywood beckoned then, and the young man (he's just 34 now), became Walter Wanger's publicity director. From that he went to free lance screen writing, and it was as a writer that he went to Universal a year ago. After working on the script of "Buck Privates" with Grant, Gottlieb was made associate producer. Meanwhile, collaborating with Edmund Joseph, he had written the stage play, "Separate Rooms," and also has a new play slated for New York.

After "Buck Privates" was completed, but before its release, work was started on "Oh, Charlie," second of the Abbott-Costello ventures. When the returns from the first started to roll in, however, it was decided to add production value to the new film.

The remarkable record of "Buck Privates" is most simply indicated by the figures involved. The picture cost in the neighborhood of $200,000 and to date has grossed over $1,000,000. "In the Navy" is reportedly surpassing this record; having been given a budget of approximately $450,000, with succeeding pictures starring Abbott and Costello to be mounted on commensurate scales.

"Oh, Charlie" will be the next released, following "In the Navy," and then will come "Ride 'Em Cowboy," another Service picture based on aviation, and a murder mystery with a Radio City background, tentatively titled "Whodunit?" If the title was to be applied to all the pictures as a group, the answer might well be "Teamwork."

JERSEY, CAROLINA, VIRGINIA AND INDIANA UNITS CALL CONVENTIONS

Myers, Cole, Samuelson To Address Atlantic City Session; Carolina Owners To Meet June 29th to July 1st

While the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Los Angeles were thrashing out motion picture problems from the national viewpoint (see MPTOA-PCCITO convention story, pages 13, 14 and 15) state and regional exhibitor organizations were engaged in, or contemplating discussion of local problems at meetings in New Jersey, Virginia, the Carolinas and Illinois.

New Jersey Allied Meets In Atlantic City

"What's Wrong with the Theatre Business?" at midweek was occupying the attention of the Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, meeting at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Atlantic City, on Wednesday, Thursday and and Friday, for their 22nd annual convention. The convention, presided over by Lee Newbury, president of Jersey Allied, centered its attention on the causes of boxoffice lags in the fact of increasing payrolls, record industrial and governmental spending, and the rising money turnover recorded by bank clearances and Federal Reserve reports.

Meeting in conjunction with state gathering were members of Allied's eastern regional directorate. Abram F. Myers, national general counsel of Allied, Colonel H. A. Cole, president, and Sidney Samuelson, member of the national executive committee, were in attendance and scheduled to speak at the state meeting.

The convention opened Wednesday with registration and an afternoon meeting of the state directors followed by a general session of all the delegates, to hear committee reports and submit nominations for the election of state officers and directors. Thursday's business session was to feature reports by Colonel Cole, Mr. Myers and Mr. Samuelson on the national exhibition picture as it related to state and local problems.

Mr. Samuelson was to disclose progress on the National Allied's campaign by poll to determine public film tastes. There was also to be important discussion of the work done by the organization's Information Department.

Friday morning the Eastern Regional Conference was scheduled for 10 A.M. followed by a luncheon for the eastern directors. At the general session in the afternoon sales managers of the major distributors were to talk on sales and distribution problems, and plans for operation under the consent decree. Final committee reports were to be received and elections held to choose new officers of the state association. A testimonial banquet for Mr. Newbury was to close the convention on Friday evening.

The convention committee includes Louis Gold, Harry H. Lowenstein, and Irving Dollinger.

Indiana Associated Meets June 17 to 19

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana will meet for their annual mid-summer industry forum on June 17, 18, and 19 at the Potawatomi Inn, Pokagon Park, Lake James. According to Marc J. Wolf, chairman of the convention committee the session is to combine a vacation with a discussion of motion picture business in the midwest area.

The first business session will be called to order by Mr. Arrington at 10:00 o'clock Monday morning. Mr. Arrington, as well as Ed Kuykendall, national president, will discuss the MPTOA convention and its decisions at Los Angeles. The afternoon business session is to be for members of the Association only. Several important subjects are to be discussed including, "New Buying Setup" and "Whether It Is Advisable For Exhibitor To Buy More Than One Block of Pictures at a Time," "What To Do About High Bracket Pictures?", "If Ten Or More High Bracket Pictures Instead of Five Or Six, What Then?", "What the Government Expects of Theatres in the Defense Program" and other subjects. The meeting is later to be thrown open with members from the floor invited to participate in the discussion of important problems.

A banquet and dance are scheduled for Monday night. The entertainment for the banquet is being arranged by T. D. Kemp, Jr., of Charlotte, N. C., assisted by George Carpenter of Valdese, N. C.

A golf tournament on Sunday afternoon, a "blind bogey" event arranged by Alton Craver of Charlotte and tour of the Brookgreen gardens head the social program. Mrs. Runa Curtis, of Liberty, N. C., is arranging cards and other entrtainment for the wives of delegates.

NOW CHINESE FILMS FLOOD PHILADELPHIA

Mrs. Edna R. Carroll, Pennsylvania Censor Board Chairman, claims the censors are being swamped with Chinese picture importations. For the first five months of the year, the board has reviewed and passed 12 Chinese pictures, twice as many as had been reviewed during the entire 1940 year. Increase in exhibition of Chinese pictures in Pennsylvania is due to the increased activity of the China Aid Committee in Philadelphia. While there is no theatre in the territory booking such films, the pictures are presented regularly in private halls in Philadelphia's Chinatown district.

Announcing that the State board is now being "extra-vigilant" in reviewing all foreign films, Mrs. Carroll disclosed that the majority of such pictures submitted to the board are Chinese and Italian. Most of these are musicals.

Illinois Allied Backs Single Bill Legislation

Allied of Illinois meeting at Chicago on June 4th in the Congress Hotel voted an all out campaign for the elimination of double features and at the same time endorsed the Sandquist bill, pending in the Illinois legislature, which cuts program time to 135 minutes. Jack Kirsch presided at the meeting which was attended by representatives of 200 theatres. The independent theatres operators have turned to the support of the bill with telegrams and letters to local representatives and senators at Springfield.

Mr. Kirsch, on Tuesday, called a special meeting to be held before the weekend with local exhibitors showing triple features, in an effort to eliminate the practice. He said the group also is against any admission price cuts, adding: "Our entertainment is being sold cheap enough as it is without cutting prices." Mr. Kirsch said he would invite the press and distribution representatives to a special meeting next Wednesday at which the general discussion topic will be "What's wrong with the picture business."

Meanwhile larger circuit managers and theatres affiliated with distribution companies have barraged the capitol with wires and letters urging defeat of the law. Balaban and Katz managers assert that their counsel have assured them that the law is unconstitutional. Many are urging the public to protest against its passage.

A vote probably will be taken late this week in the Illinois general assembly on the Sandquist bill limiting the length of showings to 135 minutes unless there is a fifteen minute intermission every hour. The bill is at the passage stage in the lower House of the assembly and indications are that it stands a more than even chance of passage.

If the measure is approved by the House, its fate is questionable in the Senate. A factor in favor of the industry groups urging defeat of the bill is the pending adjournment of the Assembly, set for June 30.

Should the measure get through the lower chamber, opposition exhibitors hope it will be lost in the last minute shuffle in the Senate during the closing days of the session.

The threatened passage of bills levying a 10 per cent state amusement tax and a state wage and hour law, both of which would have vitally affected the industry, was removed last week. Both bills were killed in committee and there is little chance that they will be revived.

Two other measures in which exhibitors are interested, however, still are pending in the Assembly. One would create a state board of censors and the other would ban Ascap in Illinois. Observers believe that both of these bills will be killed in committee within the next two weeks.

Carolina Theatre Owners Will Hear MPTOA Report

C. H. Arrington, president of the theatre owners of North and South Carolina announces that the organization will hold a "Work and Play" convention at the Ocean Forest hotel, Myrtle Beach, S. C., on June 29th and 30th and July 1st. Advance reservations indicate a record attendance he said, for the discussions of southern motion picture problems and the receipt of reports from delegates to the MPTOA national convention at Los Angeles.

Virginia MPTO Calls Mid-July Convention

Virginia Motion Picture Theatre Owners will meet for their mid-summer convention on the weekend of July 12, 13, and 14 at the Chamberlain Hotel, Old Point Comfort, Sydney G. Gates, general chairman of the session, announced this week. Reservations are already being received for the combined business and vacation session.

Independent exhibitors of the area met last week in Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, for a discussion mainly centered about the business slump, and on developments in Minnesota. One attendee was E. L. Peasley, president of Northwest Allied, who expressed optimism regarding exhibitor status under Minnesota's anti-decree bill.

Observers reported a consensus that interests of economy, houses in smaller towns should close three days per week, and that an exhibitor with more than one house might well close one during the present period.

PRODUCERS MEET LABOR'S DEMANDS ADDING 3 MILLIONS TO FILM COSTS

Back Salaries Sought under Wage-Hour Law To Be Paid; Negotiations on New Union Proposals Start This Week

Hollywood producers, facing demands from their studio workers for increased wages and adjusted hours under the Wages and Hours law, capitulated this week on one front: back and overtime wages. They agreed on Tuesday to pay $3,000,000 in such salaries and wages to employees covered by the Wages and Hours Act and thus eliminated the possibility, threatened by business agents of studio unions, of multiple civil suits.

The producers' decision was announced by Pat Casey and Fred Pelton, producers' labor representatives, after they had met with business agents of the ten studio unions of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees. The conferees were to meet again Thursday for discussion of the 16-point demands of the unions, presented some time ago, concerning new wages and hours adjustments. The union agents have set July 1st as a deadline for meeting the proposals.

While the producers' decision to pay the back and overtime money ended the prospect of litigation, their representatives are said to have noted the producers had no legal obligation to pay the studio workers; only a moral one.

Awaited anxiously for several years—ever since the U. S. Wages and Hours Act went into effect—the complete, officially approved classification of 545 types of employees in motion picture production was announced last Thursday in Hollywood, to go into effect on Monday.

Unions Recommended Suits

The report, approved by Wages-Hours Administrator Philip B. Fleming, recommended that no examination of the studios' records to determine liability under the act be made until after next Monday.

Business agents of ten locals, belonging to the IATSE, had unanimously adopted a resolution under which they proposed to file suits, or instruct their individual members to do so, against the studios, both major and independent, for overtime pay for the hours worked weekly in excess of 44, 42 and 40 hour week limitations set by the Act.

The move had placed producers in the peculiar position of having lived up to union contracts calling in some cases for a 54 hour week, in others for 48 and other periods, and being penalized for so doing. A section of the Fair Labor Standards Act provides that if an employee established violation of the law by the employer, the latter must pay double the amounts due.

Decision as to procedure, following official announcement of the classifications, has not yet been made by other unions. The IATSE action was taken several hours after Merle D. Vincent, chief of the hearings and exemption section of the Wages and Hours division of the Department of Labor, officially disclosed the approval of his report.

Changes in the recommendations of Eldred M. Cocking, special analyst who spent months on his survey, were made in seven of the 514 classifications agreed upon by both producers and employes; determination of 24 groups on which both producers and unions offered evidence at a Los Angeles hearing conducted by Mr. Vincent was made; and definition of seven other disputed crafts, on which no evidence was offered, were automatically accepted. The animated cartoon field, treated as a separate unit in the report and with 40 groups of workers, had two disputed crafts whose status was established.

Two days after the Vincent announcement in Los Angeles, heads of the various studios met with Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, and studied the exemptions and non-exemptions, the rising costs of production, and the decrease in national theatre attendance.

Also of primary interest at the session was the resume presented by Fred Pelton, a producer labor contact officer, of the demands of the screen actors', writers' and directors' guilds, as well as those of other unions and guilds, for revisions, upward of course, of wages and working conditions.

Casey in Hollywood

Pat Casey, chief producer labor contact, returned last week to his Hollywood desk after several weeks in New York, and waded into the negotiations confronting him.

In recommending no examination of the studios' books be made prior to next Monday Mr. Vincent stressed that this in no way affected the right of employees to bring suit against the producers.

"This recommendation was made for the following reasons," he said. "Many of the job classifications involved in the survey are peculiar to the motion picture industry. Some of them are not basically different from craftsmen to be found in other industries, but, nevertheless, have aspects and functions which distinguish the duties involved from the work performed by such craftsmen in other industries. Others are peculiar to the moving picture industry alone. The rates of pay and hours of work which are typical in the foregoing job classifications and in the motion picture industry have long been established by collective union agreements and do not in many respects correspond to standard rates found elsewhere.

"Previous to establishing the classifications recommended herein, there was much uncertainty in the minds of the producers and the unions respecting the exempt or non-exempt status of the work performed. This uncertainty extended to a considerable number of classifications. The fact that many of these classifications of positions were distinguished in their nature or functions from jobs found in other industries made it necessary to make a scientific survey and analysis of all jobs and positions in the industry, as a basis for determining their exemption status. The survey and analysis made by the division for this purpose required the better part of a year's time. Then followed a hearing to afford both producers and the unions an opportunity to file objections to the classifications recommended by the survey analyst. Following such hearing, additional time was required by me for the preparation of these recommendations.

"In view of the collective union contracts, wage rates and working hours prevailing in the industry, the uncertain status of some of the positions and the length of time necessary to complete the survey and the final recommendations, it appears but fair to recommend that no formal inspections be made for the purpose of determining possible liabilities arising from failure to observe the requirements of the act and the regulations, subject, of course, to the rights of individual employees under Section 16 (b) of the Act."

Most of the disputed classifications belong to the IATSE jurisdiction.

Exemptions Recommended

The report recommended the exemption of second cameramen, still cameramen, non-working gaffer (foreman set electrician), non-working best boy (assistant gaffer), Class I sound men, and the non-exemption of assistant cameramen, first company grip, second company grip, working gaffers, working best boy, process projectionists, first company prop men, second company prop men, Class II and Class III sound men, fitters, Class I and Class II costumers.

Other provisions of disputed crafts were non-exemptions of set designers and assistants, second assistant directors, script clerks, practical nurses, first aid men and exemptions of registered nurses. Assistant cartoon animators and effects assistant cartoon animators were held exempt.

Some 18,000 workers in major studios belonging to the Producers' Association, plus thousands more working in independents, are affected by the decision.

Roughly, it is estimated that 70 per cent of the workers have been held non-exempt from the provisions of the statute.

In the animated cartoon field, and using the Walt Disney plant as a basis, there are 396 employees exempt, and 751 non-exempt. However, in those positions peculiar to animated cartoon studios, 383 are exempt and 316 non-exempt, according to the report, which uses Disney's 1940 employment figures.

Present at the producers' session last week, held in Mr. Freeman's office, were Louis B. Mayer and E. J. Mannix, of MGM; Joseph M. Schenck and William Goetz, of 20th Century-

EXECUTIVES MEET ON UNION DEMANDS

Condition of box office receipts, demands of workers for wage increases and improved working conditions and rising costs of production were problems discussed last Thursday, June 5th, at a meeting of Hollywood studio heads, with Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, presiding.

Fred Pelton, labor contact, presented various proposals of screen actors, writers and directors guilds, as well as those of other organizations, and reported on disputed classifications of workers under the Wages and Hours Act.

All labor negotiating committees of the AMPP were present.

Included among attendees were: Louis B. Mayer, E. J. Mannix, Joseph M. Schenck, William Goetz, Harry Cohn, B. B. Kahane, Sol Siegel, E. H. Goldstein, Harry M. Warner, Jack L. Warner, Samuel Goldwyn, Cliff Work, Hal Roach, J. R. McDonough, Fred W. Beetson and company attorneys.

Jury Probe into IATSE Seeks Local 37's $80,000

The Los Angeles County grand jury investigation into the financial and other affairs of the Alliance, in Hollywood, has as one of its objects the location of $80,000 in bank deposits extant at the time the international's officers assumed control of Studio Technicians Local 37, and dissolved it, it was disclosed last week. Witnesses are to be called July 9th. At that time, Harold V. Smith, Sound Technicians Local 695 business agent, and Floyd Billingsley, an Alliance vice-president, will be heard.

Also last week occurred the first open break of recent times between the international and its locals, in the reported resolution by the Studio Electricians Local 728, asking George Browne, IATSE president; Willie Bioff, his personal representative and Hollywood Alliance leader; and their appointed aides, to resign, as a consequence of their indictment by a New York Federal Grand Jury several weeks ago on charges extorting $550,000 from four major film companies. Local 728 is one of the unions created from the dissolved Local 37.

Bioff was to appear Thursday before Federal Judge John C. Knox in New York for arraignment. Arraignment of Browne is set for June 20th.

Disney Studio Strike Continues

At mid-week, the strike by the Screen Cartoonists Guild, Local 852, against the Walt Disney cartoon studio, Hollywood, entered its third week, with increased support of the strikers by other Hollywood guilds and unions, and with the reiterated demands by Mr. Disney that the studio workers be given an NLRB election.

RKO was asked last week by a union delegation, head of which was Aubrey Blair, organizer for the American Federation of Labor, to stop distributing Disney cartoons, until the strike is settled. No results were announced.

The Guild has threatened a "nation-wide" boycott of Disney films by all union interests.

Among the unions backing the Guild's strike have been the Screen Writers Guild and the Society of Motion Picture Editors.

Mr. Disney and union leaders met Tuesday, with the Guild presenting 11 points as conditions for peace. Among these were recognition of the union, closed shop, a ten per cent pay increase, prevention of discrimination because of union activities.

The strikers Wednesday unanimously rejected Mr. Disney's proposal for an NLRB election. Mr. Disney had previously rejected the workers' proposal for a cross check of the payroll with the membership in the union.

Independents Win Equity Council Seats

Three of ten places on the governing council of Actors Equity were won by the organization's first "independent" ticket, in bitterly contested elections Saturday, in New York—elections which were marked by the charges by regular ticket candidates that the "independents," headed by Alan Hewitt, were representing Communist influence.

On Tuesday, 10 members resigned from the council because of this alleged influence. They are Florence Reed, Peggy Wood, William David, Muriel Kirkland, Lee Baker, Alfred Kappeler, Winifred Lenihan, Joseph Vitale, Ben Lackland, and Claudia Morgan. They charged the governing body would now be dominated by "Reds" inasmuch as only a minority attended meetings, and the presumption was the radicals would make certain their own attendance.

Mr. Hewitt had been refused nomination by the regular nominating committee because of his allegedly Marxist views. After the election he remarked he was "prepared now, to face any formal investigation."

The other two independent nominees elected were Mady Christians and Myron McCormick. Cornelia Otis Skinner led the regular ticket, with others named being Margaret Webster, John Alexander, Richard Taber, Louis Calhern, Lillian Gish, E. John Kennedy and Ethel Waters.

Miss Waters' election marked the first time a member of her race has been named to Equity's council.

William Lambertson, Republican Representative from Kansas, injected himself and the "Red" angle into the pre-election campaign, by publicly thanking Equity's nominating committee for refusing nomination to Mr. Hewitt. Mr. Lambertson's interest in the theatre dates publicly from his participation in a House Appropriations Committee, which in 1939 killed the Federal Theatre Project, reportedly because of its Marxist viewpoint. The Congressman this week was attempting to obtain a hearing before the Dies Committee on un-American activities, for seven Equity council members he has accused of Communism and other evidences of Marxism. The seven are Mr. Hewitt, Sam Jaffe, Philip Loeb, Emily Marsh, Hiram Sherman, Leroy MacLean, Edith Van Cleve.

At the annual Equity meeting financial reports were read. Noted was a net gain of $23,058 from operations during the fiscal year ended June 1st, and a surplus on hand of $379,883. Total assets are $551,720.

MGM Workers Criticize Publicists' Guild Stand

The Screen Publicists Guild Eastern (New York) unit last week received a second public assailment, following upon that by six members of the Paramount publicity and advertising department, and similarly attacking the Guild's right to take a political stand which members have no voice in, and with which they may differ.

The second assailment, also by public letter, and also to Joseph Gould, of United Artists, Guild president, was from three members of the MGM publicity department, William Danziger, Perry Charles and Rey Bell.

It differed in substance from the letter by the Paramount publicists in not asking the Guild's opinion on formation of a separate publicists' union.

It said, in part:

"If our governmental leaders and selective service essential to National Defense, any individual has a constitutional right to disapprove, if he does disapprove. But the Guild has seen fit to officially voice its dissent as the opinion of all of its members. Why?

"The Guild, or its elected representatives, has similarly challenged other actions of our Federal Government. Why has the Guild, or its elected officers, found it necessary to focus its energies on matters wholly political in character and absolutely foreign to the purposes for which the Guild was created? These actions are ostensibly in bad taste and in these days of needed national unity examples of mighty bad Americanism. We must not forget that only in a Democracy such as ours can Guilds such as this come into being, flourish and thrive. While unions should concern themselves with the attainment of their objectives, they should guard at all times any encroachment on the democratic processes."

A general membership meeting of the Guild Thursday night was expected to discuss the two letters, and especially the proposition by the Paramount publicists, for an "independent" publicists' unit in New York.

Musicians' Federation Holding 46th Meeting

Executives and rank-and-file of the American Federation of Musicians convened in Seattle on Monday, for the 46th annual confabulation. Approximately 750 attended. James Caesar Petrillo, presided, and was to give an account of his first year in the presidency.

The meeting was to last through Friday. As usual, employment of members thrown out of work by various mechanical devices, was to be the major topic. An important feature of the sessions was to be the report of Ben Selven, general manager of recording activities of Associated Music Publishers and program manager of Muzak, on the effect of recorded music on employment. He had been appointed by Mr. Petrillo to survey the field.

Mr. Petrillo on Tuesday charged Thurman Arnold, assistant U. S. Attorney General, with being "a menace maliciously opposed to the AFM" and defied him to proceed against the union for asserted monopolistic practices. He accused the Department of Justice prosecutor of "unethical tactics" in allegedly telling a broadcasters' group they would be indicted for signing an agreement with the AFM and in also remarking that jurisdictional disputes were not part of the struggle unions make for better hours and wages.

He further asked for support by the musicians of the nation's foreign policy, adding there were "subversive elements" in the Federation which he would expose "when necessary."

Resolutions awaiting action were: that union musicians be employed in all theatres playing records for fill-in or intermission music; that traveling bands get permission of local unions before appearing on local radio stations to promote their engagements; protesting establishment of picket lines around high schools by the IATSE when the schools refuse to hire stagehands, thus making it impossible for union musicians to play in such picketed schools; providing that high school bands play only at school functions and not in public.

Montreal Orders Wage Minimums

The Montreal Minimum Wage Commission has drawn minimum wage rates for employees of film theatres. These rates are, for managers, $30 per week; projectionists, 60 cents per hour; maintenance men, 55 cents an hour; non-qualified maintenance men, 40 cents; ushers and porters, 25 cents; stagehands and musicians, employed four days or more per week, 60 cents; the same employed less than four days, $2 to $5 per day; all other employees, 26 cents.

The new ordinance also provides that tips belong exclusively to the employee, and the employer must provide and maintain uniforms; that the regular work week may not be more than 54 hours, and that the employee must receive a full day's rest each week.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS WIN DELAY ON PROJECTIONISTS DRAFT CALL

Ministry of Labour Promises CEA Leaders Registration Postponement Pending Study; Studio Personnel Examined

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Following a visit by an exhibitor deputation on June 6th the Ministry of Labour issued a guarantee that there would be no further calls for projectionists for military service pending further investigation of the whole matter and a final decision. The exhibitors complained that in spite of previous promises by the Ministry that callups of the projectionists would be delayed while the conferences on the matter were in progress, ranks of the operators had been continually depleted by almost daily calls.

After hearing the leaders of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association plead the urgency of the theatre position with respect to the threatened callups, Ministry officials asked for further detailed information regarding personnel, ages and available labour. Collation of this data probably will require from two to three weeks. Meanwhile the Ministry gave a categorical promise to suspend registrations.

Despite the noncommittal attitude of the officials the deputation was reported generally satisfied with the initiating of the new machinery.

Previous Appeals Made

Not only are operators between 25 and 35 being called up for military service, but older men are being summoned for industrial registration above the age of 40.

The C.E.A. had previously made urgent appeals to Ernest Bevin, Labour Minister, to settle the question promptly. In so doing they have pleaded not only the cause of picture theatres but also of British producers, contending that the production of British films would be obliterated as there would not be sufficient cinemas available to enable those who had invested their money in films to recoup their expenditure.

Furthermore, they lost no opportunity of exposing to Mr. Bevin the inconsistencies of his own Ministry.

"One section of your ministry urges us to employ older men to release projectionists, another section interviewing the older men, tells them they must choose some essential work and that the cinema is not essential.

"We have been urged to substitute women and until the last few days yet another section of your ministry indicated to the young women that there were other forms of national work which they could do."

The exhibitor claims for the grading of the industry as essential are based upon:

(1) Its contribution to national morale. The Trade is to all intents and purposes the only entertainment that can adequately offer recreation to people suffering from the stress of war.

(2) The propaganda value of the screen in relation to Ministry of Information films.

(3) The entertainment offered the troops at low prices.

It is the state of uncertainty which is most exasperating to efficient exhibitors, especially that which will exist when mid-July arrives and the call-up is in full swing. Until uncertainty is removed they cannot proceed with the training of substitutes.

In regard to women employees, usherettes, cashiers, etc., the Ministry of Labour has been no more helpful. Following C.E.A. stressing of the urgency of the matter in face of the increasing callup of women to work on munitions, the Ministry would go no further than to promise that each case would be considered on its individual merits and that the guiding principle would be whether a girl applying for exemption ("a young, mobile woman") could be replaced by an older (and possibly "immobile" woman).

Some statistical evidence of how critical the situation will be if operators are to be reserved was given at a recent meeting of the Sheffield C.E.A. when it was revealed that of 235 operators employed on one group of theatres 191, or 83.3 per cent, were under 35 and likely to be called up. In another group 12 out of 13 operators employed were under the ages of reservation.

Production Personnel Studied

A retrospective survey of the work of the Panel set up by the Ministry of Labour to inquire into the manpower needs of the British production industry suggests, state enlightened observers, that a formula is likely to be achieved which may go far towards solving some of the problems.

Details have now been gathered, both from the forces, the various Government Ministries and the industry itself as to the likely needs in personnel, and the production programmes on which this personnel would be employed. Indications are that whatever the ultimate decision of the Labour Ministry and the Government at large, first consideration will be given to the requirements of the various Services and Government departments. This is not to say that the industry viewpoint will not also be considered, but complexities of the situation make exact forecasts difficult.

With this established, it is also likely that some form of rationalization may be demanded by the Government, a Quid Pro Quo for any concessions made. Already there have been in Whitehall oblique references to redundancy, not only in production companies, but also in picture theatres. If a minimum working figure in projectionists and studio technicians is set, it is not unlikely that the question of a maximum figure of theatres in districts, and a maximum number of production companies, may be raised on the Government side.

Before them have been considerations of the role the industry performs in, for instance:—

(1) Providing entertainment for the armed forces of the crown, (2) offering a means of propaganda, (a) at home, and (b) abroad, and (3) through the constant movement of Anglo-American trading, making an invaluable contribution to the foreign exchange situation.

These functions would normally involve the War Office, the Air Ministry, the Admiralty, the Ministry of Information, the Foreign Office and the Treasury. That these departments will between now and the finalization of the report, feel moved to publish pronunciamento is not necessarily likely. A parliamentary statement or utterances by Cabinet Ministers might cover the whole ground.

The wide scope of the problem can be seen from the various headings under which members of the Committee have approached the problem. First among these is Government authority, and the need of the Services for training films. Wrapped up with this is the role of the motion picture as an instrument of propaganda at home and abroad, a role in which both the Ministry of Information and the Foreign Office are interested. Secondly there are still statutory obligations imposed upon distributors which can only be fulfilled with British pictures.

Again the question of manpower is divided into two categories. Manpower necessary to fulfil the urgent rules embraced in the first two categories, and man power which the Government may or many not feel inclined to approve being withdrawn from the armed forces to assist voluntary production.

Eckman on British Council

American producer-distributors will have their own representation on the Cinematograph Films Council for the next three years. Sam Eckman of MGM has been nominated to replace David Griffiths, now inactive, to whom a vote of thanks was accorded for his loyal and efficient service. Fred Baker, representing independent British producer-distributors, will continue on the council.

The Government has asked the industry to curtail the consumption of gasoline, but the Kinematograph Renters Society is withholding action pending further evidence that reduction is necessary.

STUDIOS EXEMPTED IN CLOTHES EDICT

The British Board of Trade this week amended the clothing ration order, promulgated for all of England last week, to permit clothing to be manufactured and acquired for the costuming needs of film production. Although British companies made representations it is understood American companies were the prime movers in the request for the exemption. They pointed out the impossibility of fulfilling quota requirements if clothing were to be curtailed. The necessity of protecting the film export market led to the decision.

BOOK REVIEW

KINEMATOGRAPH YEAR BOOK. Kinematograph Publications, Ltd. 20s net.

Published by the doyen of British trade journals—the Kinematograph Weekly, this compendious reference book has no competitors on the exclusively British field. It is as well that it has not, for they would be hard put to cram more information between two covers than has been done here. As a record of trade shown films, and of theatres and theatre circuits it is particularly valuable, though its classified and general directories are comprehensive and accessible. The increasing sweep of the documentary film is reflected in a documentary section.—A. F.

TRAVELING CIRCUIT FOR ARMY CAMPS; DEFENSE FILM HANDLING IS SPEEDED

Trucks Carry Stage Show Units To Army Bases; Projection, Sound Equipment on OPM List for Critical Priorities

The entertainment industry is in an all-out drive to aid national defense in all factors, exhibition, manufacture of films and equipment, and entertainment for soldiers in the camps.

U. S. Motor Camp Shows, sponsored by the Citizens Committee for the Army and Navy, Inc., on Monday began a circuit of army camps in ten states. The Herman A. DeVry Company, of Chicago, disclosed it received a Navy contract for 200 portable sound projectors. At the same time, the Office of Production Management announced film projection and sound equipment had been added to the priorities critical list. The distributors' defense committee met in New York last week to speed distribution of Governmental agencies' defense films. Production of training films for the Army, by Coast studios, is in full swing. A New York theatre, the World, on June 23rd will begin a policy of showing only Government films on defense. The United Service Organization, providing recreation facilities for the soldiers, and driving for $10,765,000, enlisted the radio, in appealing directly to the public.

Trucks Carry Show Units

The Citizens Committee Motor Camp Shows are on special trucks built and loaned by the General Motors Corporation, and from which "compressed theatrical entertainment" may be given. The first show in the projected tours by different motor units was given Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights, by Unit A, with a stage and screen personality cast headed by Allan Jones, screen singer. It was given at Fort Bragg, Fayetteville, North Carolina. Among other camps in the Fourth Army Corps Area, which the unit will visit, are Dix, Wilmington, North Carolina; Jackson, Columbia, South Carolina; Croft, Spartansburg, South Carolina; Stewart, Savannah, Georgia; Wheeler, Macon, same state; Benning, Columbus, Georgia; Blanding, Stack, Florida; Pensacola, Florida; Forest, Tullahoma, Tennessee.

The Unit A Show was produced by Harry Delmar, under supervision of Vinton Freedley, the Committee's director of professional entertainment.

Six other such units are being prepared for visitations to other Army corps areas. The trucks upon which they give their shows contain built-in stages, approximately 14 by 18 feet, with lighting, sound, and scenic equipment.

The tour of unit A follows the success of the first such presentation several weeks ago at Camp Dix, New Jersey. There, a motor unit of two trucks gave three one-hour shows in one night for 15,000 men.

The Committee said in New York this week that each unit, though with a civilian employee as unit manager, will be under the immediate command of the Corps Area commander in whose territory it operates.

The Committee is operating in part under financial allocation from the United Service Organizations, now driving to obtain $10,765,000 for soldiers' recreational facilities.

It was said this week the performers in the traveling units would be paid above the minimum specified by the American Guild of Variety Artists, vaudeville performers' union, and that unit B, this week not yet allocated, would probably include Lew Parker & Company, Ted Lester, and Floria Vestoff.

ALUMINUM DAY AT OHIO HOUSE

A. C. Patterson, manager of the Mu Wa Tu theatre, Coshocton, Ohio, is aiding the government's defense program—and directly. His theatre on Friday was to be partly cluttered, he hoped, with assorted aluminum kitchen and other houseware, these being the price of admission to a special show for children up to 12 years of age, that morning. He announced he would hand the aluminum thus collected to the government without charge. The picture is to be "Mr. Dynamite".

Projection Equipment Now On Priorities List

The priorities critical list has been extended to include motion picture projection equipment, the Office of Production Management announced Monday, from Washington. The disclosure was made in announcement that 40 more items and classes of items had been placed under such control. The total now is more than 300.

Henceforth, Army and Navy orders for film equipment receive priority over orders from strictly commercial customers.

The radio industry, some of whose equipment, and the materials thereof, has been affected by the priorities listings, was to take official cognizance of the new problems introduced, at the 17th annual convention of the Radio Manufacturers Association and the National Parts Trade Show, from Tuesday through Friday of this week, in Chicago.

In conjunction with this convention, there were to be meetings of the Sales Managers Clubs, the Radio Servicemen of America, the National Association of Radio Parts Distributors, and other units.

An important talk was to be delivered by Paul Galvin, chairman of the RMA Government Relations and Priorities committees.

War Training Films To Receive Publicity

Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, announced last week the War Department had agreed to publicity on certain of the army training films now being produced by the studios through the Academy. He added that certain forms, for such publicity, must be followed: requests for information (such as stills, interviews, credits, and the like) must be submitted to Major General Robert Richardson of the Army's Public Relations Bureau, Washington, specifying type of information desired and publication in which it will appear; the War Department will notify the petitioner on results of the requests; and thereafter, details will be handled through the Research Council.

The Council, he also noted, will issue a formal statement at the start of production of each training film, listing those individuals assisting in the production of that film.

Harmon on Coast; Defense Meetings

Francis Harmon, executive assistant to Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Eastern head of the Production Code Administration, and coordinator of the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense, was on the Coast this week to address the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and attend meetings of the PCA, conferences with producers on activities of the defense committee, and meetings with exchange managers, also on defense.

The first of the meetings with exchange managers was to be with those of the Los Angeles area; the second with those of the New Orleans, on his return trip; and there were to be others, Mr. Harmon's office, in New York, indicated, this week.

The defense co-ordinator, also, was to address the Associates of the Los Angeles Y. M. C. A., next Tuesday.

U.S.O. Uses Radio In Drive for Funds

The United Service Organizations Tuesday night, June 3rd, began its campaign for $10,765,000, to establish recreation facilities for soldiers, with an impressive radio program over the three major networks. President Roosevelt's message asking support of the U. S. O. by the public, was read by Paul McNutt, Federal Security Administrator. Other speakers were Harold Stark, chief of naval operations; George Marshall, Army chief of staff; Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy; John J. McCloy, assistant Secretary of War; Walter Hoving, U. S. O. president; and Charles Taft, assistant to Mr. McNutt.

The U. S. O. on Monday received $100,000 from John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

'U', RKO, COLUMBIA REPORT INCOMES; SEC LISTS MORE FILM STOCK DEALS

Cowdin Reports Half Year Net of $1,759,334; Columbia Has Profit for 39 Weeks' Period; RKO Ahead for 1941 Quarter

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., occupied the spotlight in motion picture financial circles this week when J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board reported profits of $1,759,334 for the first half year, and a second quarter in which company earnings topped a million dollars for the first time. Reports were also issued this week by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation on its first year of operation following reorganization as a Maryland company in January, 1940. Columbia Pictures reported a net operating profit for the first three-quarters of the current year. Three motion picture stock deals on the part of corporation officers were included in the April report of the SEC.

Universal Earnings Set Record High for Quarter

Consolidated earnings of Universal Pictures Co., Inc., and subsidiary companies during the 26 weeks ended May 3, 1941, the first half of the company's fiscal year, amounted to $1,759,334, after provision for all charges except Federal income and excess profits taxes, J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board, announced on Monday. Net for the second quarter was $1,056,000, Mr. Cowdin said, marking the first time the company's quarterly earnings have reached the million-dollar mark.

Profits for the first half year compare with a profit, similarly computed but after provision of $208,000 as a special amortization reserve, of $1,173,002 in the twenty-six weeks ended April 27, 1940. The reserve for amortization was deemed unnecessary this year, Mr. Cowdin said.

After providing a reserve of $390,000 to cover current Federal income taxes for the period, earnings for the 26 weeks ended May 3, 1941, amounted to $1,369,334. Because of the impossibility of estimating excess profits tax until the year's profits are known, Mr. Cowdin explained, no provision has been made.

The net Universal profit of $1,369,334 after allowing for all charges and normal taxes is equal after dividend payments on 10,739 shares of 8 per cent first preferred and on 20,000 shares, 7 per cent, second preferred stock, to $5.02 per share on 250,000 shares of outstanding common stock. Earnings more than doubled during the second quarter, with a net of $1,056,000 compared with a profit of $553,795 for the 13 weeks ended February 1, 1941.

RKO Annual Report Shows $988,191 Loss

Provision for a long list of expenses during the first year of operation of the reorganized Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and its subsidiaries accounted for a loss of $988,191 for the year ended December 31, 1940, George J. Schaefer, president reported in the company's annual statement this week.

The Radio Keith Orpheum Corporaiton and subsidiaries this week reported a net profit of $643,926 for the 13 weeks ended April 5th, 1941, compared with $535,088 for the 13 weeks.

The balance sheet of the Corporation and subsidiaries listed total assets on December 31, 1940, of $67,957,507, a capital surplus of $15,957,949 and an operating loss of $904,425. To this is added $88,767 representing the acquisition of obligations of subsidiaries at less than their principal amount. Current and working assets of the company were $17,401,387, including a cash balance of $7,322,086 and inventories of $7,955,940. Current liabilities totaled $5,892,377.

The report listed provision during the year for charges for amortization of film costs, expenses, depreciation and amortization of capital assets, interest and allowance for contingencies, loss on investments and capital assets, provision for investments and capital assets and for investment in affiliated and foreign subsidiaries. It also provided for taxes, and dividends accrued on 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock for the subsidiary Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corp.

Addressing the stockholders, Mr. Schaefer reported that during the year the company eliminated $1,840,000 of funded debt of subsidiaries, and that the debt since 1933 had been cut by $25,800,000. During the year refunding of $2,150,000 RKO Midwest Corp bonds and $350,000 Junior Orpheum Los Angeles, Ltd., bonds was completed. Profits for the first quarter of 1941 are estimated in financial circles at $600,000, following Mr. Schaefer's report.

The profit and loss statement shows income for 1940 of $54,211,909, and expenses of $51,342,931, of which $26,021,279 was operating and general expense, $17,496,563 amortization of film costs and expenses, and $7,825,089 for royalties and participations.

Depreciation and amortization was $1,425,082. Miscellaneous income was $814,522, leaving net of $2,258,417 before other charges, provision for taxes and dividends. Principal items in the latter charges include interest and discount of $1,144,570; the $794,600 provision for contingencies; $371,507 for income taxes, $292,755 for dividends on Keith-Albee-Orpheum preferred stock, and $177,959 for expenses in defense of the Federal anti-trust suit.

The consolidated balance sheet shows $1,342,780 in advances to outside producers; $7,955,940 in inventories, and $748,517 in notes and accounts receivable. Capital assets are listed at $44,172,294; investments in affiliated and other companies, $4,785,751, and total assets, $67,957,507.

Few shares of Keith-Albee-Orpheum preferred stock in public hands were offered for redemption at the close of the redemption period Saturday. RKO purchased them at $115.25 per share. The offer was made to allow public holders to avail themselves of the same terms under which RKO will redeem KAO stock from Atlas Corp. and M. J. Meehan, from whom RKO holds an option for 22,000 shares.

Columbia Profit During First Three Quarters

Columbia Pictures Corporation and subsidiaries listed a net profit of $274,765 for the nine months ended March 29th after allowing for depreciation, interest, taxes and amortization. The earnings are equal, after dividend requirements on $2.75 convertible preferred stock, to 33 cents per share on 366,268 shares of common stock. Last year, in a comparable period the company earned $341,348, after deducting $300,000 for inventory amortization. Earnings per common share were rated at 51 cents each.

Current Columbia working assets were reported at $12,588,000 with liabilities totalling $1,809,000. The working capital amounted to $10,749,000.

Stock Transactions Listed by SEC

Three film companies figure in transactions of officers and directors listed in the first April summary of the Securities and Exchange Commission this week at Washington.

The most important transactions were in Keith-Albee-Orpheum, where Atlas Corporation was reported as adding 1,000 shares of preferred to its direct holdings and another 1,000 shares to the portfolio held through the American Company, to give it a total of 9,000 shares at the close of April, equally divided between the two companies, while Michael J Meehan, New York, beneficial owner, was shown to have disposed of 1,800 shares of preferred, reducing his holdings to 15,204 shares.

The SEC report showed that Gordon E. Youngman, New York, held no registered Radio-Keith-Orpheum securities when he became an officer in the company May 1.

Loew's, Inc., continued its acquisition of the common stock of Loew's Boston Theatres, acquiring 122 shares during the month for a total of 118,080 shares.

Acquisition of 200 Universal Company common voting trust certificates was reported for Preston Davie, director, New York, who held 4,200 at the close of the month.

Samuel Paley, director, Philadelphia, disposed of 1,100 shares of Columbia Broadcasting System Class A common stock, holding 9,100 shares at the close of the month, and H. Bayard Swope, director, New York, sold 700 shares held direct and 100 shares held through the Keewaydin Corporation, retaining 400 shares in direct ownership and 4,000 shares through the corporation at the close of April.

Directors of the Western Electric Company on Tuesday declared a dividend of 75 cents per share on its common stock. The dividend is payable on June 30, 1941, to stock of record on June 25, 1941.

TAXES DROP IN IOWA, MISSISSIPPI

Theatre tax collections in Iowa and Mississippi reflected reports on attendance lags this week in statements issued by the finance officers of the two predominantly rural states.

Iowa's tax commissioner reported that in the three months ending April 1st collections from 1,383 theatres and other places of amusement in the state amounted to $68,789.82. The figure represents a decline from the $70,019 collected during the last quarter of 1940 and from collections of $71,535 during July, August and September, 1940. Returns were from 500 theatres, ballrooms, and other entertainment enterprises charging more than 15 cents admission. The tax rate is two per cent on 15 cents or over.

For the second consecutive month theatre admission tax collections in Mississippi have fallen under the totals of corresponding months a year ago. Collections in May were $36,719 against $39,746 in May, 1940. Exhibitors blame closer observance of the Sunday blue laws over wider areas of the state and warm weather for the decreased patronage.

F. L. Dyer, Aide to Edison, Dead

Frank L. Dyer, the first attorney in the motion picture industry, long a confidant and counsel to the late Thomas A. Edison, and besides both an inventor and executive of note, died last week at his home in retirement in Ventnor, New Jersey.

Mr. Dyer was seventy years old. He was born in Washington, D. C., August 2, 1870. He was graduated from George Washington Law School in 1891 and entered practice as a lawyer in 1892. He assumed charge of Mr. Edison's patent law matters in 1897, which was the year after the pictures first reached the screen. Subsequently Mr. Dyer held many Edison posts, president of the National Phonograph Company, later Thomas A. Edison, Inc., general manager of the Edison Phonograph Works, president of the Bates Manufacturing company, general manager of the Edison Storage Battery, Motion Picture Patents Company, president General Film Company.

After February, 1914 Mr. Dyer withdrew from corporation offices and became a general patent expert. He invented the system of electrical recording for talking machines and the long playing record which has come to be better known more recently in its application to "talking books."

At the same time, George Kelly, former shipper who has been serving as booker temporarily, becomes a regular member of the booking staff, being assigned the Comerford-Publix circuit in upstate Pennsylvania and other accounts. Mr. Schwartz will be given the Harrisburg territory.

LETTERS FROM READERS

Holden on Selling the Screen

To Motion Picture Herald:

One of the most important pieces of copy ever published in the Herald is the story on page 29, in the May 31st issue, entitled: "Slump in Ticket Receipts Brings Exhibitors' Emergency Conference." This is good news, if true, to the extent that the entire country will be covered with these meetings. This is good news, yes, provided it has not arrived too late.

I have always been a great advocate of a system in this business whereby the theatres could be brought together to form associations or organizations in individual cities, for the purpose of handling situations such as the one which has arisen, the slump in business. The organizations that I have always wanted to see in existence were those in which exhibitors cooperated with one another in putting on institutional drives to sell motion picture entertainment to the people of this country. Had such organizations existed throughout the land, and had exhibitors, aided by producers, been selling movies to the people of these United States in the past few years, there would be no slump today.

But we have been too busy selling individual pictures. We have been too busy to give much thought to the numerous forms of competition which have been encircling our business for the past few years, radio heading the list. We have permitted the studios to allow their stars to appear on radio programs. Those programs have kept our patrons at home and have made them radio-minded to the extent that they no longer need the movies. There has been no protest, no vigorous protest to the studios, because there are no genuine exhibitor organizations in existence, organizations which give the "little" manager a chance to have his say and an opportunity to propose ideas beneficial to the great business which ours is. . . .

We know that movie entertainment is great entertainment. The Movie Quiz of a few years ago, despite the squawks on the part of a few selfish individuals, played a great part in awakening the public to movie entertainment, only there as no follow-up. The institutional ads which ran in newspapers throughout the country were good copy, and they were read by people who used to spend money for movie tickets. What the country needs, and could use right now, is a big dose of institutional advertising of this kind. . . .

No longer can we use the weak alibi that Hollywood is not turning out good pictures, because good pictures are available. Too frequently we think in terms of "A" and "B," and when we can find no better excuse we allow "C" to come into the picture. A few years ago the public didn't know anything about pictures that were graded "A" or "B." They knew only that movies afford good entertainment.

Every line of business, except the movie industry, engages in some form of institutional advertising. Now as never before we need some of this in our own business. An emergency is on, we are almost at war. There is plenty of money being spent for other things, as the surveys indicate. There is money available for the purchase of theatre tickets, if the industry as a whole can grasp the situation, get together and give this country a great and glorious institutional campaign which will sell movies, not one certain picture, but movies, to the people. I believe the results will warrant the expenditure.

How and where the money is to come from for such a campaign is something else. Such a campaign could be put on in the larger cities by organizing all the theatres into an association with the one purpose in mind, to sell movies to the people in their city, to put aside personal feelings and petty jealousies. If the theatres of any one given city would contribute a small amount of money each week to a central fund, that money would buy the institutional advertising so badly needed at this time. Get the people in the mood to go to the movies. Get them back into the habit. Sell them on the idea that now, as never before, they need good mental relaxation which the movies can provide, and at a reasonable price, too. United, this beloved industry of ours will stand for generations to come; divided we will fall.

CANADA ADMITS U.S. DISTRIBUTOR LOSSES, CUTS REMITTANCE TAX 5%

Levy Reduced to 10% After Profits Are Cut by Admission Tax and Attendance Drop; Projectionist Shortage Denied

Canada has reduced from 15 to 10 per cent the tax on remittances to the U. S. by film distributors, saving them $300,000 a year. The reduction was a concession to admitted losses by the distributors, and J. L. Ilsley, Finance Minister, phrased it this way:

"Practically all the companies supplying motion pictures to Canada now have a loss on their operations. This reduces the loss."

The Federal tax on remittances to film companies outside the country was originally two per cent. In 1939, it was raised to five per cent. April's budget made it 15 per cent.

Meanwhile, Canada's newly imposed 20 per cent theatre grosses tax is reducing theatre and film producer profits further; there is an attendance slump, the cause of which is currently assigned to the summer; W. P. Covert, of Toronto, international vice-president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and business agent of the city's projectionists Local 173, denies the country faces a projectionists' shortage; Famous Players Canadian circuit has further realigned its managerial personnel; and there is renewed agitation against Sunday film showings in New Brunswick.

Summer Decline Starts

The 20 per cent theatre grosses tax was expected to diminish first-run theatre business, increase neighborhood business. However, the annual summer receipts decline has begun, and observers are unable to say what part the tax is playing. They have noted no increase in attendance at smaller theatres.

Indignant argument has been advanced against the suggestion heard from the U. S. that a shortage of qualified projectionists is in prospect in Canada through the enlistment of operators in the armed forces for war service, the rebuttal being offered by W. P. Covert of Toronto, International Vice-President of the ATSE, and business agent of Toronto Operators Local 173.

An issue over the employment of projectionists developed only recently when the Ontario Government established its training school for operators at Toronto. Organized labor contended that the previous method of training apprentices in the booth under the eye of veteran projectionists was sufficient and also that more qualified men were not necessary because some 20 members of the Toronto Local were walking the streets of Toronto at the moment—with only the chance for a temporary relief job.

A semi-compromise was reached when Premier M. F. Hepburn assured the labor leaders that the move had been made in the interests of public safety during wartime because of the need for well-qualified operators—trained under direct government supervision—and when he restricted the number of candidates in the government school to 30, all of whom were required to pay a $100 tuition fee. Even then, the union operators argued that the school was a transgression of the rights of labor with respect to the apprenticeship system, as laid down in the statutes of the country. Mr. Covert has explained that enlistments of operators in the present war have been relatively light because the great majority of projectionists had grown up with the business and were above military age. Many of them had actually served in the last war but had been rejected for the current conflict. At the same time, the operators had offered their spare-time services to Canada's war department in any suggested capacity without recompense and a number of them have been working on moving picture equipment for camps as well as the repair of wireless units and other military apparatus of which they had knowledge.

TELEPHONE RATES DOWN JULY 10TH

Effective July 10th a reduction in long-distance telephone rates which, it is estimated, will save the public $14,000,000, was announced last week by the Federal Communications Commission in Washington. The motion picture industry is one of the largest telephone customers in the country.

James L. Fly, chairman of the commission, announced at the same time that the reduction, estimated at about 14 per cent to users of long-distance telephone and other long-line services, was brought about by "mutual agreement" between the agency and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

A net reduction of a quarter of a million dollars in telephone rates in the New England area will become effective July 1*st, as the result of new tariffs filed with the FCC by the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co.*

Famous Players Shifts Personnel

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation circuit has further re-arranged its managerial personnel, following the assumption, recently, of the presidency, by J. J. Fitzgibbons, who last week toured the company's Western Canada properties.

Robert Eves, manager of the Eglinton Theatre in Toronto, was promoted to district manager of the Toronto suburban houses. J. Rollins, assistant manager of the Eglinton, was made manager.

Dan Krendel, manager of the Capitol, Hamilton, was promoted to district manager of the new Western Ontario territory. Northern Ontario and Northern Quebec were added to the territory handled by Jack Arthur, who has been district manager at Kingston.

T. R. Tubman, manager of the Capitol, Ottawa, was appointed district manager for Eastern Ontario, including Brockville and Hull. Morris Sten will supervise the theatres in London, Chatham and Windsor, in addition to his downtown Toronto houses.

Robert S. Roddiek was appointed district manager for the Maritime Provinces with headquarters at Halifax.

Leaders of the Anglican Church in New Brunswick have been agitating again for prevention of Sunday film showings, criticizing the authorities for not exercising the laws against such showings.

Speakers at meetings of the New Brunswick Synod have urged that the provinces' attorney general should proceed over the heads of the civic bodies which may favor Sunday films.

Among the province's towns where Sunday showings occur regularly are Edmundston and St. Leonard, near the Maine border, and Perth-Andover.

Radio spot announcements and other tie-ins are in use in the Eastern provinces, with the high cost of radio time somewhat a deterrent. Using radio as a medium regularly, however, is the Capitol, St. John, New Brunswick. Other users are the Capitol, the Casino, the Family, and Community, all in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

There are radio stations, in the Eastern provinces, in the cities mentioned, and also in Sackville, Campbellton, and Fredericton, in New Brunswick; in Charlottetown and Summerside, on Prince Edward Island; in Yarmouth, Wolfville, and Sydney, in Nova Scotia; and in New Carlisle, Quebec.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation owns only one of these, CBA, Sackville.

War Effort Cooperation

Theatres in the Eastern sections of the country have been cooperating most actively with the war effort. Instances are the activities of the Community theatres, of the Franklin and Herschorn circuit, at Halifax and Yarmouth. At the Halifax theatre a boys' and girls' Community Club was formed, to salvage war materials. The children are asked to bring the items to a theatre receptacle. The basement of the house currently is storing about one and one-half tons of metals, paper, rubber, glass, leather, etc.

At the Yarmouth theatre, manager Al Foster has been offering war savings stamps for sale in the lobby, and has a daily and weekly tieup with local organizations, by which male and female members stand in the lobby, selling the stamps at 25 cents each.

Although Yarmouth's population is only 8,000, sales in three months totalled $400.

Montreal on Tuesday underwent its first blackout, termed by military authorities successful. It lasted 15 minutes, from 10:00 P.M. to 10:45 P.M.

Theatres issued "passout checks," but, checked later, said business was as usual. Several posted signs advertising their shows would continue despite the blackout.

The city's business sections were crowded by thousands who thrilled to "war" experience. Exhibitors there, and in outlying sections cooperated by dousing marquee and lobby lights.

Because in most cases evening shows begin at 8:00 P.M., the time selected for the trial was convenient for exhibition.

The blackout occurred only after months of planning and delay. Officers of the Civil Protection Committee flew in Air Force planes to observe.

Industrials Well Established

Toronto exhibitors, surveying showings of industrial films, have come to view them with some complacency, it is reported from that city this week. This is because, assertedly, the films have merely replaced the old-time speaker-demonstrator, and therefore are not a new hazard.

What the theatre proprietors do resent, however, is the generous amount of preview screenings of government propaganda films and semi-topical subjects at service clubs and conventions before such pictures are released to the theatres. One such film, dealing with life in Canada, was shown before a number of large gatherings in several cities as indicating the film work of the Dominion Government.

IN COURTS

BMI Not Affected by Supreme Court Decision

Broadcast Music, Inc., has circularized its affiliated publishing companies with a denial that the Supreme Court decision upholding the Florida and Nebraska state laws against ASCAP, might affect BMI's ability to serve these companies. According to the BMI statement, "The decision will in no substantial way affect either the structure or activities of BMI, which has already taken steps to comply with the provision of all State statutes applicable to it. The very premise upon which BMI was founded was that there should be an avoidance of all of the monopolistic features of ASCAP which have now been held to be illegal."

The letter concluded with the statement that BMI would continue to make available all of the music licensed by it for music users in each of the 48 states.

Theatre Suit Dropped

Grant Advertising Company in Chicago, has dropped its suit against several west coast theatres which have agreed to cancel personal appearances of Lew Valentine, formerly Dr. I. Q. on the Mars candy show, but still has a suit pending against Mr. Valentine to enjoin him from using the Dr. I. Q. name and capitalizing on the Mars show.

Carmen Theatre To Open

The Michigan supreme court has handed down a decision allowing Gorelick and Marshall to open the new Carmen theatre in Dearborn as soon as arrangements have been completed. A suit originally instituted asked the court to forbid the theatre from opening for four years under the terms of a contract with Joseph Stoia who brought the suit.

Dietrich Feared Nazis

Marlene Dietrich refused to act in a film produced in Italy, because she feared that the Italian Government would surrender her to the German Government, according to an answer filed by her in the United States district court to the $98,450 damage suit of Forrester Parant Productions, Inc. The plaintiff had claimed that the defendant had breached a contract made in October, 1938, to appear in a French film.

Pommer Contract Questioned

RKO has asked the California supreme court to interpret its contract with Erich Pommer, producer, who received notice of dismissal May 20th. Mr. Pommer is reported seriously ill, and the studio alleged that the contract, made in April, 1940, and renewed this year for another year, contained a clause stipulating that Mr. Pommer could be dismissed should he be unable to work.

Plagiarism Suit Filed

Ben Dolberg, a writer, has filed a suit in the Los Angeles superior court seeking $150,000 damages from Paramount and Wayne Morris alleging theft of his material in the picture "Quarterback."

Fox Grand Jury Continues Probe

The life of the Federal grand jury in Philadelphia which handed down the indictments in the William Fox conspiracy case was extended indefinitely by Judge Guy K. Bard, of the federal district court, at the request of U. S. Attorney General Gerald A. Gleeson. The grand jury returns to its duties on June 16th. Asked whether the jury would actively resume its inquiry into the affairs of retired U. S. Circuit Court Judge J. Warren Davis and Morgan S. Kaufman, the Attorney General said, "I would rather not discuss that right now."

The trial of Judge Davis and Mr. Kaufman ended in disagreement of the jury on May 29th. A federal official has disclosed that there was little chance that a second trial would be held in July, as sought by Government attorneys. The official said the trial of the two men, charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the United States, to which charges William Fox, bankrupt film executive, pleaded guilty, would undoubtedly not be tried until September.

It was pointed out that while the regular district court term started on Monday, June 9th, and would last for three weeks, it would be impossible to try the William Fox case during that period because Judge Robert N. Pollard, assigned especially to the case by Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes, would not be able to sit here next month. Although it would be possible to call the trial for July or August, rather than waiting for the September term, observers said the procedure was most unlikely.

Circuit Court Reverses Alaska Jury Decision

The ninth United States circuit court of appeals in Portland, Ore., reversed an Alaska jury which had awarded a judgment of $55,194 to W. D. Gross, theatre operator, against Electrical Research Products, Inc.

The manufacturer of sound equipment licensed their product in Mr. Gross' theatres in Juneau and Ketchikan. It declared that he didn't pay for customary inspection and adjustment. Mr. Gross replied that he never agreed to make such payments. The company removed the equipments, and Mr. Gross sued for damages. Two juries found in his favor for damages of $55,194 on his representation that the loss had crippled his show business.

The decision of the higher court was 2 to 1 against Mr. Gross. Justice Francis Garrecht observed in dissent that the case had been tried twice and two juries had found in favor of the theatre manager.

Auerbach Sues for Damages

A suit for $15,805 damages was filed in the New York supreme court by Joseph Auerbach against Grand National Pictures, Ltd., charging the defendant with failing to pay a loan. According to the complaint Mr. Auerbach made a loan of £3,500 to Grafton Films, Ltd., and Isidore Goldsmith in 1939 and Grand National took over the obligation in 1940.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Associated British Film Producers

LET GEORGE DO IT: George Formby—Yes, George did it alright; he brought everybody in, even though we had a heat wave.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Columbia

ADAM HAD FOUR SONS: Ingrid Bergman, Warner Baxter, Susan Hayward, Fay Wray—Played this to fair business when doubled with "Blondie Goes Latin." This is an extremely well-made serious drama that covers a long period of time in a small amount of film. They could do that more often. Susan Hayward almost steals the show as the old meanie. Helen Westly is excellent in a small part. They should enjoy it if you can get them in. Some of my folks were waiting for it, but too many were not. Running time, 81 minutes. Played May 30-31.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

BLONDIE GOES LATIN: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms, "Daisy"—A lot of music and some new angles make this one of the best Blondies yet. Comments here declared that the Blondies had improved. Business was only fair when doubled with "Adam Had Four Sons." Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 30-31.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

BLONDIE HAS SERVANT TROUBLE: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake—Ah, just fair.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

FIVE LITTLE PEPPERS IN TROUBLE: Edith Fellows, Dorothy Ann Seese—Double featured this with Pastor Hall and it made a swell combination; in fact, they were both good shows. Drama in the one and laughs in the other. Well liked by all who came. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 17-18.—H. D. Furnice, Casey Theatre, Casey, Iowa. Rural and small town patronage.

I MARRIED ADVENTURE: Mrs. Martin Johnson —A good show for the kind, a picture of wild animals in Africa. More kids turned out for this than grown-ups. They seemed to like it. Just average business on it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 21.—H. D. Furnice, Casey Theatre, Casey, Iowa. Rural and small town patronage.

PENNY SERENADE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant—The best picture from this company this season. Cary Grant is swell and deserves Academy award for his work in this one. SUBMARINE ZONE (ESCAPE TO GLORY): Pat O'Brien, Constance Bennett—A very fine program picture that didn't do the business we anticipated.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SUBMARINE ZONE (ESCAPE TO GLORY): Pat O'Brien, Constance Bennett—Failed us miserably at the box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TEXAS STAGECOACH: Charles Starrett, Iris Meredith—I'm tired of the same actors in Starrett's pictures, and so is the public. Why do they always star Iris Meredith for the woman lead? I don't believe she has been left out of one of his pictures since Starret has been in pictures. And what about the Sons of the Pioneers? Do something about it, Columbia! Running time, 59 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

WASHINGTON MELODRAMA: Frank Morgan, Kent Taylor, Ann Rutherford—One of the very best program pictures we have played this year. Good story that has suspense, music and well acted by the entire cast. Small town patronage.

HER FIRST ROMANCE: Edith Fellows, Wilbur Evans—Did not do any business on this. Fell below average but not the fault of the picture. This one is tops from Monogram. Rated by all trade papers and critics as a good one and it is. Had a school graduation and, of course, that did not help any. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 14.—H. D. Furnice, Casey Theatre, Casey, Iowa. Rural and small town patronage.

OLE SWIMMIN HOLE: Jackie Moran, Marcia Mae Jones—Good show. If Monogram would only make more pictures with good cast and stories I believe they would go places. This is the best I have run from them. Paramount

BEAU GESTE: Gary Cooper, Ray Milland, Robert Preston—Although this picture drags in spots, it is an excellent production. The length became boresome to many of our patrons. Running time, 114 minutes. TEXAS RANGERS RIDE AGAIN: John Howard, Ellen Drew—Excellent—you can always depend on Paramount to deliver the best in top Western product. Played on Saturday to an excellent business. Although not suitable for best days. Played April 26.—Fred C. Allen, Princess Theatre, Piedmont, Ala. Small town patronage.

THERE'S MAGIC IN MUSIC: Allan Jones, Susanna Foster—Look out. For music lovers only. Too much opera and too many walk-outs. Be careful where and when you play it as it will not draw or please. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 1-2.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray—Some liked it and some said it was not so good. It has no box office draw. The kids won't know what it's all about. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE of MOTION PICTURE HERALD

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

Well, What Are We Waiting For?

So the panic is on. Despite the new millions poured into defense payrolls, business shows little improvement, if any. In fact, in some situations right smack in the center of highest industrial expansion, grosses are leaner than they were last year at this time.

Everyone runs around wildly asking why. Hasty defenses and offenses are planned. Something must be done.

Sure, something must be done—something that should have been done long, long ago—something this corner has been shouting should have been done as far back as we can remember.

That "something" is to go back to the only thing that ever sold showbusiness: the selling of the theatre as entertainment, the selling of motion pictures and not a motion picture.

It hasn't been done since Mary Pickford was known as "Little Mary". In those days, folks came to the theatre because they were sold on "theatre". They were trained to expect a satisfying entertainment, whatever was on the bill—and were rarely disappointed.

Showmen were in showbusiness then. They sold what they had; and, folks, they sold it.

Today, the customers are passing up the theatre. There is competition. Sure, there is. Tough competition. And it can't be licked by taking larger ads or more 24-sheets. The sore goes much deeper. The cure is a long-time pull. The medicine is theatre entertainment. Infrequent doses of hit pictures are only temporary restoratives.

Why are people with much more money today passing up the movies they patronized last year when folding money was rare? You take your reason. We'll give ours—and it's a cinch.

The bird with a short bankroll can always dig up enough change to kill an afternoon or evening at the theatre. That's about the only place he can afford to go.

The same bird on a fat payroll wallows in dough. So he gives the finger to the good ole movie, buys a flock of new duds, gets his car out of hock or buys a new one, takes his girl out to dance and dine, where previously they held hands in the balcony. The family man tells the story with variations but the answer is the same. They all pass up the picture show.

Now, what contributes to this sad state. Mostly, that the industry has allowed the customers to lose the habit of theatre-going as an entertainment, has allowed names and trends to get control of the plant, has fallen down on the job of selling theatre first, last and always.

Oh, yes, things are being done, and more things will be done. Some ground will be recovered. But not today's grosses. We'll all get around to knowing that "habit" is the box-office field to cultivate. We'd better—or else. The Texas Interstaters are working on that right now.

In the news section of this issue there is a piece on the survey made by John Q. Adams, in conjunction with Bob O'Donnell, on how to bring back a goodly portion of the 32 million persons in the United States the recent Gallup Poll said were not going to the motion picture theatre. The Interstate survey disagrees with the Gallup findings in opining that the real reason that the folks have stopped coming is because they have lost the habit," that these people are lost to the theatre and will remain lost if we continue to pursue our present method of selling our attractions to the exclusion of any other medium". And get this:

"Our problem, therefore, in returning people to the theatre who classify as non-goers, calls for a new approach and new methods. They must first be imbued with a desire to attend the moving picture theatre before we can attempt to sell them a particular attraction on its individual merit."

We built a giant entertainment that intrigued millions. Then it was refined into a conventional business that chased 'em away, a retail business with about as much excitement and color, if not less, as is attached to a one-penny sale.

The showmen were purged. The merchants took over. They demanded a profit today and to hell with tomorrow.

Well, they got their profit "today". But here's tomorrow.

As it stands, you can't give the industry back to the Indians. The Indians won't take it. But the showmen will. And they'd better.

Round Table In Pictures

Manager Gilbert Josephson at the New York World Theatre admires lobby set-piece for "Information, Please". Theatreman provided patrons with score cards so that they could mark off their answers to the program's questions.

Fronts at the State, in Clovis, N. Mex., are distinguished for their planning and construction entirely by staff members of Russ Hardwick's personnel here illustrated by the expansive art work on "That Night in Rio". The Hardwick policy of encouraging his boys in this direction has built the theatre's reputation for ticket-selling displays.

Promoted by Manager Ansel Weinstein and Publicist Ray Malone for advance on "Great American Broadcast" at the New York RKO 58th Street was RCA equipment depicting progress of radio from 1923 up to date.

Promoting local transportation company, Hal Bishop for teaser on "Lady Eve" at the Capitol, in Winnipeg, plastered street cars with cards reading: "What Winnipeg needs is a good laugh. See 'Lady Eve', etc.

To enterprising theatremen, road construction means but one thing and that's a neat spot to do a little advertising, as witness Herman Addison's card for "Road to Zanzibar" at Schine's Oneonta, Oneonta, N. Y. "Detour. See . . . ", etc., called attention to picture's opening.

Army Promotions Aid 'Wings' Dates

As to be expected, Round Tablers have gone solidly for military tieins on "I Wanted Wings," especially in situations nearby to army camps, Gary Jaffa putting on a midnight preview at the Schine Avon, Watertown, N. Y., having as guests ranking officers at army cantonments. In advance, Jaffa arranged a special airshow directly over the public square at noon and also was able to offer free rides given to the first five people returning folders that were thrown from the planes while stunting over the town. The offer was advertised widely and so many of the heralds were brought in, that the theatre man gave passes in addition.

The recruiting slant was also recognized with the posting of picture one-sheets on "A" board in the area and recruiting units set up in the theatre lobby, where an army sergeant gave information to inquirers on the army flying cadet corps. Hooking the date to the national Piper Cub contest noted in the pressbook, the Schiner also made arrangements to distribute information on this through the Piper distributor at the local airport.

Flex Features Contests

In Syracuse, Manager Jack Flex tied in with the Herald-Journal on the Piper Cub contest for the date at Keith's, paper going heavily for art and features and entrants asked for 50-word statements on "Why I Want to Fly." The tiein hooked to leading flying schools at the airport. In addition to the main prizes of planes and flying courses, it was arranged that guest tickets were also awarded. To assure wide participation, Fox had entry blanks and heralds on the national contest distributed at Syracuse University and high schools of the city, cost of which was borne by the cooperating flying school.

Flex's air-conscious campaign had another newspaper promotion for an airplane model building contest with entries brought to the theatre for display, winners to receive cups for first and second prizes, all others receiving guest tickets. Third newspaper tiein had to do with a quiz contest based on questions dealing with army air corps. This was followed by a tiein on the women's page, spotlighting Veronica Lake, woman lead in the picture.

Mayor Proclaims Cadet Day

Direct flying tiein was obtained by promotion of Mayor Marvin to designate Saturday before opening as Army Cadet Day, with blowups of the Mayor's proclamation placed in front of the theatre. This brought cooperation of the recruiting office and mobile recruiting unit stationed in front of house. The unit also toured around the downtown district of the city each day to advertise the picture. Co-eds from the university, dressed in army blouses and caps acted as hostesses in the distribution of the circulars. Flex also obtained army flying equipment for lobby display and had a flight of Piper Cub planes over the city each day, plus the cooperation of army pursuit ships which were flown from Mitchel Field in New York to help celebrate the Cadet Day proclaimed by the Mayor.

"SAND" SET IN HARTFORD

Cutouts of Tyrone Power in toreador outfit and charging bull were planted on miniature stage set in lobby of Loew's Poli, in Hartford, Conn., as advance for Lou Cohen's date on "Blood and Sand". Floor of stage was covered with genuine sea sand, pennants, flags, bullfighters' red capes, etc., which were animated with electric fans. For lighting, Round Tabler used fluorescent lamps of various colors such as gold, red, pink, blue, etc. Either side of stage carried cards with "thrill" copy.

Lobby Stunts Used for "Buck Privates" by Cohn

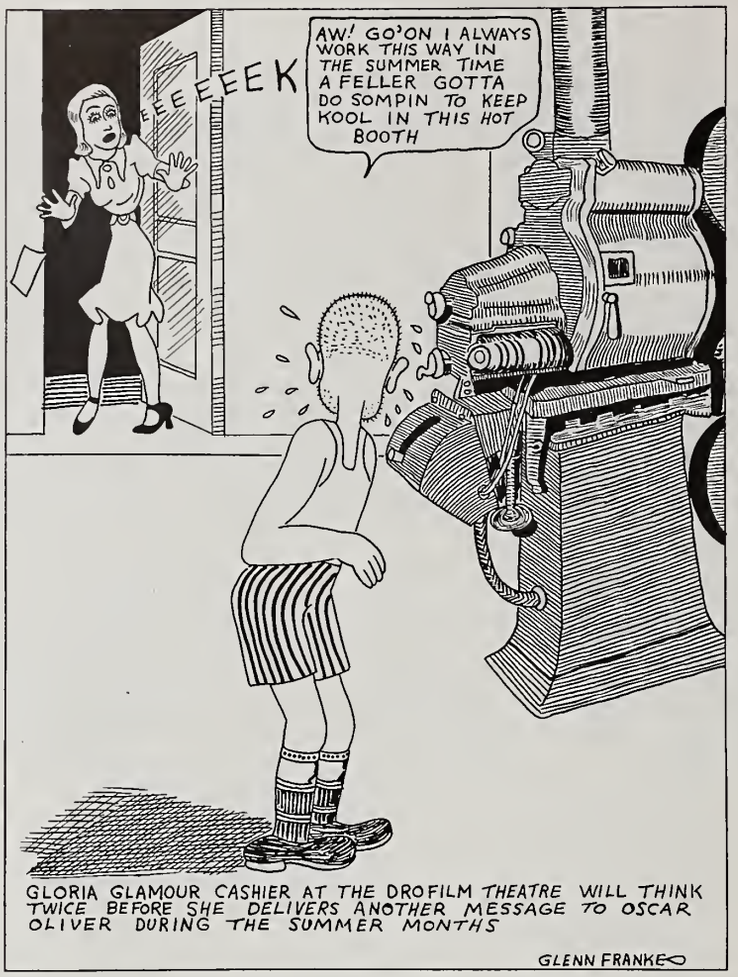
Promoting a radio victrola combination, Ben Cohn for his date on "Buck Privates" at the Frolic, in Chicago, planted it in his lobby ahead, playing hit tunes from the picture. In addition the Round Tabler also promoted potato chips which were put in imprinted cellophane bags and distributed to patrons by usher dressed in soldier uniform. Lad seated before cutout representing door of a U. S. Army kitchen also was peeling spuds. Pup tent with army paraphernalia was also set up in lobby.

For date on "Philadelphia Story," Cohn planted cutouts of Cary Grant and James Stewart in lobby with cutout figure of a headless woman standing in the center. Women patrons were invited to step up and have their pictures taken with the stars.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Merchants' Window Tieups Featured for "Boys Town"

Tying up drug stores, grocers, cafes, cigar stores, etc., Jimmy Redmond at the Bonham, in Fairbury, Neb., succeeded in having outserts with "Ziegfeld Girl" playdates wrapped around all packages of cigarettes sold at these spots in advance of opening. While for "Men of Boys Town," Jim tied up 12 merchants, each of whom featured a scene still in his window. Contest blanks were available at the stores, Fairbury News and the theatre, entrants required to fill in names of all stores carrying a still and submitting 25-word letter on what part of the newspaper they first turn to and why. Guest tickets were awarded in this connection.



For "Road to Zanzibar," Redmond distributed "Rib-Ache Relief Powder" in imprinted envelopes, directions reading: "Dissolve contents in a glass of warm water to relieve those laugh aches from your ribs after seeing," etc. These were placed at Chamber of Commerce, Rotary, Lions Clubs and other luncheons.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

DiPesa Directs "Love Crazy" Campaign to Cupid Victims

For the engagement of "Love Crazy" at Loew's State and Orpheum, in Boston, publicist Joe DiPesa supplemented the national campaign with cooperative ads, the serialization of the story was placed in one paper while a contest was featured in another. Contest provided cash and tickets for best letters on the silly things done by people in love. Joe also arranged for two Harvard boys to eat their dinners backwards in a college restaurant, as an indication of what "Love Crazy" folks will do. Couples taking out marriage licenses on premiere day were extended special invitation from Myrna Loy to see the film. Statement was obtained from an eminent psychiatrist as to the most common symptoms of love crazed persons, this good for break in dailies.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS

Another incident in the tumultuous career of the fabulous Marquee Mike, as depicted here by his creator, Glenn Franke of Cheviot, Ohio.

Prickett Celebrates Theatre Anniversary

Promotions were rampant when Ken Prickett recently put on the first anniversary party at the El Rancho, in Victoria, Tex., with the first 100 women receiving roses from local florist. Tieup with baker brought a three-foot birthday cake; contest angle was brought in here with the cake going to person coming closest to guessing correct weight. Furniture store came through with a bedroom suite which was displayed in window week ahead with appropriate tiein copy. To help build the party, Prickett had his art shop further camouflage an old model jalopy, which was appropriately bannered and toured streets ahead, car was also given away in connection with a lucky number drawing. All theatre ads carried anniversary copy signed by the theatreman, and special lobby display was created for the occasion.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Mayor Aids Lambert At Theatre Reopening

For the remodelling of the Badger, in Racine, Wis., Stan Lambert started his campaign two weeks ahead, promoting special man-on-the-street broadcast in front of theatre over WRJN, interviewing celebrities who were invited to opening. The mayor officially opened the theatre with ribbon-cutting ceremony and permission was received from city officials to decorate light poles with shields congratulating the theatre on its opening. Kiltie Drum and Bugle Corps of the YMCA paraded down main street and serenaded in front of house and other stunts included usual bill posting, mailing lists, advance newspaper ads, etc. Extra spot announcements were landed on Lambert's own radio program "Through the Hollywood Lens." Assisting on the opening were George Ross, manager of the Rialto and Andrew J. Kelly, of the Badger.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Kraus' Newsreel Stunt

A sock campaign was accorded the premiere national release of the newsreel featuring the North Dakota quadruplets, by Ed Kraus at the Fargo, in Fargo, theatreman building an entire false front for the occasion done in baby colors of pink and blue with appropriate sales copy and tear sheets from newspapers carrying headlines and photos. Featured in the newsreel are scenes in the editorial rooms of the Fargo Forum showing staff member writing the story of the birth of the quads, this good for extra breaks in the paper together with art.

Find "John Doe" For Cash Prizes

Much excitement in Cleveland for the recent date on "Meet John Doe" at the Warner Hipp was occasioned by rewards of cash and theatre tickets on a tiein with the local News, wherein readers were invited to produce the man they believed typified Cleveland's John Doe. Contest was opened to all, with males allowed to nominate themselves and wives to nominate their husbands, if they wished.

Contest was built around answers to 14 questions, plus reason why entrant thought that his nominee was qualified. Questions had to do with hobbies, lodge memberships, preferred recreations, education, insurance and bank accounts, budgeting of income, subscriptions to daily newspapers, whether or not entry had a family doctor, telephone, owned his own house, had children, etc. For further buildup, merchants and other tieins were suggested, such as having "John Doe" paged at different hotels, etc.

The same idea was adapted by Bill Harwell for the date at Warner's, in Mansfield, Ohio, hookup made as part of newspaper tiein, which did the trick for the Round Tabler.

Ireton Ties to Waitresses

For the date at the Uptown, in Toronto, Glenn Ireton sought the city's "John Doe" to tie in with waitresses in hotels and restaurants. Sheets containing 36 questions addressed to the waitresses were distributed widely, touching on all phases of male patron likes and dislikes, peculiarities and other means which waitresses were able to ascertain through their daily contacts with diners. In addition, entrants were invited to write 50 words on what would be their idea of a typical John Doe. Judges were movie critics of the Toronto papers with entrants asked to turn in their filled-in questionnaires to cashier or manager of the restaurant to which they were attached. Guest passes were given in this connection.

Philadelphians who made it their business to be courteous were beneficiaries in a stunt arranged by Ev Callow for the date at the Stanley, Philadelphia. Engineered with the local Daily News, over one hundred and fifty dollars in cash went to the city's most polite citizens. Mr. John Doe gave away twenty-five dollars each day for the most courteous acts and while making the downtown section distributed imprinted cards telling about it. Paper ran daily accounts on the adventures encountered by Mr. Doe, also photos of those winning the courtesy money. As part of the project, the daily also ran house ad "Meet John Doe and His Newspaper."

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Rennie's "Liberty" Quiz Stunt

A quiz program, repeated several times before the premiere, and tying in with the picture, was one of the highlights of the "Land of Liberty" campaign put over by Orville Rennie, Fort, Rock Island, Ill. A man dressed as Uncle Sam, and appropriately bannered, paraded the streets.

Theatremen Make Merchant Tieins

Citywide merchandise tieins which utilized the theatre for central point of interest are recent stunts, reports Joe Samartano at Loew's Palace, in Meriden, Conn., tying in with the local Businessmen's Association for giveaway of over six hundred dollars of nationally advertised merchandise. The promotion put on for four nights featuring drawings on the stage with each of the merchants issuing coupons with sales, the theatre giving the coupons with admissions.

Samartano made a prominent display of the various prizes in the lobby, the stores coming in with sizable advertising and newspapers featuring the event with page one boxes. Newspaper photos of the lobby were also part of the campaign with further attention called to the occasion by the dailies with banner streamers atop the mastheads.

In Erie, Pa., H. T. Rastetter at the Warner found it profitable to do something similar on what he termed an Electric Range Review in the lobby to feature his campaign on "The Great Lie." The drive was highlighted here by a three-day newspaper contest, classified ad tieup, etc., which brought plenty of additional free newspaper space. Rastetter also had a gratis serialization of the story published in local tabloid. In addition, paper plugged the theatreman's forthcoming attractions, with readers and art.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Teaser Stunts Aid Gillon

The reportedly hard-to-crack local paper came through for Francis Gillon at the LeClaire, in Moline, Ill., by using the Saturday Evening Post story on Preston Sturgess and tying it in with the "Lady Eve" date. Teaser stunt employed by Gillon consisted of placing guest tickets to the show under various seats throughout the theatre week ahead.

For "Footsteps in the Dark," Francis planted cutout footprints in lobby and stencilled ones on sidewalks leading to boxoffice with copy reading "Follow these footsteps to a riot of mystery and comedy."

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Members Report On Faint Checks

The faint check idea used effectively on horror shows is given further distribution currently on campaigns by members, Harold Thomas at the Fulton, in Fulton, Ky., featuring the slant with his program on "Mad Doctor" and "Monster and the Girl." Headed appropriately, the check, about card size, leaves room for name, address and city with copy requesting that patrons fill in the information and keep the card where it will be easily accessible if and when the patron passes out during the showing of the picture.

The same idea is similarly reported on by Pat Notaro at the Columbia, in Sharon, Pa., for his triple horror bill consisting of ghost show on stage and pictures. In addition, the Round Tabler dressed a man in Frankenstein attire and had him cover downtown area distributing the faint cards.

INTERSTATERS DIG UP PROFITS IN KID SHOWS

Suggestions to Build Juvenile Business Compiled by Besa Short for All Occasions

Kid shows in Texas bear importantly upon the boxoffice, as noted by the evidence of these activities among Interstate circuit managers gathered in manual form by Besa Short, short subjects head, who compiles these aids for the information of the Hoblitzelle-O'Donnell theatremen seeking added ways and means to attract the juvenile trade.

"The exictement of Christmas can be carried to a mild degree throughout the year by giving small things away each week at the Kid Show Hour," Besa suggests, in advising tieups appropriate to the season and occasion, for balloons, kites, cola drinks, ice cream, merchandise, etc., with manufacturers, department stores and bakeries. "There is always some merchant willing to take advantage of this opportunity for advertising," the short subjects head finds.

Bakers Found Cooperative

Among instances of tieins with sponsors is the free show effected by Bill Hollums, at the Capitol, in Austin, wherein a bakery expanding its facilities was hooked up to advertise that all the local youngsters were invited to be the merchant's guests at the Saturday morning show. Over 1,700 kids responded, the baker paying five cents a child. Later in the season, children were admitted for five bread wrappers a piece, for which Hollums received 10 cents from the baker. Sponsor also supplied free cakes on a birthday club tiein.

In Vernon, Texas, Jimmie Allard at the Vernon, takes bread wrappers for admissions and invites the youngsters to write jingles about the sponsor's products for cash prizes. Six wrappers allow each youngster to attend the kid show, and ten wrappers makes one eligible for the contest. At the Waco, in Waco, C. H. Stewart ties in a baker for a Saturday morning broadcast from the stage, using local amateur talent from among the audience. Stewart wisely acts as M.C. so that the kids get to know him, and the program, running a half-hour, has brought cards from miles away.

Amateur Shows Urged

Theatre-radio program sponsored by a bottler does the trick for George Tucker at the Kimo, in Albuquerque, N. Mex., the sponsor paying for the radio time and including spot announcements of the shows throughout the week. Every four weeks, the child bringing in the largest number of bottle tops of the company's product, receives a prize awarded from the stage. In Dallas, Louie Charninsky has many tieups for his kid shows at the Capitol, including a giveaway of ice cream bricks each week during the season, in exchange for lobby credits. Louie offers ice cream cones and a special admission price between certain hours on his slowest day of the week for increased grosses.

Local kid talent shows are also urged, based on the successful experiences of Interstaters who report their amateur doings. Heading the circuit list in this direction is L. J. "Schine" Mason, McAllen, Texas, City Manager, who has had a Mickey Mouse show running since 1932. Mason secured 10 merchants to pay for uniforms for officers, membership cards, heralds, badges, ads, etc. The McAllen youngsters pay only five cents for admission which allows them to bring a parent. Each week, a complete stage show is put on in charge of a local woman who has the close cooperation of schools, dance and dramatic studios. In addition to the local talent, short subjects and a serial are included.

Book Tickets Underwrite Tickets

There are 10 officers who open the show, conduct the club yells, report the club creed and with color bearer out front sing the national anthem. Stage show follows with three song reels which the youngsters sing before the shorts start. Charity promotions such as potato show are held, with each youngster bringing a spud for the Salvation Army. Prizes are given for the largest spuds. Toy matinees are also put on successfully with the cooperation of the local Goodfellows.

The most successful of the kid shows, according to Besa, are those where the managers take care to book the shorts their youngsters would like to see, with equal consideration given to the feature showings. At the Arcadia, in Harlingen, Tex., Manager Jack King worked out an effective club plan wherein the entire season was underwritten by the sale of book tickets. King found this an excellent way to win the approval of parents since he took care to book only those attractions suitable for the youngsters.

Seniors Put On Kid Matinees

The usual kid stage games are widely used by the Interstaters and particularly as reported by Russell Rindy, of the Eastwood, in Houston, who puts on about every variety of comedy games, spelling bees and quizzes. And in Denton, J. P. Harrison usually stops traffic with a greased pole contest for the aspiring juniors. Special days are also popular, Will Winch of the Pershing, in El Paso, putting on an annual "Kids Matinee" for high school graduates. The students come dressed as children and parade in costume to the theatre for prizes, to signify their last fling at childhood.

Besa also suggests a circus idea to go with an All-Short Show, the subject matter in keeping and the personnel dressed in circus costumes. Doorman is in barker or ringmaster dress, ushers garbed as clowns, cashier as equestrienne, with ticket window disguised with giant clown head, open mouth revealing cashier. Pink lemonade, peanuts and popcorn are on sale in the lobby, with sides of screen draped in circus tent material. Manager acts as Ringmaster and announces the various animal and other shorts on the bill.

Encouragement is given the circus idea by the great number of available subjects on hand, the Interstate department head notes.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Kiddie fashion show proved successful for Henry Eytinge at Warner's Grange, in Philadelphia with three merchants tied in and supplying complete outfits, entertainment, etc. Boys and girls from the vicinity were invited to take part in the show, modelling the latest in juvenile haberdashery. All cooperating merchants carried displays in their windows as did Eytinge in theatre lobby, in addition to plugging the event through trailers, programs and ads. Gifts were promoted for each child attending the show and movies were taken of the occasion as a come-on for a return bid following week when they were shown.

Whispering teaser campaign was instituted by John Hamilton on behalf of "The Great Lie" at the Brandon Theatre, in Brandon, Vt. MAKES CIVIC CONTACTS WITH TIN-CAN MATINEE

Still quite new in Elkhart, Ind., Chick Tompkins, Indiana-Illinois city manager, worked himself deeper into the good graces of the city fathers with a tin-can matinee at the Elco, in cooperation with the local Clean-Up Week. Ten cans were good for admission, with prizes for the longest string, largest and smallest cans.

Seven city dump trucks were needed to cart away the returns, Chick writes, with first prize winners bringing along a string over 200 feet long. Police detail was required to handle traffic as the youngsters ran their long strings up the street to the theatre.

With the booking of "Discoveries of Science" into the Strand, in Suffern, N. Y., Manager Theodore Friedman effected a tie-up with local dairy company whereby they distributed heralds with every bottle of milk delivered, in addition groceries using that brand of milk were also supplied with the heralds. Dairy also took a seven inch ad plugging the pictures and balance of show and urging all to attend. Milk trucks were appropriately bannered and entire cost was met by dealer.

Tying in with Station WWNY, Gary Jaffa at Schine's Avon, in Watertown, N. Y., has succeeded in having their children's program put on the theatre stage each Saturday from 11 to 11:30. During the course of the show, current attractions are given excellent pugs. Another gag Jaffa employs consists of using promoted radio which is turned into music and news broadcasts daily from one-thirty to two to take care of the lull between the time that the doors are open and starting time of show. Stunt has met with favorable comment.

NEW DATES ANNOUNCED WITH "HIT WAVE" TITLE

Seeking about for an unusual way to spring the drive, Francis Gillon struck upon "Hit Wave" to tab his coming top dates at the Tri-States LeClaire, in Moline, Ill. The title was carried on special black velour panel and special 24-sheet with panels for the hit pictures.

Three weeks ahead, Gillon ran one and two-column underline slugs in his ads reading "There's A Hit Wave On the Way" and day ahead, opened with a smash featuring recommendation of widely-read local critic.

Five days ahead of "Lady Eve" at the Junction, in Junction City, Kans., Johnny Sanders promoted local grocer for entire window display of apples together with three-sheet cutout of Fonda and Stanwyck. Special hand painted display board on mezzanine floor of theatre featured scene stills and heralds were distributed in town and trade territory. "Road to Zanzibar" brought an atmospheric lobby with floor covered with fern leaves and copy "They bungle through the jungle and all you do is laugh." ▽

For the second anniversary of the Grant Theatre, in Georgetown, Ohio, Harry Abbott went about landing a four-page supplement in which photos of the interior were featured, together with plugs for forthcoming attractions and the theatre management. Contest angle was also covered through silhouette figure of Jean Arthur, with tickets going to those drawing best outfits. Front page break was also accorded the owners with congratulatory message.

Contests aided Jack Cotter on "Nice Girl" at the Colonial, in Erie, Pa., one of which was a coloring stunt for kids with passes to best entries. Tieup with local paper on its bargain page brought list of names among ads, tickets going here, too, to those properly identifying themselves. Imprinted paper napkins were placed at best restaurants and classified ad contest was another feature. For "Blondie," Cotter had a four-column tieup ad below a promotion ad local paper used on Blondie's Blessed Event. In addition, a by line was used over the comic strip seven days ahead.

Reported as catching on with his patrons are the informal piano programs held by Ed May at the Russell, Maysville, Ky., during the 15-minute period from the time the boxoffice opens and the program starts. May says patrons are now making requests for their favorite tunes to be played and so popular has the stunt become that he intends continuing it indefinitely. It also gives him an excellent opportunity to plug hits from forthcoming attractions.

Four pretty girls, carrying portable phonographs, were employed by Ed Fitzpatrick, Loew's Poli, Waterbury, Conn., during his "Ziegfeld Girl" campaign. The girls stopped at busy street corners to play records of the songs from the musical.

WHAT THE BOYS ARE DOING—IN SHORT

The Women's S. P. C. A. cooperated with Joe Nevison in connection with the short, "The Great Meddler." Written on the organization's letterheads announcements calling attention to the picture's opening at the Bromley, in Philadelphia, were mailed to all members. For his lobby, Nevison used a blowup of double page article on the short with scene stills taken from National Numake Review and incorporating photos of animal routine at the S. P. C. A. Current issue of the Mailogram, mailed by United Charities to 1,000 persons interested in humane work, carried a resume of the story of the picture with playdates, etc.

Still going strong are the fashion mats planted in local dailies by Stan Andrews at the Capitol, in Guelph, Ontario, more recent being cut of Wendy Barrie in "The Saint in Palm Springs" with details of her costume. Same fashion slant was used for "Adam Had Four Sons" with photos of Susan Hayward. Here, too, tinted heralds were widely distributed house-to-to-house and at all downtown stores.

Effective co-op window was promoted by Paul Klingler at the Rialto, in Lewistown, Pa., for opening on "Ziegfeld Girl," featuring models dressed in costumes worn by the girls in the picture, background consisting of blowup of one of the portraits executed by well-known artists. Appropriate tiein cards were also displayed.

Created by Joe Samartano, manager and Herbert Smimansky, artist, was the "Ziegfeld Girl" lobby display covering the entire alcove. Center piece was hand drawn and flanked on either side by scene stills of cast, entire display was indirectly lighted.

Admitting that he swiped the original idea from C. E. White of the Carolina, who had used it for another picture, Fred Reid at the State, Hendersonville, N. C., for "Gone With the Wind" converted entire front of his house into a replica Tara. With cutout figures of the stars standing on upper balcony and giant cutout title letters across roof, Reid says the front attarcted considerable attention and further credits his artist, John Hollingsworth, with its execution.

STAGES BIG PREMIERE FOR LOCAL FEATURE

As an added stimulant for business at the L&J Georgia, in Athens, Ga., Frank Bickerstaff, city manager, recently tied in with an Indianapolis commercial producer to make a short of the city's activities and prominent citizens including a college baseball game. Run in color and shown five times daily, for two days, the added attraction brought the anticipated grosses and plenty of publicity.

Frank staged the opening in real Hollywood style, on opening day having the Mayor, city officials and prominents place their handprints in fresh cement box at the theatre, a la Grauman's Chinese. Extra interest in the film was had by Bickerstaff, acting as commentator.

With the assistance of his doorman Murray Keillor, eye-arresting front was featured by Leslie V. Campbell at the Strand, in Trail, B. C., for "North West Mounted Police." Covered entirely with compo board, sides were covered with scene stills which were set against a painted North West background.

Various co-op ads have been promoted recently by Pat Notaro at the Columbia, in Sharon, Pa., latest of which was for "Affectionately Yours." Local jeweler came through on this, with theatre featuring a card in lobby with scrambled letters. To those spelling them out correctly and presenting solution to the jeweler, guest tickets were awarded. Cooperating merchant featured the contest in window and store in addition. Another tieup recently effected by Notaro consists of arrangement with Station WPIC, whereby they run transcriptions of pictures day ahead of opening. Program is gratis and carries plenty of plugs for forthcoming attractions.

KALBERER STAGES MARBLE TOURNEY

Goodwill builder and recently arranged by Round Tabler A. J. ("Kal") Kalberer of Switow's Indiana Theatre, in Washington, Ind., was his second annual marble tourney through cooperation of local Recreation Department. Twenty-eight youngsters representing 17 counties matched their skill at park to decide the champion of the district.

Stunt was given further impetus through cooperation of Mayor Smith, who made a brief address to the children. Luncheon was promoted for the contestants and papers came through with generous breaks.

Contests highlighted Jack Flex' "Road to Zanzibar" campaign at the Keith, in Syracuse, one of which offered cash and tickets to those submitting correct list of pictures in which Lamour had appeared according to art layouts in paper; second contest required contestants to name new type of sarong worn by Lamour. All juke boxes around town featured hit tunes from the picture, weekly Sunday morning broadcast carried over WFBL from stage of theatre gave plenty of mention to the picture and other programs over WOLF also plugged hit tunes, while fashion editor used Lamour as her subject of discussion on a noon program.

Guest tickets were awarded by Mrs. M. M. McCartney, Jefferson Theatre, Punxsutawney, Pa., to those drawing the best likeness of characters in "Men of Boys Town" from stills of the production.

Joan Crawford as she has appeared in starring pictures since "Our Dancing Daughters"—a layout headed "Evolution of the Crawford Face"—was good for a quarter-page display in the Atlanta Constitution as one of the publicity highlights of Eddie Pentecost's campaign for the showing of "A Woman's Face" at Loew's Grand.

A "chain telephone" stunt proved highly successful as part of the "Ziegfeld Girl" campaign put over by Irving Dubinsky, Missouri Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo. Theatreman had each member of his staff telephone 10 friends about the picture, with these friends in turn calling still others.

Old jalopy appropriately lettered toured the streets of Norfolk ahead of Roscoe Drissel's "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary" date at Loew's State, accidently breaking down, where it would attract the most attention. Drissell also sent the car across the river to Portsmouth bringing students over from local schools to attend the picture during run.

On "Chad Hanna" at Long-Griffiths' El Rancho, in Victoria, Tex., Ken Prickett borrowed running gears of a wagon from an implement dealer and the boys in the theatre art department then proceeded to lengthen the wheel base and build a compo-board top for it, with 24-sheet. This was then painted red and trimmed in gold in true circus fashion, small canopy was put on back ticket wagon style. During the street bally, concealed recorder played circus music on calliope. For additional buildup, wagon was parked in front of theatre when not touring.

To give his lobby the great-outdoors atmosphere, Harold Winget ahead of "Arizona" at the Criterion, in Sapulpa, Okla., promoted loan of blankets, harnesses, saddles, ten-gallon hats, fancy ropes, etc., which were set against background of giant blowup of Jean Arthur. In addition, cooperating merchant came through with an ad on Jean Arthur hats.

Amateur Shows Click for Brien

Geared up well in advance of Holy Week to keep grosses up during that period, Lige Brien at Warner's Belmar, in Pittsburgh, fortified himself by effecting a 52-merchant tiein running for three weeks in his local paper on behalf of an amateur show idea with the finals ending in Holy Week. The merchants were represented in a series of full page co-op ads, banner heads calling attention to Brien's amateur show, with merchandise offered in the preliminaries and cash for the final prizes. The promotion brought Lige five front page writeups, six full pages of ads, prizes amounting to over one hundred dollars and extra consolation gifts for runnersup. In addition gifts were also promoted for the judges.

Extra incentive was given the winning amateur by arranging for him to broadcast over the most popular radio program of that kind in the territory. Other exploitations were employed by the Warnerman to keep interest high with the result, he reports, of business more than double for the same period last year.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Soft Drink Tiein Conveys "Convoy"

With "Convoy" booked in for a week's run at the Fox Esquire, Kansas City, Manager Joe Redmond set about to sell the date by hooking his newspaper advertising to the general interest in the convoy situation. However, just before the opening, an unexpected opportunity arrived to plug the date through the British background with a new soft drink just placed on the market and named "Tru-Ade." The promoters working out the plug line, "True Aid for Britain and Tru-Ade for Kansas City," stressed the cooperation with a float resembling an army tank which made the main streets advertising the Esquire date. Tied to this was an auto co-op, with a string of new model cars, also bannered, and following the float about town, i. e., the convoy and the fleet.

For further buildup at the theatre, a stand was set up where the soft drink was dispensed free of charge to patrons, some thousands of the bottles being distributed. Street stunt that attracted had two men dressed as British gob and naval officer strolling the downtown streets.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Egan Ties Merchant to "Road"

Tying up Kraft Cheese agency, Pete Egan for his date on "Road to Zanzibar" at the Palace, in Calgary, Alberta, succeeded in having their fleet of trucks bannered with Crosby copy, in addition to grocers featuring displays plugging the picture. Local shoe store ran an ad with cut of Dorothy Lamour on theatre page of both papers, copy reading: "Road to Zanzibar at the Palace. Road to Blank Shoes is the road to Canada's smartest footwear." Numerous other windows were promoted with music stores plugging hit tunes from the picture.

Dailies Aid Fitzpatrick On "Come Live with Me"

Newspaper coverage was ample for "Come Live With Me" at Loew's Poli, Waterbury, Conn., through the efforts of Ed Fitzpatrick, who planted a three-day contest consisting of two columns of art on Lamarr and Stewart. Contestants were asked to supply dialogue for tickets. A reported first was a pictorial strip in local high school paper while a special feature article in the Democrat coincided with opening day, this stressed the screen debut of Adeline de Walt Reynolds. Co-op ads were promoted, as were numerous windows, one of which being a display of Hedy Lamarr fashions with life size standee of the star.

Department store dummy dressed to resemble Lamarr was wheeled through the main streets ahead and another used for lobby display. Spot announcements were landed on local news broadcasts on both WATR and WBRY when Stewart was drafted into the army, announcements plugging his appearance in the picture.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Addison Ties School Band To "Strawberry Blonde"

Opening shot of Herman Addison's "Strawberry Blonde" date at the Schine Oneonta, Oneonta, N. Y., was classified ad run a week ahead in which the theatreman made a search for a local "Barbershop Quartet." Boys later were located and used on stage two nights along with concert presented by city school band at their benefit show. Street ballys included old model car appropriately bannered, as was tandem bike, park bench was set in lobby and reserved for "Strawberry Blonde," while boxes covered with pressbook covers were planted in front of theatre. Promoted kisses from "the" blonde were distributed through five and ten tieup and numerous windows carried picture copy, scene stills, etc.

For "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary," Addison used the "perfect boss" contest in commercial classes at high and junior high schools, while an old battered jalopy was lettered and covered streets ahead and during run. Merchants ad on back cover of heralds paid entire cost of printing and distribution, and department store devoted window to stills of Ann Rutherford and Kathryn Grayson in latest styles with tiein copy.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Novel Lobby Displays Featured by Reisinger

Promoting circulars and photos of Missing Girls, Howard Reisinger at Loew's Poli-Bijou, in New Haven, mounted them on a 40 by 60 frame in his lobby as teaser advance on "City of Missing Girls." Another lobby attractor was constructed for "That Night in Rio" which consisted of giant cutouts of Miranda, Ameche and Faye, which were planted atop lobby doors with copy.

Since Frank Morgan plays the role of a spieler in connection with slot machines, in "Wild Man of Borneo," Howard promoted use of some of these for his lobby, proceeds of which went to local Fresh Air Fund. Donation brought breaks in paper which prominently mention title, playdates, etc. Another stunt was board in front of boxoffice listing 25 numbers. Barker and usher distributed tickets to all passersby; those receiving numbers corresponding to those listed were awarded guest tickets.

New York Circuits Promote Programs

Radio-theatre exchange publicity tieins in vogue outside the metropolitan area are now effected in New York by the Skouras and RKO theatres, the former with WINS and the latter with WMCA.

WINS will broadcast news of the feature attractions in the Skouras houses three times daily, Monday through Saturday. In exchange, the theatres will show two 45-second trailers supplied by the station. First trailer informs patrons that programs can be ascertained by listening to the broadcasts while the second calls attention to the station's place on the dial, copy for the latter to be changed monthly.

On the WMCA deal with RKO, for 48 houses in the metropolitan area, trailers will also play a part and lobby credits given. Broadcasts to be heard week-day nights will be made up of a movie gossip program entitled "Mr. Hollywood," featuring the station's drama critic.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Contests Featured on "Ziegfeld Girl" Dates

One of the highlights of John Osborne's "Ziegfeld Girl" campaign at the Court, Wheeling, West Va., was a search for a local Ziegfeld Girl conducted with the cooperation of a leading department store. Ads and window displays in the store preceded the finals of the contest held in the theatre. Winners were awarded dresses they modeled as well as cash and guest tickets. Street car cards, bumper strips, window card displays and radio plugs rounded out the campaign.

While Joe Longo, Loew's State, Cleveland, held a special screening, attended by eight mayors of as many local Boys Town organizations, featured the "Men of Boys Town" campaign. The Mayor as well as clergymen, newspaper critics and radio editors also attended. Another highlight was a "Boy and His Dog" contest conducted by the local News. Hundreds of photographs were received and plenty of space given the contest by the paper. Cash prizes and guest tickets were awarded the winners.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Night Street Bally Attracts For Shannon on "Blackout"

Proving quite an attractor was Chuck Shannon's night street bally for "Blackout" at Warner's Whitehall, in Pittsburgh, consisting of man carrying large sign with title letters and followed by usher who played a flashlight on the sign for attention. Since Chuck's date coincided with the city's test Blackout, and he so advised the papers, nice breaks were accorded the opening.

For "Little Men" Chuck promoted 3,000 novelty cutouts of Elsie for distribution at his kiddie shows two weeks ahead. Also as suggested in the pressbook, animated display of the famed bovine was used for lobby display. Contest angle was brought in with offer of passes to those submitting best sketches of headgear for Elsie, papers running stories and plugging the opening generally.

Life and Love of Franz Schubert

Produced by Gloria Pictures. Producer, William Sekely. Associate producer, Douglas MacLean. Directed by Reinhold Schunzel.

SYNOPSIS

Franz Schubert (Alan Curtis) had endured many hardships to enable him to continue his music but one day he turns away from music and accepts a position as teacher of mathematics in a grade school in Vienna. Later, faced with a choice of giving up music for good or giving up his position, Schubert chooses to give up his position. It is the time when the Italian wars are raging, and men are being conscripted in Austria and shipped to fight for foreign royalty. Schubert refuses to go, and, aided by his friend, Poldi (Billy Gilbert), the coachman, escapes into Hungary.

He finds work on a sheep ranch and falls in love with the manageress, Anna (Ilona Massey). A ludicrous adventure with a duke and a countess (Binnie Barnes) ends in disgrace for Schubert and Anna, and when Schubert is sent back to Austria, she follows him. They are unsuccessful in obtaining a publisher for Schubert's music, so Anna goes to ask the help of the great Beethoven (Albert Basserman). Beethoven is entranced by the "Unfinished Symphony" and pledges his aid when the composition is finished.

Anna begs Schubert to finish the symphony as a birthday gift to her. He promises, but unknown to Anna, Schubert gives up his music again and secures a position once more as a teacher. On March 26, 1827, Anna's birthday, Poldi arranges a little surprise party. Schubert enters and announces that Beethoven is dead. Also the "Unfinished Symphony" has not been completed. Anna leaves him.

Schubert is filled with a desire to compose again. He sits down at the piano and the strains of the eternal "Ave Maria" resound. Schubert has returned to his music.

Comedy, Music

SYNOPSIS

Wolf J. Flywheel (Groucho Marx) is a private detective and bodyguard without a client until Martha Phelps (Margaret Dumont), department store heiress, comes to him for help. She is worried about the co-owner of the store, Tommy Rogers (Tony Martin), her brother by adoption. Attempts have been made on his life.

Flywheel and Wacky (Harpo Marx), Flywheel's assistant, take over the case—and the department store. There they run into Ravelli (Chico Marx), Wacky's brother and close friend of Tommy. Ravelli joins the protection society, as does Joan Sutton (Virginia Grey), Tommy's sweetheart. Tommy wants to sell his share of the store in order to finance a music conservatory where Ravelli teaches. The villain of the story is the store manager, Grover (Douglass Dumbrille), who expects to marry Martha and wants to put Tommy out of the way so he will be the sole owner.

Flywheel has an exciting episode in the folding bed department while Grover hires two killers to "get" Tommy. Wacky and Ravelli hear of this and go after the killers, but instead they knock out two more detectives, hired by Joan's brother, Fred (William Tannen), a former accomplice of Grover. Meanwhile, Flywheel puts handcuffs on Tommy's clients. Wacky and Ravelli finally capture the real gunmen.

The boys catch Grover kidnapping Joan but before they can inform Tommy of their evidence, Grover takes after them with a gun. In the toy department they don roller skates and a mad chase ensues. Grover breaks down and confesses his plot when faced by a camera he himself has loaded with a gun.

Romantic Drama

Produced by Harry Edington. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Based on the novel by Francis Iles.

SYNOPSIS

Johnnie Aysgarth (Cary Grant), although considered a charming young man in English society circles, has been cheating, lying and stealing since school days. He is sincere for the first time in his life when he falls in love with and elopes with Lina McLaidlaw (Joan Fontaine), daughter of a wealthy, retired general. The General (Cedric Hardwicke) believes that Lina, who is completely unsophisticated, was married for her money.

When Lina learns that Johnnie has no money, she insists upon his taking a job running an estate for his cousin. He promptly embezzles the estate funds. Lina is stunned. The cousin promises not to prosecute if the money is returned. Then Johnnie interests a fuzzy-brained friend, Beaky (Nigel Bruce), to invest money into a real estate fund. Johnnie is made president. After Johnnie has accompanied Beaky to London to see him off to Paris, Lina learns that Beaky died in Paris, while in the company of another Englishman. Filled with horror, she is forced to suspect Johnnie.

Lina covers up with the police; tells them Johnnie will free Beaky's money for his rightful heirs. Johnnie is none too pleased at this announcement. Then, Lina sees letters to Johnnie from insurance firms announcing that they cannot loan Johnnie money on his wife's policies; that he cannot realize anything on them except in the event of her death. Lina begins to believe that Johnnie is planning to do her in.

When Lina tells Johnnie that she will be glad to die for him so that he can have the money he wants, he is horrified. He had nothing to do with Beaky's death; has never planned hers. He is a gambler, a cheat. But he is not a murderer. He goes away; joins the Royal Air Force. If he makes something of himself, he'll come back to her.

BEYOND THE LAW (Universal)

Melodrama

Associate producer, Jack Bernhard. Directed by George Waggner.

SYNOPSIS

Lee Davis (William Gargan), state investigator, is assigned by his chief, Gary Benson (Addison Richards), to find out whether the Mike Rofano (John Litel), underworld big shot confined in the federal prison, is actually the Mike Rofano or only a double. Several happenings have convinced Benson that the prison inmate is a double.

Lee goes to the prison and becomes acquainted with Rofano, who displays a deep interest in flowers—a knowledge too deep for a mere amateur. Lee goes to New York to hunt through the clippings of a newspaper morgue. There he meets Lois Grant (June Clyde), a reporter. "Lips" Haggerty (Ralf Harolde), deaf but a lip reader, is detailed to Lee. Lee escapes death in the subway station when one of Rofano's henchmen fumbles his task.

Lee, looking through the Rofano files, learns that some years ago a man by the name of Fred Morton was mistaken for Rofano by rival gang leaders but was freed when he convinced his assailants that he wasn't Rofano. Records disclose Morton later was burned to death in a hotel fire. Lee locates Morton's mother (Mary Gordon). Lee now determines to get a set of Morton's fingerprints. If these check with the supposed fingerprints of Rofano, and the man in the California jail, the real Rofano is still at large.

Lee gets the fingerprints. They are on a set of glass slides made up by Morton—who is revealed as a deep student of tulip culture. To Lee's astonishment, the fingerprints on the slides are the same as those on file at the police department, on a pistol-carrying application filed by Rofano. There is now no doubt but that the man in prison is Morton, not Rofano.

Lee decides to go back to California with his findings. Lois follows him. She nearly has the story, but to keep her from printing it, he volunteers to give her the entire story if she will wait until the case is completed. At the California prison, Lee and Benson confront the prisoner, the supposed Rofano, and he, under pressure, admits he is Morton. He became so deeply committed to Rofano he was forced to go to jail in place of Rofano, who, by this time had Morton's wife, Mary (Anne Nagel), in his power.

Lee sets out after Rofano. The trail leads to a dentist's office in New York. The nurse turns out to be Mrs. Morton. She tips off Rofano, who takes Lee to a hideout. Lee escapes and captures Rofano. The authorities allow him to go free and Rofano's own henchmen, thinking he is Morton, kill him.

LIONS ON THE LOOSE (MGM)

Pete Smith Specialty (S-268)

The lions of the title are two cubs and their adventures are of the humorous rather than the ferocious kind. First they come upon a raccoon and without regard for the little fellow's feelings begin to paw him. The raccoon slaps one of them down but retires hastily when the cubs gang up on him. Then they climb through an open window into a nursery and experiment with the toys. From the nursery they proceed to the kitchen, climb the sink and see a pie on the window sill. After they finish the pie the two cubs leaves the house and soon are engaged in combat with a huge snake, which taken by surprise, retreats.

THIS IS THE BOWERY (MGM)

Passing Parade (K-286)

Presented in documentary manner this subject takes the audience to New York's Bowery where broken men live frugally. Life is cheap in the Bowery but there are many in the Bowery who haven't even a nickel. For those, and others, the Bowery Mission helps spiritually as well as materially. In its 63 years of existence, 200,000 men each year have first been introduced to the Bowery Mission through its nightly sermon and hymn singing sessions. Those who attend the services receive a hot meal free. After a night's lodging the Bowery derelict is interviewed by Doctor Charles J. St. John of the Mission, who tries to rehabilitate the man and send him back to society and a job. The Mission has its own employment agency and has been the means of starting men back up the ladder.

A PANIC IN THE PARLOR (RKO)

Leon Errol (13,706)

Leon Errol, carrying Mexican souvenirs, enters an airport station with his friend, Dick Paine (Joseph Forte). Leon has stolen a trip to Agua Caliente instead of a business trip to a Seattle convention. The convention plane has not been heard from and they fear the worst. Leon rushes home but his Mexican souvenirs have preceded him and Mrs. Errol (Virginia Vale) knows all about his trip. Leon dons a moustache and Dick introduces him as a Mexican. Mrs. Errol pretends to be taken in by the disguise and rents Leon a room. Then she puts on an act in which it appears that she has two lovers fighting for her. One of them is Errol's boss, and as might be expected Leon always manages to single out the boss when he starts throwing things.

HOW TO USE IT

Motion Picture Herald's new and valuable exhibitor service section, Product Digest, is a master index to all information available to date on 1940-41 product and which has been published in the several preceding issues of Product Digest.

Check the title of any feature that you want to look up, turn to the designated page or pages, and you will find all buying and booking information available up to this very minute — synopses, casts, credits, release dates, production numbers, running time, review references, Round Table references and Legion of Decency ratings.

Product Digest is published every other week alternately with the regular Release Chart.

The Release Chart carries, as always, an alphabetical index of titles, a breakdown by companies, star information, release dates, running time and review references. The Release Chart, published every other week, is a compact compilation of certain important booking information.

Product Digest, on alternate weeks, is cumulative, a more extensive compilation of similar information. The Release Chart is complete in itself. Product Digest carries only current information, but if you maintain a complete file of Product Digest, you will have, at your instant service, synopses, casts and other detailed data which could not conceivably be compressed into one issue. The cumulative alphabetical index of Product Digest, however, is a reference to all information that has been printed to date in all the issues of Product Digest.

An introductory issue of Product Digest was mailed to exhibitor subscribers of Motion Picture Herald. If you misplaced your copy or have not saved the subsequent issues, write for duplicates.

Whose Pictures?

TRADE press representatives of New York home offices have indicated to the editors of Motion Picture Herald that they are under explicit instructions emanating from studio offices to avoid a possibility of exposure of product to the examination of reviewers for this and other trade journals prior to its display to the lay press of Hollywood.

It is to be recalled that the lay press, otherwise the Churchill Group, including special correspondents, columnists of printed page and radio, syndicate writers, et al., have been promised, in writing, in Hollywood, that they are to see the pictures two weeks prior to release.

As has been amply recorded in recent news pages, Exhibition, at the recent MPTOA convention in Los Angeles, gave voice to a declaration of the prior right to information about the product of the Exhibitor, and through the industry press which serves him.

The lay press, officially through its chairman, Mr. Douglas Churchill, and by platform utterances of Miss Hedda Hopper and Miss Louella Parsons, have been passionate in their protestations of purpose of service to the public by their prior attentions.

This ignores quite the fact that it is the motion picture theatre which serves the public.

The lay press is fighting to preserve as inalienable right and property a loosely permitted privilege of converting screen personalities and motion picture operations into pabulum for sale on the printed page or broadcast to sell soap and pickles.

THE principal power of the lay press at this time and in this discussion is in the timidity of the public relations executives, and their principals, about any process which would perhaps incur the displeasure, in print, of the ladies and gentlemen of the press.

Meanwhile the fact is made obvious, from day to day, that all the bad news there is in Hollywood that can be printed is printed, by that same lay press, as news.

The organized industry too frequently has indicated a susceptibility to pressures.

That fact suggests that in this reviewing matter the Exhibitor and his trade press may have to resort, in self-defense, to opposing pressure with pressure.

If the fact and reason of the situation are not permitted to make their logical appeal, no other alternative seems available.

Distribution executives on convention platforms and assorted public occasions are asking of the Exhibitor greater and greater effort, more and more promotion and selling at the box office.

So long as Production lays down its product to the prejudgment of the lay press delivered to the whole public, before the product is available to the Exhibitor and before information of it is available to him, just so long Distribution is in the position of asking Exhibition to sell into a market which has had its mind made up for it by wire and radio out of Hollywood.

A picture has values that are based on time and place. Broadcast reviews and publicity, syndicate strewn, can take no measure of that. But they can, and do, make local selling anti-climactic, pointless, second hand.

The Product belongs to Exhibition and the box office. Hollywood is not operated in behalf of the lay press and radio—or if it is, the Exhibitor is left out.

PROTEST

THERE are many aspects of the contemporary scene which can be ignored with editorial tolerance. The time has come, however, to speak out on the subject of the degeneracy of the American cocktail. There are in very truth only two cocktails worthy of the name, the Manhattan and the Martini. The Manhattan requires a drop of the real Angostura bitters, the Martini a dash, not a drop, of orange bitters, Nicholson's. When Repeal came along, some barmen expedited matters by putting the dosage of bitters into the vermouth. Presently they found that many of the customers, nourished and educated on bathtub gin and the like, did not even know that there were bitters. Now, in most establishments, the bitters are forgotten and the cocktail has become merely an assault on the upper cortex, where there is any. The best orange bitters are British; Angostura is of Latin-American materials.

This Week in the News

Hollywood Barbecue

HOLLYWOOD'S picaresque journalism came to full flower last week in the matter of the coverage of the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with a dissemination of aromas and a web of action and reaction suitable for script purposes.

It began when the chairman of the entertainment committee for the visitors, Fred S. Meyer, opened bids for the barbecue at the Columbia ranch. The low bid was from Ciro's, which chances to be the enterprise of Billy Wilkerson, a local caterer, who also operates a publication known as the Hollywood Reporter.

Arthur Ungar, editor, general manager, chief of staff, etc., of the other local daily, Daily Variety, had taken space at the Hotel Ambassador, the convention hotel, for Variety headquarters, etc. Mr. Ungar was, it would seem, exceedingly displeased at this patronage of Ciro's—famous for its floor shows—and of apparent favour for his rival, or contemporary publisher. Mr. Ungar's paper broke out a 42-point bold face headline and allowed that the convention was a failure: "Exhibitors go La-Te-Da—Convention Collapse seen in Traipsing."

Up to this point Ciro's with the barbecue contract and Mr. Wilkerson were doing very well. Now, it is reported on eminent authority, Mr. Wilkerson set about to amplify his success by a movement to have his paper declared the official organ of the MPTOA. There was to be a resolution presented. It did not occur. This did not please Mr. Wilkerson.

So, on June 12, the day after Mr. Ungar had volleyed, so did Mr. Wilkerson in his "Tradeviews" column of the Hollywood Reporter:

"This exhibitors' convention . . . is a complete bust and will go down in the history book of Hollywood as one of the really great industry jokes . . ."

The hand that fed was the hand that bit.

When these expressions came to the eyes of Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, he took his pen in hand and dashed off a few lines to Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Motion Picture Producers Association in Hollywood—copies to all members of the association—saying in part as follows:

"According to your local trade papers the convention was 'a complete bust.' Fortunately the circulation of either Daily Variety or Reporter (and the latter was particularly vicious in its attack) is limited to a handful of people around Hollywood, and no exhibitor away from Hollywood pays the least bit of attention to Reporter or Variety; few theatres away from here get, let alone read, it."

Bond Giveaways

UNITED STATES defense saving stamps and bonds are supplanting dishes, books and silver dollars as game prizes and giveaway premiums among exhibitors in many sections. From Cleveland word comes that Nat Wolf, theatre zone manager for Warner Brothers, recently authorized defense stamps to be given out as stimulation for juvenile matinee business. Details of the plan now being tried out in various houses in the zone will be found in this week's MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE starting on page 61.

MGM's First Block

MGM definitely will identify for the trade next week, its first block-of-five pictures to be offered under the new consent decree system of selling, William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, announced in New York last Wednesday. Although these pictures will not be ready for trade showing for another month, Mr. Rodgers said that MGM expected to have at least one other block-of-five ready in advance of September 1st, the opening of the new season. Plans for the company's trade showings have been developed, but will not be announced until later.

Meanwhile, RKO sneaked a showing of its first block-of-five to its salesmen at the New York convention. (Page 29.)

Minnesota Wonders

MINNESOTA'S anti-blocks-of-five-selling law, supported by Northwest Allied against the judgment of National Allied, this week appeared backfiring somewhat, with increased talk among exhibitors of a product shortage. Despite statements by the unit's spokesman, that some members would close theatres rather than "weaken", its legislative committee this week planned district meetings to boost morale; Fred Strom, secretary, was to leave shortly for contact with members; and it was said there would be a summer convention in Minneapolis, after anticipated legal action against the state law.

The predicted test case has been delayed, puzzling observers, who think it may now be entered in a state, rather than Federal, court. The action would test the constitutionality of the law. It was also intended to define the powers of a state in regulating interstate concerns and in enacting laws thwarting Federal decrees. It was pointed out that the United States Supreme Court several weeks ago, in declaring constitutional the anti-ASCAP laws in Nebraska and Florida, upheld the ability of a state to regulate activity of an interstate concern.

Canadians may be offered films, for the coming season, in the packages of five mandatory under the U. S. decree, it was said in New York this week.

Business As Usual

WAR or no, under the British motto of "business as usual"—Warner Brothers' British representatives are in the process of acquiring theatres in that country, where no consent decree hampers expansion.

Max Milder, chief Warner representative in England, was understood last week to be bidding for the shares of the late John Maxwell, in the Associated British circuit of 400 houses. Those shares mean control of the circuit, largest in Britain.

It was said "frozen" Warner money would be used; possibly, also, new money.

The negotiations were originally opened with Mr. Maxwell, then stopped.

Mr. Milder, according to London reports, was to leave for this country shortly, to discuss the deal at the Warner New York home office.

The current exchange agreement between American film companies and the British Government allows use of "frozen" money for buying control of, or interest in, British theatres, upon Exchange Commission approval.

What the British theatre owners will say officially about the reported transaction, is not known; but it is guessed.

They are expected to object.

'Decree OK'—Skouras

"THE consent decree is one of the best things which ever happened to the industry," Charles Skouras, head of Fox West Coast Theatres, said this week in Hollywood.

Mr. Skouras said he believed, as a result of the small-block selling required in the decree, better pictures would ultimately be produced. He predicted that it might take as long as two years for producers to make the changes that he said would result in improved pictures. A reorganization of methods which will bring producers closer to problems of the exhibitor and tastes of the public must be brought about, Mr. Skouras remarked.

Operations under the decree will be better for exhibitors, Mr. Skouras added. He pointed out that the decree now is chiefly the distributors' problem but that eventually it will influence production, too.

Insurance Giveaways

ACCIDENT insurance policies offered as giveaway inducements to theatre patrons, is the scheme worked out by two Boston operators, Meyer Gruber and Arthur Gerome, in cooperation with the Massachusetts Casualty Insurance Company. The plan has received the sanction of the insurance commissioner of Massachusetts, but New York's commissioner has frowned upon it.

Operating on a ten cent cost per theatre, the scheme provides for insurance payoffs to patrons ranging from $5 to $10,000, for accidents in homes, on the street and in public conveyances. Absence from the theatre on "insurance night" cancels the policy for that week, but it can be renewed by attendance the following week.

Meanwhile, reports continue to come in from Philadelphia that exhibitors there are gradually sloughing off giveaways, with Warners particularly, taking the lead. From upstate New York word comes that theatre managers in Syracuse are breathing easier, after the expose of a $3,000 bingo racket which landed six gangleaders on conspiracy charges.

Writers Make Deal

"IN PRINCIPLE," the members of the Screen Writers Guild, meeting in Hollywood Monday night, approved the bargaining agreement with the producers; an agreement the formal version of which was to be drawn this week at subsequent conferences between the Guild negotiating committee and the producers' representatives.

The approval seems to end protracted negotiations, during which there were chronic whispers of "strike." It was understood the length of the contract was a chief point disputed.

The agreement, as of this week, saliently provides an 85 per cent Guild shop, elimination of speculative writing, control by the Guild of screen credits, a pact term of seven years, arbitration by another medium than the American Arbitration Association, a minimum writers' wage of $125 weekly.

Approximately 28 per cent of the studio writers will be affected by the latter provision, it was estimated.

The contract may be reopened after three years, and thereafter at two year intervals.

Booking Combine

CANADIAN exhibitors, currently prospering from the wartime boom in the maritime provinces, are again discussing a cooperative booking system for independent theatre operators in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. John Butler, manager of the Imperial at Moncton, N. B., and Archibald J. Mason, of the Capitol, Springhill, N. S., originally launched the idea to organize the independents.

The two exhibitors have been touring the provinces conferring with individual theatre owners, and recommending that the plan will insure a steady supply of the best box-office screen draws, at lower prices for rental than now prevailing. Mr. Butler and Mr. Mason will canvass all the independents in the territory, and if the idea develops sufficient support, they will establish a base in St. John, where all distribution operations for the territory are concentrated.

Gallup Shorts

TEN minute short subjects based on the findings of the Gallup polls, and to be titled, "Gallup Reviews," will be produced shortly, by the Film Institute, Inc., president of which is Lawrence W. Fox. The producer will be Edmund Lawrence Dorfman, head of the American Institute of Motion Pictures. Plans call for one short subject per month. Negotiations are proceeding for a distributor.

Mr. Fox was formerly associate producer for Universal. Mr. Dorfman is a graduate of Harvard; a former pupil of Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter there; produced the series, "Law Classics"; and later produced short subjects on American Nobel Prize winners. More recently, he has made shorts for Columbia.

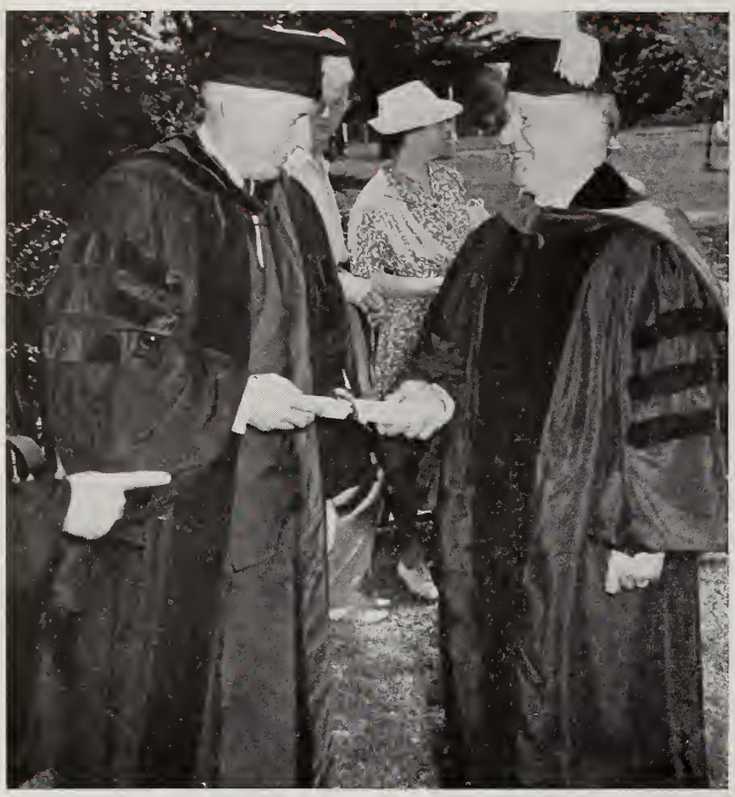
John F. Wharton is counsel for the new company, Film Institute, Inc., which is expected to establish offices in Rockefeller Center, New York City. Howard Cullman, former trustee for the Roxy Theatre; George Halas, president of the Chicago Bears, Paul MacNamara, and Richard S. Goldman are directors.

Swatting Mr. Fly

THE Federal Communications Commission is discouraging profitable operations of the networks in audio broadcasting. It is encouraging investments by those networks in video (television) broadcasting. It is attacking established radio chains as monopolies. It has not properly defined or exercised its own powers.

Those charges were made Wednesday by Niles Trammell, president of the National Broadcasting Company, as hearings before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee were in their third week.

The hearings are upon a resolution by Republican Senator Wallace White of Maine, for an investigation of the FCC's anti-monopoly report of May 2nd, ordering the NBC to sell its Blue network, and of the FCC's powers.



Mr. Trammell remarked in part: "If the majority of the Commission are allowed now to compel us to dispose of half of our property lawfully acquired and lawfully operated for 14 years, on their determination alone, and if Congress does nothing about it, don't be surprised if six months from now, Mr. Fly (FCC chairman) comes in and tells us to get rid of half the Red network. It will then be too late to protest, because his power will have been conceded."

A report on the hearings is to be found on page 53.

NBC on Wednesday suddenly halted releases to the press on the announcement of its television program lineup for July 1st. The schedule, first indication of commercial television program material, was marked for release this weekend. Reason for the delay, it was said, was an FCC request to "examine" the first commercial television schedule.

Exhibitors Have Their Say in Hollywood

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners last week met in Hollywood to discuss and act on constructive suggestions for the immediate future of the industry. Among other things they stirred new attention for the double bills problem and won promises of things to be done. (See pages 13, 14 and 15.) EXHIBITION MEETS WITH PRODUCTION TO STOP DUALS IN 6 MONTHS

From HOLLYWOOD BUREAU

Out of last week's convention of exhibitors in Hollywood came swift, all-out action, for the first time in years, by production, distribution and exhibition to stop double-billing of feature pictures.

Continuing ruminations and ponderings in practically all quarters of the industry regarding pains and aches of and by exhibitors, producers and distributors resulting from drooping attendance, and reasons for the basic ailment came to focus in strikingly concerted expressions aired and steps taken at the joint convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the Pacific Coast Convention of Independent Theatre Owners at the Ambassador Hotel in Hollywood.

The chief cause of the trouble, in the concerted opinions delivered on the convention floor and subsequent thereto, at meetings arranged for the purpose, is the practice of double features.

By direct influence and otherwise, Warner Brothers, in Hollywood, Paramount in the same place, Samuel Goldwyn, David Selznick, exhibition leaders and others gave expression to tangible plans for anti-dualing.

On Monday, Warners announced that their new "Underground" would be single-featured in its simultaneous runs at Warners' Hollywood and downtown theatres.

"This will inaugurate a new policy which may have its repercussions in other situations under Warner control," the company said, inferring, it would seem, a trend in the direction of singles at the circuit's 400-odd theatres.

On the same day, Leonard Goldenson, head of Paramount theatres, informed the PCCITO that he was working on a plan for elimination of double bills from Paramount houses and would forward it to Robert H. Poole, the PCCITO secretary, next week.

Conferences This Week

Commencing Monday, trustees of the PCCITO, continuing in post-convention session, were to hear from and confer with many representatives of Production, Distribution and Exhibition on ways and means to put an end to the practice of double-billing "within six months."

L. O. Lukan, chairman of the PCCITO committee on duals, remained in Hollywood to sit with Executive-secretary Poole in hearings to be attended by such interested parties as Charles P. Skouras, head of Fox West Coast Theatres, David O. Selznick, Walter Wanger, Al Lichtman and others who had signified intention to cooperate.

A resolution condemning double features was one of the five adopted by the MPTOA at its closing session.

Outstanding among the many who condemned the practice from the exhibitor convention rostrum was Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers and Paramount vice-president in charge of production.

That something tangible and definite in the way of a program of action toward elimination of dual-feature programs would eventuate this time was, at convention's end, the consensus of theatre owners who had heard the issue discussed, debated and orated upon over a long sequence of annual conventions and regional conclaves. This time, they said, the producers and distributors appeared to have abandoned in earnest the attitude of indifference which had marked their expressions on the subject until now.

Something of a puzzle to conventioneers, and subject of much guessing in informal conversations, was the abrupt agreement of FWC's Skouras to cooperate with independent exhibitors in steps to restore western Exhibition to a basis of single feature programs. Circulated reports, unofficial and unconfirmed, pictured the FWC executive in heated sessions, early in the week, with production executives — Samuel Goldwyn, Harry Warner, others—during which responsibility for the prevalence of multi-feature programs in the Western area had been placed upon his shoulders and pressure applied to influence him toward assuming leadership in a move to end the condition. Executives reported engaged in these meetings, if there were more than one, declined to affirm or deny such activity. One such meeting is known to have been held in Samuel Goldwyn's studio office.

That independent exhibitors in the Coastal region had come to the convention believing Mr. Skouras' management of the theatres under his control accountable for most of their difficulties in the double-bill matter was made plain by H. V. Harvey, MPTOA convention chairman and PCCITO officer, in expressions to Motion Picture Herald representatives and, subsequently, to conventioneers generally.

Mr. Harvey, who operates subsequent-run theatres in nine towns in the San Francisco area, charged, among other things, that the FWC practice of doubling two "A" pictures, and staggering the runs of same, had proved the straw-stack that broke the double-feature camel's back.

Mr. Harvey had compiled a list of such doublings—"Meet John Doe" and "That Night in Rio", for example—and pointed out that by using a sequence of equivalent pairings, running each of the pictures a week but starting one on Wednesday and the other on Sunday, the FWC management had not only "milked" the product dry in advance of any possible independent playdates but had built FWC's own product requirements up to a point where there were not enough top-flight pictures to supply them. "They can't go up from that point", said Harvey, "and they don't know how to come down."

Unanimous Purpose

At weekend one thing seemed clear. Intent to do something about putting an end to double-features was more nearly unanimous than it has been since inception of the practice. Forecasts of outcome were mixed. While now and then a single voice or two raised in informal utterance speculated as to whether the sudden interest of producers and distributors in doing away with the "B" picture might not be related to problems of sale inherent in Consent Decree requirements, the point did not come up for formal discussion. All parties appeared agreed that the unanimity of intention, whatever its cause, was a favorable development.

Pursuing their campaign against double features, the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners on Monday conferred, through representatives, with producer Samuel Goldwyn, on ways of ending duals. Representing the PCCITO were Robert Poole, executive secretary; Robert White of Portland and Ned Calvi, Los Angeles, trustees.

There will be more conferences, it was predicted. L. O. Lukan, chairman of the committee on duals, is expected to set a date for a meeting between circuit and independent operators, and distributors and producers. Mr. Lukan was unable to attend the Monday conference.

Meanwhile, the California Congress of Parents and Teachers, with an asserted membership of 250,000, telegraphed support of the PCCITO anti-duals campaign.

Into the welter of expressions uttered in Hollywood in condemnation of the double-feature David O. Selznick tossed, in time for Saturday publication in local newspapers, announcement of "a complete departure in motion picture form." It was a plan for pro-

TRADE PRESS GETS CONVENTION PRAISE

Several of the principal speakers at the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America convention in Los Angeles last week referred to the motion picture trade press. Two quotations were:

"I want to state at this point that the trade press has been of tremendous help in carrying complete stories on arbitration cases so that exhibitors have been able, if they wished, to take advantage of the progress and results of cases instituted," Herman M. Levy, executive secretary of the MPTO of Connecticut, said.

"May I here publicly pay tribute to the splendid service being rendered to you, to the Arbitration Association and to arbitration generally, by the complete and careful coverage of arbitration under the decree by your trade press. We are deeply appreciative of the fine cooperation they have accorded us," J. Noble Braden, executive secretary of the American Arbitration Association, said.

WAR ON DOUBLE BILLS PROMISED

duction of groups of stories of varying length which will be presented jointly in a single framework to constitute a full evening's entertainment. Each of these stories individually will run anywhere from five hundred to five thousand feet in length, although the majority will probably be a minimum of three thousand feet, the announcement said.

Two such projects are named in the announcement, "Tales of Mystery and Imagination," a collection of stories by Edgar Allan Poe, and "Tales of Passion and Romance", described as "selected from great love stories by various authors."

Complete Show Planned

The announcement quoted the producer as saying, "I am designing these groups of pictures so that each will run, complete, between twelve and fifteen thousand feet, in the hope that, when exhibited with a newsreel or some other short for which audiences have designated a liking, they will constitute a full show. . . . It is my hope that this plan, if successful, may lead to at least a partial solution of the double feature problem."

Mr. Selznick's press release followed by some two weeks his statement to MOTION PICTURE HERALD that, "The time, money, effort and energy spent at present on the second feature should be devoted to the making of fewer and better pictures. Stars now used in second features could be used to bolster other films. There is not sufficient talent available to make as many features as required for double bills."

Among precedents for the omnibus-type features described in the Selznick announcement are Marshall Neilan's "Bits of Life", 1921, a First National release which may have been ahead of its time but, in any case, struck no pay dirt, and "If I Had a Million", 1932, a sequence of separate episodes featuring different casts but related in central theme, remembered for the scene in which Charles Laughton, after inheriting a million dollars, proceeded with great calm and determination to give his boss an artistic and resounding razzberry.

Convention Tackles Pressing Problems

The practice of holding previews for columnists and commentators prior to release (See page 17) was, like dual features, condemned at the convention, at which over 6,000 theatres were said to have been represented.

Other resolutions approved attacked the importation and distribution of Axis films, opposed the playing of "sex pictures" with an "approved" picture and pledged cooperation with the national defense program and use by exhibitors, wherever possible, of the slogan, "A Defense Film with Every Program."

The PCCITO, which was host to the MPTOA, and participated in joint social activities but held separate business sessions, passed ten resolutions before adjourning. Chief points covered were the establishment of a clearing house for complaints arising out of the consent decree, agreement that PCCITO would pay for test arbitration cases, and opposition to double bills and alleged discrimination against independents by distributors in allowing affiliated circuits to double bill two percentage pictures or a percentage picture with a top flat rental film.

Principal addresses at the final sessions were made by J. Noble Braden, executive secretary of the American Arbitration Association; Herman M. Levy, executive secretary of the MPTOA of Connecticut; Austin C. Keough, vice president and counsel of Paramount; Hon. John M. Costello, Congressman from Los Angeles; Arthur H. Lockwood, president of the MPTO of Connecticut.

Other speakers were Hedda Hopper; Hon. J. F. T. O'Connor, Federal Judge, Los Angeles; J. M. Hone, secretary of the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the Northwest; Julian Brylawski, president of the MPTO of the District of Columbia; and Sidney B. Lust. Addresses made earlier in the convention by William F. Rodgers, MPTOA President Edward L. Kuykendall, Nathan Levinson, Mary Pickford, Albert J. Law, among others, were reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week, starting on page 13.

Other later speakers were O. C. Law, Southwestern Theatre Owners Association; Morris Loewenstein, secretary of the MPTOA; John H. Brenna, executive secretary of the Allied Theatre Owners of Massachusetts; Lewen Pizor, President of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware; James C. Shanklin, chairman of the West Virginia Theatre Managers Association; Roy L. Walker, president of the Theatre Owners Protective Association of Texas; Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois; R. X. Williams, Jr., president of the MPTO of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee; Ed Fay; Jack H. Levin, director of operations, Copyright Protection Bureau; R. R. Biechele, president, Kansas-Missouri Theatre Owners Association.

Levy Chairman

The MPTOA resolutions were presented to the convention by Mr. Levy, chairman of the resolutions committee. Other members on that committee were Mr. Loewenstein; Charles H. Arrington, Rocky Mount, N. C., and W. F. Ruffin, Covington, Tenn.

In the resolution against advance lay press reviews of pictures it was said, "it is felt that the practice of producers of allowing their moving pictures to be reviewed by certain columnists and radio commentators prior to the release of said picture is unfair and inimical to the best interests of producers and exhibitors . . . said practice should be and it hereby is condemned." Copies of the resolution were to be forwarded to every producers in this country.

The MPTOA attacked Axis films distributed in this country as "contrary and dangerous to American ideals and institutions" and the State Department was asked "to cause to be enacted regulations or legislation preventing the importation and distribution" of such films.

Members of the MPTOA and all other exhibitors were urged to send pledges of support of the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense of Joseph Bernhard, Warner Bros, Theatres, chairman of the theatre division, if they have not already done so.

To Pay for "Test" Cases

The PCCITO passed ten resolutions covering the following points:

1. Members should consult with their local organization before filing arbitration complains.
2. The PCCITO will pay for arbitration cases which the trustees decide are "test" cases which will affect all the members of the Conference.
3. The action of certain producers in opposing double bills was approved and the continuation of double features in Skouras houses was attacked.
4. Cases of alleged forcing of shorts, newsreels, trailers and the like should be referred to the secretaries of the local organizations, who will turn them over to the PCCITO general counsel for forwarding to the Department of Justice.
5. Expansion of producer-distributor affiliated circuits was condemned.
6. Consideration by the trustees of a plan for classification by the PCCITO of pictures according to box office possibilities.
7. The condition of prints being sent to some theatres.
8. The use in affiliated theatres of two percentage pictures, or one percentage picture and one top flat rental picture on the same double bill, was condemned.
9. Formation of a committee to take up with circuits the subject of student admissions, some of which even include college students.
10. Re-indorsement of the PCCITO's original 11 point program which members believe would be a better solution to their problems than the consent decree.

To carry out the resolution and other purposes of the Conference four committees were formed to assist the board of trustees. The committees named were as follows:

Junior admissions: Bob White, Portland, chairman; Max Sinift, Los Angeles; Abe Blumenfeld, San Francisco.

Double bills: L. O. Lukan, Seattle, chairman; Ned Calvi, Hawthorne, Calif.; Jesse Jones, Portland.

Arbitration and army camp clearance: Jack Y. Berman, Los Angeles, chairman; Rotus Harvey, San Francisco; Ed Halberg, Port Angeles, Washington; George Nasser, San Francisco and Bill McKevitt, Newport, Oregon.

Box office conditions, previews, move-overs, allocations and similar problems: Hugh Bruen, Whitter, Calif., chairman; Ben Levin, San Francisco; William Graeper, Jr., Portland; Mike Barovic, Puyallup, Wash. and Milbourne Kenway, Moscow, Idaho.

Robert H. Poole, executive secretary of the PCCITO, will be an ex officio member of all the committees.

Decree Is Topic

Three of the chief speeches given Thursday centered about the consent decree. J. Noble Braden, executive secretary of the American Arbitration Association, explained how arbitration under the decree functions; Herman M. Levy, executive secretary of the MPTO of Connecticut, discussed the decree from the exhibitor's point of view, and Austin C. Keough, vice-president and general counsel, traced the history of the decree and gave some of the distributor's position with regard to the document.

Mr. Braden explained in his introduction that his remarks were planned to answer some of the questions which exhibitors might have about arbitration. He told how, in the first

GLAMOUR GIRLS FOR HOUSE STAFFS

The male service staff of the Twentieth Century theatre in Buffalo, N. Y., will be replaced by usherettes, according to Richard Kemper, managing director, who points out that the military type of service staff is being scrapped elsewhere, notably in Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati, for a "more streamlined system of personality service". Mr. Kemper is looking for girls who can wear "striking costumes". Applicants must be unmarried, high school graduates, between 17 and 20, 5 feet 4 inches tall and weigh about 115 pounds.

'DON'T EXCLUDE US, WE LOVE FILMS', LOUELLA & HEDDA TELL EXHIBITORS

Parsons, Hopper Lead Attack on Kuykendall for Review Priority Demand; Claim Press Comments Benefit to Film Grosses

by WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

Don't get Hollywood movie columnists, Louella O. Parsons or Hedda Hopper, wrong.

They "love pictures."

Both of them said so, in those words, from the rostrum of the MPTOA-PCCITO exhibition convention in Hollywood last week.

Both of them were speaking in opposition to MPTOA President Ed Kuykendall's demand of producers and distributors that they ban the Hollywood lay press correspondents from pre-release screenings of product, restricting such screenings, in accordance with the editorial suggestion of Terry Ramsaye in the May 17th edition of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, to representatives of the trade press.

Arguing that syndicated lay press opinions on pictures are in the main beneficial to grosses, Miss Parsons had declared that exhibitors had no cause to exclude "those of us who love pictures."

Miss Hopper said: "Columnists are trying to do an honest job. We don't want to hurt you. We want to help you. I love pictures."

Other Columnists Take Up Attack

The Misses Parsons and Hopper are members of the correspondent group, headed by the New York Times' Douglas Churchill, who have been in conflict with Hollywood studios for several months in agitation for press screenings from two to eight weeks in advance of release dates.

Also a member of that group, which last week decided to petition for special consideration for magazine correspondents stationed in Hollywood, James Francis Crow, film editor of the Hollywood Citizen-News and correspondent of Look Magazine, led the printed attack upon the Kuykendall recommendation that the lay press be excluded from pre-release screenings for the trade press.

In his Wednesday edition of the Citizen-News Mr. Crow key-noted, "Kuykendall says he is in favor of honest criticism and a free press. He is in favor of honest criticism after he has sold his pictures to the public. He is in favor of the press being free, as long as it is free at the time established by Kuykendall. Just wait till I give you the word, boys, says Kuykendall, and then turn it loose."

Next day he was in print again with: "Kuykendall said that stage shows are not prejudged, as films are at reviews. This department disagrees. The tryouts given stage shows in the various New England towns before their advent on Broadway correspond very closely to Hollywood previews. Newspaper correspondents attend these showings and pass free reports and criticisms on them. Sometimes, to carry out the preview analogy, the shows are changed as a result of the reports and criticisms. . . . The legitimate theatre disdains the abridgement and limitation of newspaper comment and criticism that Kuykendall, along with certain press agents, advocates for the film industry."

Mr. Crow also said, paraphrasing Mr. Kuykendall's text, "Newspapers don't criticize Ford automobiles or Campbell's soups, says Kuykendall. But Ford automobiles and Campbell's soups come guaranteed. You can drive a Ford around the block before you buy it. You can take a bad tin of soup back to your grocer and he will give you your money back. Will Kuykendall make the same offer to the picture patrons to whom he sells 'Forever Yours?'"

Jimmy Star, motion picture editor of the Los Angeles Herald-Express, took up the matter in his Monday edition, "All I can remark to such a silly crack is that he (Kuykendall) isn't much of a showman—and perhaps that's why his business is poor—or he wouldn't make an inane statement like that."

Chairman Churchill's comment to MOTION PICTURE HERALD was, "If Hollywood doesn't pay any more attention to Kuykendall's speech than it does to any of the other squawks it gets from exhibitors, there is nothing for the press to worry about."

Sullivan Joins Fight

By this week news of Mr. Kuykendall's demands had reached New York Daily News columnist, Ed Sullivan, who wrote on Tuesday, "I know a better plan, let Hollywood make pictures that don't require panning, let Hollywood stop passing the buck to everyone else for the present slump." Columnist Sullivan depends more than most upon reviews, his own and others, for copy.

As a result of Mr. Kuykendall's blast against press previews, a resolution was adopted at the final session of the MPTOA convention in Los Angeles last week, condemning showing of films to columnists, commentators and other lay press critics in advance of release to the trade press, as "unfair and inimical to the best interests of the producers and exhibitors."

Advertising of previews as held in theatres for the press and sometimes as business stimulators was attacked at an open forum held last week by convening members of the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners, in Los Angeles. Speakers termed the previews to step toward triple features. No objection was raised to holding press previews as such, provided they were not advertised as box-office stimulants to the general public.

arbitration decision given under the decree an exhibitor obtained a "some run" for a theatre which had been seeking pictures in court action for over two years. Then the steps necessary for filing an arbitration complaint were explained.

On the subject of the costs of arbitration he said, "The costs of arbitration are fairly within the control of the parties." He pointed out that the average cost to the exhibitor, excluding legal fees paid to the exhibitor's own attorney, in the cases decided during the first three months of operations had been $39.04.

"Exhibitors have a most important share in the responsibility for the success of the consent decree", Mr. Braden remarked. "For the first time in anti-trust litigation, an industry has been given a judicial system of its own—an opportunity for self-regulation."

Mr. Levy said, "this decree or any other decree or regulatory process will accomplish small good, if any, unless the bitterness, strife and distrust that permeate exhibitor-distributor relationships are eliminated.

"In no industry are customers of a producer or manufacturer treated with less respect," he asserted. But he added that the exhibitor too has his faults, including the attitude, "what is good for distributors cannot be good for us."

Mr. Keough traced the history of the consent decree negotiations and said that distributors were no more in favor of the blocks-of-five idea than exhibitors. He added that the provision had originated with the Department of Commerce and the Department of Justice refused to yield from the position that only small block selling would be permitted. In the ideal order, Mr. Keough admitted, it would probably be best to sell pictures one at a time, but he said that was impractical.

Costello Stresses Morale

John M. Costello, Los Angeles Congressman, told the convention "The motion picture exhibitors have a double duty at the present time—to help build morale and to collect additional taxes for national defense. He also pointed out that some groups were "too ready to look to Washington for solution of all their ills." They sometimes find, he said, not a solution but "a gradual infiltration of government regulation" of their industry.

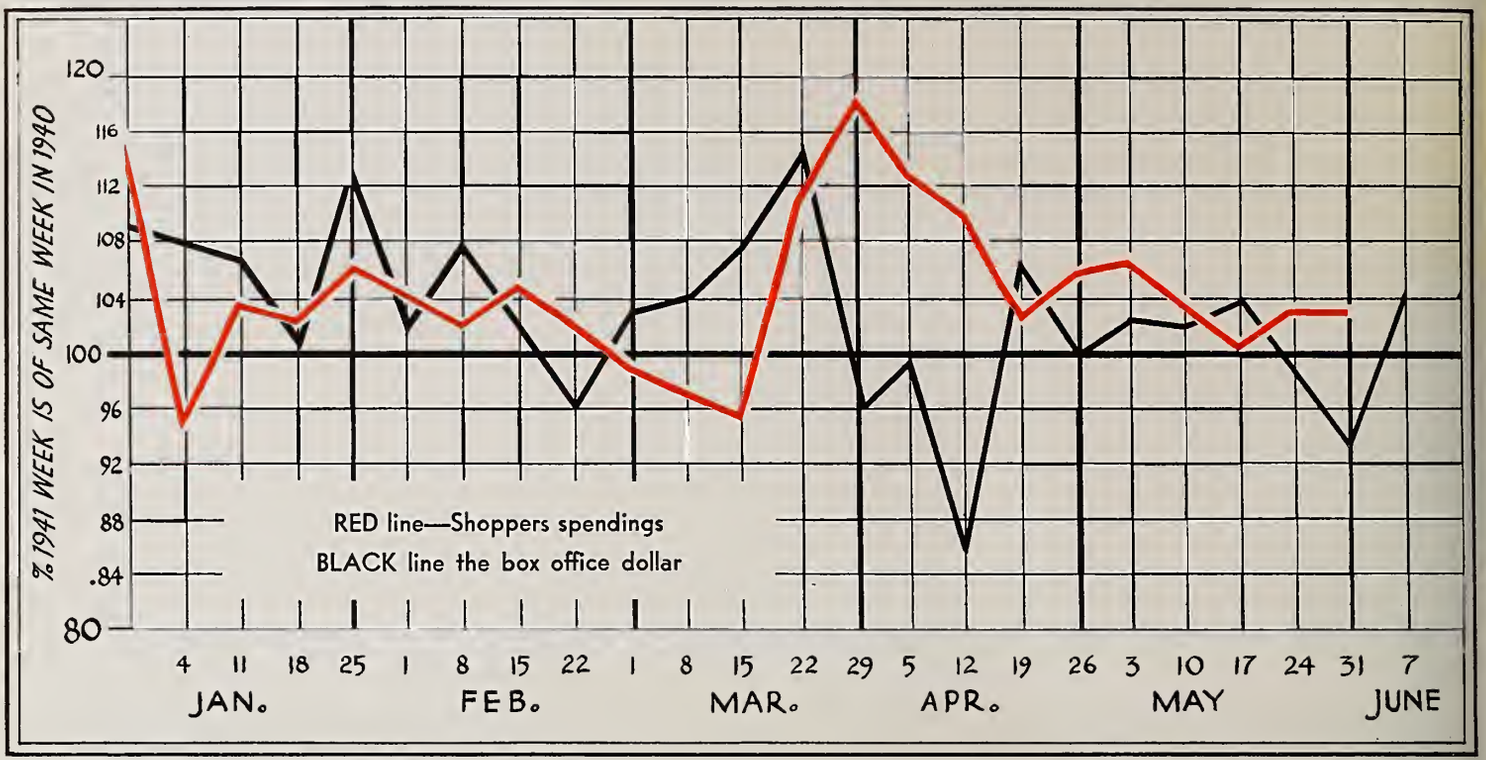
Y. Frank Freeman and Walter Wanger, who spoke last week, both vigorously attacked double bills.

"Unlimited cooperation in an unlimited emergency", was asked by Francis Harmon, coordinator of the motion picture committee cooperating for national defense. He also urged use of the slogan "A defense film with every program."

This year a total of 1,250 bills affecting motion pictures have been introduced in 43 state legislatures, C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, reported. This figure, he said, was 500 more than that for any other year in the past two decades but he added, "the results have been better than at any other time."

Pettijohn Is Speaker

The system of arbitration previously established in the motion picture industry was praised by Mr. Pettijohn, who predicted that eventually it would be restored. The present arbitration machinery costs three times as much as the old method, he said.



Hal Roach discussed his plans for "streamlined features" which will run from 40 to 60 minutes. Played with another picture these "streamlined features" will make possible the retention of normal turnover and will satisfy both double and single feature fans, he predicted. The new features are also expected to be of better quality than the usual second feature.

Dore Schary, executive of the Screen Writers Guild, told the exhibitors, "A new breed of writers has sprung into existence which looks to the box office as a barometer of success", considering box office results proof of artistic worth. He asked that exhibitors understand some of the problems which a writer must face in preparing a screen play.

E. A. Williford, general sales manager of the National Carbon Company, told the convention there would be no shortage of carbon or rise in prices during the national emergency. He added that the company was prepared to supply all the carbon needs of the United States and Great Britain and the exhibitors and studios do not need to stock up with a reserve supply.

Others introduced to the convention included Gene Autry, John H. Harris, national chief barker, Variety Club; Claude Lee, Paramount public relations; H. M. Richey, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exhibitor contact.

Theatre and the Retail Trade Compared

Retail lineage statistics from Advertising Age, by permission.

This graph, in sequel to last week's presentation of the curve representing box office performance, averaged across the land for the first half of 1941, here now shows the relation between that representation for the theatre and general retail activity in all lines of merchandising. The red line this week reports the general shopping activity of the mass customers, based on the advertising lineage presented in the newspapers of eighty-three important marketing centers, including the motion picture's key cities and secondary communities. The black line, of course, covers box office dollars and is identical with the red line of last week's graph.

It is at once apparent that there is a close kinship in performance between the general merchandise dollar and the box office dollar. The customers are obviously the same persons, reacting as they always do.

The only important divergence, or lack of parallelism, is apparent in the Holy Week-Easter period, when the customers were buying hats, etc., but not seeking public entertainment. The shopping went up while the box office went down. Eventually, as it is shown, they did wear their new hats to the theatre.

This showing is of particular interest, too, in view of the scattering of letters to the editor denouncing the presentation of a report of normal box office performance in the face of a considerably proclaimed state of "slump." There are meanwhile some indications that the slump has become a slogan of a period when product purchases impend, and has gained most of its factual support from certain regions where the box office has been sharply off for special and usually regional reasons. —T. Paramount May Buy Sparks' Interests

Executives of the All-Florida Circuit, E. J. Sparks, Frank Rogers and Fred Kent, are planning to be in New York on June 23rd, to close a reported deal whereby Paramount will acquire 40 per cent interest in the circuit. It is reported that $1,350,000 will go to Mr. Sparks for his 40 per cent stock interest in All-Florida.

Paramount already owns a 50 per cent interest and when the deal is closed will have a 90 per cent stock control, leaving 10 per cent with Mr. Rogers, general manager of the circuit.

Leonard Goldenson, Paramount theatre executive, is representing the film company in the deal. Mr. Rogers and other executives of the circuit will continue as officials for the circuit.

NAZI CRACKDOWN REVEALS FLOOD OF AXIS FILM PROPAGANDA HERE

Status of Ufa, Distributor of "Victory in West," Uncertain; Non-Sectarian League Fights Newsreel Status of Picture

Following closely upon the U. S. Government's "step-nearer-war" order of Monday closing down German consulates and "certain other German propaganda agencies" in this country, the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League in New York reveals that it has been quietly taking drastic action to ban all German, Spanish and Italian propaganda films from the United States.

Status of Ufa Films, Inc., American distributor of German motion pictures, under the State Department order closing Nazi consulates, the German Library of Information, tourist bureau, news agency and other propaganda outlets was uncertain at midweek. The State Department, importuned by the ITOA and Allied of New York, was reported to be considering such a step, with the first move expected to come on the further importing of such films as "Victory in the West."

The German Railway and Tourist Agency is reported to have been offering about 50 pictures for free exhibiton to groups, clubs and organizations. Nazi film imports in the United States are said to have increased from 1,773 prints to 3,683 in the past year.

Senator James M. Mead of New York disclosed in Washington on Wednesday that he had asked the State Department for a full study of Axis film importations. He expressed the hope that prompt means will be found to curb the exhibition of such films, which he termed "dangerous" and "calculated to serve the best interests of the military tyrants of Europe."

Ufa Claims Commercial Status

George Nitze, president of Ufa's American agency, greeted the press with affability in his Radio City offices in New York. "We are purely a commercial enterprise. Since 1924 we have been engaged solely in importing and selling German pictures. We have no official connection whatsoever with the German Government," he told reporters. "Why should we, or any other German-American commercial enterprise be affected by the order?" he asked.

The question was expected to receive an early answer. American exhibitor groups and patriotic and educational societies renewed their demands that German films, notably "Victory in the West," newsreel on the fall of France, be barred. Washington observers expected early action on the matter, in line with the recent demand made by Max A. Cohen, president of Allied Theatre Owners of New York and chairman of the MPTOA committee on the subject, and of Harry Brandt, president of the ITOA of New York.

Leo Spanglet, unofficial director of the Bureau of Economic Research of the League, said Ufa Films, Inc., had been bringing in German propaganda films, many of which come by way of South America, through the office of the German Consul General in New York. He cited "Sieg im Westen" ("Victory in the West"), as a good example of this procedure and declared that since Hitler was exercising every power to keep American films out of Germany and other Nazi-occupied European countries, America should act promptly in banning "Hitler's subversive propaganda pictures."

Mr. Spanglet discussed the motion made before Supreme Court Justice William H. Murray in Albany, last Friday, concerning "Victory in the West." The motion was brought by Richard Rollins, director of the Department of Investigation of the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, to restrain Ufa from further showings of the German-produced film. Basis for the suit is the League's contention that the film, picturing Hitler's blitzkrieg army, is not a newsreel, as classified by Irwin Esmond, director of the motion picture division of the State Board of Regents, and therefore must be licensed as a feature film by Mr. Esmond.

The League aims to restrict showing until Judge Murray decides whether or not "Victory in the West" comes under the classification of a feature film. According to Julius L. Goldstein, attorney who is arguing the case for the League, the question of what constitutes a newsreel has never been directly adjudicated by the New York courts.

The Ufa film is now being shown at the 96th Street Theatre in New York, the Transfer, North Bergen, N. J., Mozart, Brooklyn, N. Y., and the Little, Chicago.

Meanwhile, the essential question of whether the limited powers of the Motion Picture Division, which reviews feature pictures and short subjects before licensing exhibition in New York State, allow it also to censor propaganda pictures is before Judge Murray.

Defends Newsreel Status

Joseph Lipsky, law director of the New York State Department of Education, arguing for Mr. Esmond that the picture was a newsreel and as such was not subject to censorship, contended, "Pictures cannot be banned from exhibition because they are purely propaganda, even if they come within the feature purview of the motion picture division."

"What's that? You can't stop propaganda?" Judge Murray asked. "No, sir," replied Mr. Lipsky.

Judge Murray then said, "You know, the President has declared that a national emergency exists and I want an honest expression of whether this film glorifies Hitler or is German propaganda."

"We don't think it glorifies Hitler. This is a newsreel," Mr. Lipsky responded.

Judge Murray announced that before making a decision in the case, he would have to see the picture himself; that he would not take "anybody's opinion" of it. Commissioner Graves, of the Department of Education of the State of New York, is arranging to have a copy of the film brought to Albany this week for the Judge's viewing.

Further action by the League in attempting to bar German propaganda films in America, was taken last week when Mr. Goldstein sent letters to Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Secretary of the Treasury Henry W. Morgenthau. His letter said, "We gather from the public press that under laws duly enacted by Congress, the Secretary of State . . . and the President . . . have the power to bar the importation of propaganda films. American films are barred from Germany and there seems to be no valid reason why the United States should permit importation of propaganda films." Mr. Morgenthau was also urged to "take appropriate measures against such films which must pass through the United States customs office."

The League, founded in 1933, soon after Hitler's rise to power, was organized by the late Samuel Untermyer who was its guiding spirit until his death last year. Professor James H. Sheldon, of Boston University, is chairman of its board of directors, and Dr. Nelson P. Mead, former acting president of the College of the City of New York, is president of the organization's National Advisory Council. Other League officials include: John Frederick Lewis, Jr., Sidney Hillman, Judge Samuel S. Liebowitz, the Rev. Donald G. Lothrop, Professors Paul H. Douglas and Max Winkler.

Activities of the organization during the past eight years have centered in spreading boycott of German goods and in urging American companies to sever commercial dealings with the Nazis.

American motion picture firms, Mr. Spanglet said, would be included in a call to sever all connection with Germany. He declared that Paramount, "which still has heavy investments in Germany," would also be asked to subscribe to the League's plan of action.

Latin Ban on Chaplin Lifted

Argentina's city council in Buenos Aires, over-riding a veto pronounced by the municipal authorities six months ago, decided last week to permit showings of Charles Chaplin's film, "The Great Dictator" to the public.

The film originally was vetoed at the request of the Italian Ambassador in Buenos Aires, who officially protested its showing because of the "lamentable" effects its exhibition would have upon the good relations existing between Italy and Argentina. Repeated requests by large sections of the Argentine public have been made since then for official lifting of the ban.

Argentina was one of the few South American countries which prohibited showing of Chaplin's pictures. Uruguay, just across the River Plata, ran the film over protests of Axis propaganda interests, and as a result, travel companies did a good business running special excursions to Uruguay for theatre parties.

Argentine Action on Nazis

By a vote of 73 to 16, the Chamber of Deputies of Argentina adopted a resolution on June 11th, directing the government to disclose what steps have been taken to halt fifth column activities in Argentina. The Chamber urged the government to speed action against the Trans-Ocean News Service, a German news agency, and the resolution charged that meetings had been held in the German Embassy in Buenos Aires at which Argentina's form of government had been assailed.

HITLER TO STALIN: "SEE MY ETCHINGS"

A showing of the latest Nazi blitzkrieg films, picturing German campaigns in the Balkans and in Africa, was made by German military attaches last week for the diplomatic corps and Russian officers in Moscow. The former Austrian Legation was used for the film review, at which officers of the foreign liaison section of the Russian Army general staff were present.

Similar diplomatic screenings were staged in most of the countries which later were invited to go along quietly or else.

APPEALS BOARD DRAWS SHARP LINE BETWEEN 'RUN' AND 'CLEARANCE' TERMS

Chicago Arbitrator Upheld in Ruling That Ken Theatre Sought Specific Run, Not Clearance; Award Unanimous

Clearance means a waiting period; there can be no clearance between the successive weeks of general release, the Appeals Board, "supreme court" of the motion picture arbitration tribunals, ruled on June 12th in its first decision. It set the initial precedent for interpreting the consent decree. The board drew a sharp distinction between "run" and "clearance" as it reviewed the meaning of clearance as defined under Section VIII of the decree. Specifically the decision upheld the arbitrator's dismissal of the Ken theatre clearance complaint, the second Chicago case, which was disallowed in March for lack of jurisdiction.

Arbitrator Upheld Unanimously

Unanimously, the three members of the Appeals Board ruled that Charles P. Megan, Chicago attorney who arbitrated the Ken case, was correct in dismissing the complaint on the grounds that it requested a specific run, not clearance, and was therefore not subject to arbitration until September 1st. Costs of the action were sustained against the Ken Theatre Corporation.

In an 1800-word opinion, delivered after almost three months of consideration, the Appeals Board held that although run and clearance are alike measures of time in dating motion picture sales they are sharply distinguished. Run is playing time; clearance is waiting time, the board asserted. However, there is no clearance between successive weeks of general run, the opinion added, and denied the complainant Ken theatre relief under Section VIII of the decree from its present booking.

The Chicago complaint, filed in mid-February, was one of the first in the country and the first to question the definition of clearance in the consent decree. It was entered by Ben Banovitz, operator of the Ken, and named Paramount, RKO, and Twentieth Century-Fox defendants. The complaint asserted that the distributors named had granted unfair clearance to the Shakespeare theatre, competitive house operated by the Schoenstadt circuit, in licensing it for the second week of general release, while refusing to license the Ken for better than the third week of general release.

The decision of the higher board upheld the arbitrator's ruling that no clearance was involved between the second and third general runs inasmuch as they were in successive weeks of general release. On the Ken complaint the board ruled:

"What the complainant seeks is an award striking from the Shakespeare's license for its second week run the additional provision that Ken theatre was "not to play before third week of Chicago general release." The contention is that this sets up clearance against Ken. But it cannot possibly refer to clearance. In express terms and effect it refers to playing time in successive runs. There is no interval of time between the ending of second week and the beginning of third week of Chicago general release to which clearance could apply. There is no clearance to "abolish." The arbitrator had no power to grant any relief under Section VIII of the decree, and the complaint was properly dismissed."

The decision, signed by Van Vechten Veeder, Albert W. Putnam and George W. Alger, appointed under the decree by Judge Henry M. Goddard, was hailed by industry lawyers for its clear review of the general history of run and clearance and for the analysis of the unique system of Chicago licenses.

The board reviewed the history of clearance in the sale of motion pictures and concluded that "clearance, reasonable in time and area is essential to the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures." The decree, it said, specifically recognizes this.

While allowing for the Chicago license plan under which a Loop "first-run" and three weeks of "pre-release" runs precede the first general release runs, the board drew an interpretation of Section VIII which attorneys say will form a precedent clearly applicable to clearance proceedings in other areas. Under the Chicago plan the second and third weeks of general release, at issue between the Ken and Shakespeare theatres, are actually the 11th and 12th weeks following the end of the downtown, "Loop," run.

The decision, in effect, held that dissatisfaction with the specific run offered the Ken in the distributor's licenses and not unfair clearance by the Shakespeare was the basis of the complaint. Section X of the consent decree,

Text of Appeal Board Decision Defining Terms under Decree

The Appeal Board of the motion picture arbitration tribunals on Thursday rendered its first decision, upholding the ruling of the arbitrator in the second Chicago case, who ruled that the complaint of the Ken theatre involved specific run, not clearance, and was beyond his jurisdiction under the provisions of Section VIII of the decree. The text of the decision follows:

This is an appeal by the complainant Ken Theatre Corporation from the award of an Arbitrator in the Arbitration Tribunal of the Chicago District dismissing the complaint.

The named defendants are Paramount Pictures, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and 20th Century Fox Film Corporation, together with certain of their affiliated corporations which were subsequently dismissed by agreement as unnecessary parties. H. Schoenstadt & Sons intervened as exhibitors whose business might be affected by an award. The complainant operates the Ken theatre (formerly known as Kenwood) and the intervenor the Shakespeare and Pix theatres, in the city of Chicago. The Ken theatre is located at 1225 East 47th Street, the Shakespeare at 940 East 43rd Street. The demand for arbitration merely states, in the language of Section VIII of the Decree, that the clearance granted to the Shakespeare theatre by the respondents is unreasonable, and that their failure to grant to the Ken theatre clearance over the Pix theatre is unreasonable; and the relief claimed is a finding by the Arbitrator of such unreasonableness, together with an award fixing the clearance between the Ken theatre and the Shakespeare and Pix theatres.

At the hearing opening statements were made, at the request of the Arbitrator, by counsel for the respective parties, in the course of which various statements, admissions and stipulations of fact were made. On the basis of such statements, admissions and stipulations the Arbitrator found that no issue of clearance under Section VIII was presented by the complainant and he thereupon dismissed the complaint for want of jurisdiction.

The complainant appealed. Thereafter briefs and reply briefs were filed by the respective parties, and by the Government as amicus curiae. In its reply brief the complainant withdrew its demand for arbitration with respect to the Pix theatre, in these terms: "The complainant will concede that the Arbitrator has no power to create or increase clearance; that therefore no relief can be granted to the complainant in its demand over the Pix."

It appears that Paramount, Fox and RKO have licensed their pictures for exhibition in the Shakespeare theatre in the second week of Chicago general release (sixth run) together with a provision that the Ken theatre was not to play prior to the third week of general release (seventh run). The complainant, in negotiations for its Ken Theatre, has been offered only a license for the third week of general release (seventh run). This is the terminology of the isolated Chicago system of release (which the parties have explained but have not questioned) whereby runs are licensed upon the basis of particular weeks following the conclusion of the first run. The tabulation in the footnote[1], taken from one of the briefs, explains and correlates the Chicago system of release with the system which prevails elsewhere.

Note 1

Chicago Designation	Usual Designation	Week of Run in Relation to Conclusion of Loop First Run
Loop 1st run	1st run
A pre-release week	2nd run	4th week
B pre-release week	3rd run	7th week
C pre-release week	4th run	9th week
1st week of general release	5th run	10th week
2nd week of general release	6th run	11th week
3rd week of general release	7th run	12th week

Following the loop first run, and before the commencement of the next succeeding run, there is a clearance period of three weeks. Immediately upon the expiration of the three weeks clearance the picture is available for exhibition in a limited number in three successive runs of

Briefly stated, the first run always takes place in the Chicago downtown district, commonly known as the loop, where the largest theatres are located and the highest admission prices prevail. The duration of this run is not specified in advance. Invariably the minimum is one week. Since a substantial portion of the distributors' revenue from the licensing of pictures is derived from the first run showing, its duration depends upon the public response in the way of attendance. Because of the indeterminate duration of the loop first run all succeeding runs are measured from the actual conclusion of the loop first run exhibition.

Ruling Defines 'Run', 'Clearance'

which permits arbitration of specific run complaints, is not applicable until after September 1st. Distributors, however, have of late frequently accused exhibitors of seeking to better their runs under the guise of clearance complaints.

The appeal was decided on the basis of the record of the Chicago proceedings and on briefs filed by complainant, defendants and the intervening Schoenstadt circuit. The Department of Justice, through the motion picture branch of the anti-trust division also intervened in the appeal as "friend of the court." A special brief was written by Robert Wright, assistant attorney general, charged with observing the operation of the consent decree. The government sought a ruling by the Appeals Board to the effect that any clearance, even between successive runs, can be held "unfair and unreasonable clearance" by an arbitrator. The board rejected the government petition in making its decision.

Attorneys for the distributors involved expressed themselves well satisfied with the definition of clearance included in the appeal ruling and predicted that it would increase conciliation with exhibitors. They indicated that a strenuous effort will be made by the home offices to settle "run" demands amicably, in order to forestall a flood of arbitration complaints under Section X in September.

Felix A. Jenkins, 20th Century-Fox counsel, characterized the decision "as a very clear exposition of the difference between run and clearance. It will clarify a lot of very carelessly brought arbitration complaints, filed under the guise of Section VIII, but which are not really clearance matters."

"Although distributors have won the majority of arbitration awards to date the figures do not show the true benefits to exhibitors. For each award there have been at least three settlements," Mr. Jenkins noted. Since the start of arbitration many complaints have been adjusted even before they reached the arbitration tribunals, he added.

"Well Reasoned, Lucid"

"An extremely well-reasoned and lucid examination of the peculiar problems involved in merchandising motion pictures," was the comment of another distributor attorney. He cited the Appeal Board's history of clearance and run as one of the best outside evaluations of the problem ever written.

Louis Phillips, Paramount attorney, said that the decision closed the Ken case as far as Paramount was concerned. He said that the ruling would undoubtedly postpone until September many complaints which are now in preparation, but expressed doubt that it would materially reduce the number of cases now pending or lead to an increased number of appeals, either by exhibitors or distributors.

An RKO spokesman also praised the ruling's recognition of the problems of the business, and echoed the prediction that there would be an increase in conciliation following the appeal decision. "It will eliminate to a great extent the attempts of exhibitors to obtain prior run under Section VIII," he observed, "but at the same time will encourage settlement of run complaints on the part of both distributor and exhibitor." He did not foresee a flood of Section X complaints in September.

Department of Justice officials at Washington this week had no comment to make on the decision of the Appeals Board in the Ken case.

It was explained at the department that the brief filed with the board had presented all the Government's views on the issue involved, for the consideration of the board.

one week each, termed A, B, and C pre-release weeks. Thus A pre-release week corresponds to second run, B pre-release week to third run and C pre-release week to fourth run. Theatres which exhibit a picture in A pre-release week receive two weeks clearance over B, the next succeeding run, and B receives a clearance of one week over C. Accordingly C pre-release week is the ninth week following the conclusion of the loop first run. Immediately upon the conclusion of the last of the pre-release runs, there commence in successive order several weeks of general release, all of which begin on Sunday, during which many theatres are licensed to exhibit a picture in the same week, that is, upon the same run.

Thus it appears that the first week of general release, which begins on the Sunday immediately following the conclusion of C pre-release week, corresponds to the fifth run and represents the tenth week following the conclusion of the loop first run. Similarly, the second week of general release, which commences immediately upon the conclusion of the first week of general release, is the sixth run and represents the eleventh week following the conclusion of the loop first run. This sequence of runs continues until a picture is played out in the entire Chicago area. It will be observed that there is no clearance between the successive weeks of general release. The successive runs follow each other without any intervening lapse of time.

Reviews Ken Complaint

Since Paramount, Fox and RKO have licensed the exhibition of their pictures to the Shakespeare theatre in the second week of general release, with a provision that Ken theatre was not to play before the third week of general release, this means that the Shakespeare theatre was licensed for a sixth run, with an assurance that the Ken theatre would not be licensed to play before the seventh run.

The result is, the complainant asserts, that the Shakespeare theatre has been granted unreasonable clearance over the Ken theatre; and the Arbitrator was asked to decide, in the words of the complainant's counsel: "I want the Arbitrator to decide there is no clearance justifiable between the Shakespeare and the Ken theatres, and direct the Ken theatres. and direct the distributors to strike from the contract under the clearance provision, 'the Ken theatre not to play before third week.' Then if the distributors  refuse to grant us a second week run, we will concede that that is their privilege."

The historical development of the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures is the implicit background of the Decree. The industry, as now organized and operated, is based upon a system of successive rather than simultaneous exhibition of motion pictures. It was found impracticable, on both economic and physical grounds, to enable all motion picture theatres to exhibit pictures at the same time. Therefore exhibition was "staggered," which means, obviously, that some theatres will exhibit a picture in advance of other theatres.

This is the origin of the concept of run and of the system of successive runs. Since most patrons of motion pictures wish to see a picture while it is new, admission prices as well as license fees are highest for the first run and usually decrease in succeeding runs. The run of a picture which a person will pay to see depends upon a combination of many factors, among which is the normal desire to witness the earliest exhibition for which he is willing to pay the higher admission price.

The result of sequence of runs is, then, that some theatres exhibit pictures ahead of other theatres. In the absence of further factors, this would mean that immediately upon the conclusion of the exhibition of a picture in a first run theatre, the second run theatre would be entitled to exhibit it. Under such circumstances, however, the value of a first run over a second run might not be appreciably greater, because a substantial part of the first run theatre's potential audience would be likely to wait, knowing that the same picture could be seen shortly thereafter at the second run theatre at a lower admission price and, it may be, in a more accessible location.

Hence there arose in the motion picture industry the practice of fixing in the license for a run of picture, a period of time prior to the expiration of which the picture would not be licensed for exhibition in another theatre or theatres in a given area. The intervening period between runs is known as clearance.

To summarize, the contract for the exhibition of a motion picture usually fixes the particular period of time during which it may be exhibited; and it also generally provides that a specified period of time shall elapse between the termination of a prior run and the beginning of the next succeeding run. The time during which the exhibitor is licensed to show the picture is run; the interval of waiting time, if any, between successive runs is clearance.

Cites Decree Definition

These two separate concepts are clearly distinguished in the Decree, and we should have supposed that they would be clearly understood in the industry if it were not for the fact that various counsel in this case repeatedly use them interchangeably. Run and clearance alike are measures of time; otherwise they are clearly distinguishable. Run is playing time; clearance is waiting time. Clearance presupposes runs. But run and priority in playing time may exist without clearance. The Decree expressly recognizes that clearance, reasonable in time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. But the extent to which it is used is optional, not compulsory. Under the Chicago release system clearance is given only from the conclusion of the loop first run through the third pre-release week. Thereafter, the successive weeks of general release follow each other without any clearance interval.

The complainant hopes ultimately to secure a sixth run, instead of a seventh run which is offered. But counsel is careful to disclaim any right to an award of that run under Section VIII of the Decree, which expressly prohibits it. What the complainant seeks is an award striking from the Shakespeare's license for its second week run the additional provision that Ken theatre was "not to play before third week of Chicago general release." The contention is that this sets up clearance against Ken. But it cannot possibly refer to clearance. In express terms and effect it refers to playing time in successive runs. There is no interval of time between the ending of second week and the beginning of third week of Chicago general release to which clearance could apply. There is no clearance to "abolish." The Arbitrator had no power to grant any relief under Section VIII of the Decree, and the complaint was properly dismissed.

The award of the arbitrator is affirmed with costs.

AKRON CLEARANCE AWARD REFLECTS FIRST ARBITRATION APPEALS RULING

Deny Pittsburgh 'Some Run' Award; Dismiss Cleveland Clearance; Salt Lake City Action Hits 'Conspiracy'

Two awards and three new cases marked the arbitration news among local tribunals this week, as the first decision of the national Appeals Board overshadowed most arbitration proceedings (see page 24). Hearings were concluded in the first Salt Lake City case and at Boston and Charlotte, N. C.

Pittsburgh's first arbitration complaint was dismissed on Monday by A. B. Murray, arbitrator, who ruled that there was no basis for the "some run" complaint filed in mid-March by Herman Lorence, operator of the 18th Street Theatre in Erie, Pa. The award stated that the defendant distributors, RKO, Warner Brothers and Paramount had presented evidence that they had offered runs to the theatre on limited deals. Twentieth Century-Fox, Mr. Murray ruled, was justified in not offering "some run" on the grounds that it deemed the account undesirable and did not wish to sell pictures to the theatre under any run. Costs of the action were divided equally among all parties.

Agrees to Dismissal

At Cleveland, the tribunal's first case, the clearance complaint of Louis Israel, operator of the Ellet theatre, Akron, O., was dismissed without prejudice by Judge Dan B. Cull, arbitrator, on Tuesday. The dismissal was concurred in by the complainant. At earlier hearings Judge Cull postponed action on the case pending the decision of the Appeals Board on the somewhat similar clearance case of the Ken theatre in Chicago. In the decision on Tuesday, based apparently on the appeal opinion, Judge Cull said that in his opinion the consent decree provided only for the reduction, not the elimination of clearance. It was reported at Akron that Mr. Israel would file a new action.

File Three New Cases

At New Haven the Saybrook Theatre, Inc., of Saybrook, Conn., by its treasurer Leo E. Bonoff, filed Connecticut territory's second complaint on Monday against RKO, Loew's and Vitagraph. The operator of the 558-seat Saybrook Theatre seeks elimination of clearance over it by the Capitol and Garde, New London, so that it may play pictures day and date on national release date. The complaint said that the Saybrook is 20 miles from the New London houses, as is the 498-seat Essex Theatre, which now has the privilege of playing pictures on national release date. Although the Capitol recently released its clearance rights over the Saybrook, the petition asks that the Garde be ordered to also release its rights, especially in view of "the location, investment, type of theatre, equipment, size, appointments and transit facilities" of the Saybrook. The Garde, New London, and Essex, Conn., Theatre are named as interested parties.

New York's fifteenth case was filed Tuesday when the Colonial theatre operated by the Gleason Amusement Company at Monroe, N. Y., entered a clearance action against Paramount, RKO, Warners and 20th Century-Fox. It asks elimination of the 14 day clearance held by the Ritz and Broadway theatres at Newburgh, N. Y. Last week the clearance held by the same theatres was the object of a complaint by the Cornwall Amusement Co.

Philadelphia's Case No. 8 was filed Wednesday. A clearance complaint of Columbus Stamper, operator of the Great Northern Theatre in Philadelphia, was brought against Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He named competing Warner theatres. This makes the fifth complaint against the circuit. The operator asks the arbitrator to restore his original playing time of 14 days after Warner's Strand and to allow him to play seven days after circuit's keystone. He now plays 20 days after the Strand.

The award date in Salt Lake City case No. 1, on clearance, was fixed for July 7th by William J. Lowe, arbitrator, at the conclusion of a two-day hearing on June 7th. A brief will be filed by the complainant J. H. Moran, operator of the Royal Theatre, Laurel, Mont., and the Park at Red Lodge, Mont., and an answer by the defendants and intervenor before the decision is reached. Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox and Warner Brothers are the defendants. Mary Roman, manager of the Roman theatre, Red Lodge, intervened.

At the hearing motions were made by the defendant and intervenor to dismiss the case on the grounds that the arbitrator was without jurisdiction. The arbitrator's power as limited in the Consent Decree to ruling does not allow the establishment of new clearances, it was argued. The defendant parties, however, explained that the motion was introduced for the record and expressed a desire that the case go forward to a conclusion.

In his complaint, Mr. Moran alleged that the defendant companies continued to furnish first run pictures to the Roman even though the theatre was cutting prices below those listed as a minimum in the companies' contracts. He requested the arbitrator to set up a "fair and reasonable" schedule of clearance and require the defendants to comply strictly with the terms of their contracts with the Roman theatre.

Boston

Hearings ended at Boston this week before arbitrator John Daley on the complaint filed by the Garbose Brothers of Athol, Mass., against the Big Five, seeking clearance. A total of five hearings were held. Arbitrator Daley is scheduled to file his decision shortly.

No decision has been filed yet in Boston case No. 3 by arbitrator Henry Channing on the clearance case filed by Lucien Descoteaux of Manchester, N. H., against the Big Five.

Charlotte

The first hearing on Charlotte's first case took place on Monday before C. V. Kilpatrick, arbitrator at the North Carolina tribunal. The case involves the clearance complaint of Ellis Blumenthal operator of the Lafayette theatre at Winston-Salem, N. C., against Warner Brothers, RKO, Paramount. Testimony concluded at the first session and briefs entered. A decision is due in thirty days.

New Haven

Connecticut's first arbitration hearing at New Haven on the complaint of Forest Theatre Corporation, operator of the Forest, West Haven, against the five consenting distributors, will be heard at 11 a.m. Monday, June 23, before Frederick H. Wiggin, local attorney. The Forest asks elimination of the clearance of the Rivoli, West Haven. Fishman Theatres, Inc., owner of the Rivoli building, the Howard and White Way have intervened as interested parties.

Philadelphia

Case No. 5 in Philadelphia, the clearance complaint of Samuel and Morris Romerson, operators of the Palm Theatre, Philadelphia, scheduled to be heard on Monday, has been postponed to June 23rd. The postponement was at the request of the attorneys who had previous court committments. The complaint filed May 15 against MGM, 20th Century-Fox and Paramount, will be the first heard here involving the Warner circuit. H. Evans Rhell, Philadelphia business man, is the arbitrator.

Washington

A federal judge, Justice Bolitha J. Laws of the U. S. District Court for the District of Columbia, will arbitrate the fourth and fifth Washington complaints. Although the cases are not consolidated both were filed by L. W. Lea, Danville, Va., operator. Case No. 4 seeks "some run" from the Big Five for the Lea theatre at Danville. Case No. 5 asks a clearance adjustment for the Schoolfield at Schoolfield, Va. Hearings will start in both cases on June 30th.

San Francisco

Donovan O. Peters, San Francisco attorney, is the arbitrator of the tribunals first case. It involves the clearance complaint of William Symfy, operator of the Rita theatre near Vallejo. RKO, Paramount and Warners are the defendants.

Pittsburgh

Hearings on the complaint of the Biordi brothers, Pittsburgh Case No. 3, were postponed on Friday until July 1st by Horace F. Baker, arbitrator, pending examination of briefs on a request that the case be dismissed. Felix A. Jenkins, 20th Century-Fox and William Zimmerman, RKO, home office counsels in charge of arbitration actions, moved for dismissal on the grounds that the complaint came under Section X or Section XX of the decree rather than Section VIII. They asserted it involved specific run and was not subject to arbitration until September 1st.

Denver

Denver's Case No. 3, clearance action by the Nile theatre, Mitchell, Neb., against Paramount, Warners, 20th Century-Fox and six neighboring theatres was postponed from June 12th to 17th.

1941-42 PRODUCT LISTING REACHES 322 WITH RKO'S PROMISE OF FORTY

List 139 Shorts at First Sales Meeting of Decree Signer; Blocks-of-Five Ready to Show-and-Sell, Company Says

RKO Radio Pictures, on Tuesday, made the first product commitment of the "Big Five" consent decree signatories for the new season, which, starting September 1st, compels that company—and MGM, Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and Warners, by signed agreement with the United States Government, to offer their pictures in blocks of no larger than five, and then only after advance trade screenings.

RKO announces a program of from 40 to 45 features, a considerable drop from the 49 to 53 to which the company committed itself last summer for the 1940-41 season now entering its final quarter.

Anticipating product drop by the "Big Five" decree signers, nearly all of the other distributors announcing new season's product to date have raised their feature totals (see MOTION PICTURE HERALD, June 7th, pages 16 to 18).

RKO's minimum of 40 brings to 322 the total features promised to date for 1941-42—Columbia has announced 64; Monogram, 53; Producers Releasing, 42; Republic, 62, and Universal, 61; westerns are included.

Meanwhile, this week, United Artists called its 1941 sales convention for Monday; Warners set a basic selling plan; Paramount held a special pre-season meeting in Canada, and other distributors reported progress toward new marketing, all of which is reported on page 41.

RKO Lists New Properties

The RKO-Radio product announcement was made Tuesday afternoon at convention headquarters, in New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, where salesmen from the field heard descriptions of pictures to be produced by Samuel Goldwyn—new to the company, and by Orson Welles, Walt Disney (continuing feature cartoons), Herbert Wilcox and William Dieterle.

Andy Smith, sales manager, told the convention Wednesday that since January, the sales staff had been familiarized with selling under the consent decree. In discussing selling of the first block, Mr. Smith said each picture would receive a classification. He added the first trade showing under the decree would occur in all exchanges the week of July 7th; that the selling of the first block-of-five would then proceed.

The salesmen were told that principal stars would include Ginger Rogers, Cary Grant, Charles Laughton, Bette Davis, Gary Cooper, Orson Welles and Anna Neagle; that "the studio would stress development of young new personalities"; that directors already assigned included Alfred Hitchcock, Lewis Milestone, William Wyler, Allan Dwan, Tay Garnett, Richard Wallace and Robert Stevenson.

Producer Herbert Wilcox announced Anna Neagle would have as her next vehicle a "strong" drama.

Delegates attended the Joe Louis-Billy Conn boxing match Wednesday evening, as guests of RKO, which was to distribute films of the fight, if it proved exciting. Harry Michalson, short subjects sales manager, told delegates Wednesday afternoon that the RKO-distributed films of the Louis-Buddy Baer fight would play 4,500 theatres, by end of their run.

Short subject releases on the 1941-42 schedule total 190, which will include 161 single reels and 39 two-reelers.

The single reels are: 104 issues of RKO Pathe News, released twice a week; 18 Walt Disney technicolor productions; 13 "Information, Please," with guest artists; 13 "Sportscopes," an action series on sports; 13 "Picture People."

The two-reel subjects include: 13 issues of "The March of Time," produced by Louis de Rochemont; Edgar Kennedy will again star in six comedies, and Ray Whitley continues in a quartette of musical westerns. The Kennedy, Errol and Whitley two-reelers will be produced by Bert Gilroy at the Hollywood studios.

The Radio salesmen were told by Ned Depinet, vice-president, that George E. Schaefer, RKO president, had spent the major portion of his time in recent months at the studios assembling production, directorial and acting talent for the new season, and that he was returning to the studio this week where he would be aided by Joseph I. Breen, newly appointed studio head, and Reginald Amour, executive assistant. Mr. Breen was at the convention.

The first five released for 1941-42 are ready for trade showings, Andrew W. Smith, Jr., the company's general sales manager, announced.

Of the new season's pictures, the majority, including six westerns, will come direct from the company's studios. Fifteen will be contributed by outside independent producers.

SCREEN IS WILLING BUT SWEATER'S WEAK

The screen is both willing and well geared to meet any and every demand of our country's emergency and fine pictures rarely stay far behind the entertainment demand of the moment, George J. Schaefer, president of RKO Radio Pictures, said in his address Wednesday afternoon at the convention.

"We must make progress, not retrogression, with our entertainment and social implement, the screen that is the screen. If we have any troubles at the box office, I do not believe that an under-sized sweater on an oversized girl is the solution. Our troubles will be solved by the flexibility of the industry and not by the flexibility of the sweater," he concluded.

From Independent Producers

Twelve or more pictures will emanate from the studios of independent producers holding distribution contracts with RKO Radio.

Samuel Goldwyn is the most recent addition to the independent producers. Three productions which he will release through RKO Radio in 1941-42 include:

THE LITTLE FOXES, starring Bette Davis, with Herbert Marshall; directed by William Wyler from Lillian Hellman's screenplay of her play.

A Gary Cooper picture, directed by Howard Hawks.

THE SINGING AND THE GOLD, starring Gary Cooper; William Wyler directing; original screenplay by Howard Koch and Anne Froelick.

The Disney Contract

Walt Disney's contract provides for the release by RKO of the cartoon plant's entire output for the coming year, including three or four feature-length color pictures and the usual allotment of 18 shorts. The features are:

FANTASIA, Disney's feature production with the music of Beethoven, Schubert, Tchaikovsky, Bach, et al.

DUMBO OF THE CIRCUS, starring a new Disney cartoon character, a little circus elephant.

BAMBI, a cartoonization of Felix Salten's story.

The Wood, Wilcox Pictures

Scheduled from Sam Wood, who has formed his own producing organization, are one or more pictures.

Herbert Wilcox plans to make two features starring Anna Neagle.

Producer Jerrold Brandt will deliver three more of Clarence Budington Kelland's "Scattergood Baines' series, with Guy Kibbee.

William Dieterle, producer-director, has "The Devil and Daniel Webster" (tentative title) with Edward Arnold, Walter Huston, James Craig, Anne Shirley and Simone Simon, scenarized by Dan Totheroh from Stephen Vincent Benet's Saturday Evening Post serial.

THE BAND PLAYS ON (tentative title) second from producer-director William Dieterle.

Producer Jack Votion will have another "Lum 'n' Abner" feature.

While defense and war continue to be the most important factors in the field of newsreel coverage, Pathe News, in addition to covering these events, has expanded its service widely in South America, Frederic Ullman, Jr., vice-president of Pathe News, told the RKO Radio conventioneers.

March of Time announced that "regional films" and films of the air arm of the navy, free France and the American Red Cross will provide the background for some of next year's M.O.T. productions.

March of Time cameramen are now shooting final scenes for a story on New England—the first of a projected series of "regional" films designed to acquaint Americans with the special role each section of the United States is playing in the cause of National Defense, it was explained. The New England story has been tentatively titled "Six Million Yankees." It will be followed by "regional" films on Texas, the Midwest, and other sections of the U. S.

Sales Leaders Win Awards

Ned E. Depinet, sales head, announced that four branch managers and 19 salesmen with perfect selling records for their territories received special cash awards.

Branch managers R. V. Nolan, St. Louis, A. M. Avery, Memphis, H. F. Taylor, Montreal, and B. Pitkin of New Haven were the exchange chiefs who were rewarded.

The prize-winning salesmen included: Sam Gorelick, Chicago; Harry Decker, Montreal; E. J. Epstein, Philadelphia; Mark Raymon, St. Louis; Tom Williamson, St. Louis; L. S. Gruenberg, St. Louis; Frank Ross, Boston; Morey Anderson, Milwaukee; R. V. Reagin, Memphis; W. G. Wray, Memphis; Arthur Goldsmith, Cleveland; Rovy Branon, Charlotte; H. B. Miller, Montreal; Harry LaVine, Cleveland; Jim Lewis, Kansas City; William Canelli, New Haven; Gifford Davison, Salt Lake City; L. L. Goldsmith, Seattle; R. H. Lange, Pittsburgh, and Jack Ellis, New York.

Documentary Policy Set for World Theatre

The country's first exclusively "documentary film" theatre is to open next Monday evening. It is the World Theatre, 49th Street, off Seventh Avenue, New York City, near the first run theatre district, and for several years operated as a home for stray imports, mostly French. Gil Josephson continues as the operator.

The initial program: "Ku Kan," a feature documentary on China; and " Men and Ships," "Army in Overalls," and "Farming Out Defense Contracts," Government agency films depicting work in the current "emergency."

There was an attempt several months ago to open a theatre in New York for the showing of documentary films—by Harold McCracken, writer, explorer, photographer, who had proposed to use the old Belmont Theatre, nearby on 48th Street, for sponsored advertising films during the afternoon, and purely documentary films during the evening, admission free to ticket holders in the first period, payment required during the evening. The attempt ended with the announcements.

Coburn to Teach

Charles Coburn, starred in RKO's forthcoming "Unexpected Uncle," has been named head of the speech and drama faculty in the summer session of the University of California at Los Angeles. The actor, whose activities as director of the Mohawk Drama Festival at Union College, N. Y., have been cancelled, will deliver a series of lectures on "The Art of Acting."

Paramount News Has Strike Issue

Critics of Paramount News who have called its coverage of labor "biased" and "incomplete" were answered last week with a six-minute special issue, labeled, "Strike Showdown." The 700-foot reel depicted strike action in airplane plants, lumber yards and aluminum mills, East and West. The longest sequence in the reel covered the occupation of the North American Aviation Company's plant at Inglewood, Calif., by regulars of the U. S. Army.

Calling strikes in national defense industries "still the nation's number one headache" the narrator of the special went on to comment "but there are one and a half million men who are strike proof—the new U. S. Army." Pointedly, an insertion showed the acting director of Selective Service, Lewis Hershey, reading an order to all local draft boards to reclassify workers previously deferred as employes of essential industries if they are now not working because of strikes or other reasons.

Paramount officials denied the special labor round up had any policy import. Strikes, they said, were the news of the week. Daily papers, Albert J. Richard, editor of the reel, observed that the daily press headlined the story as first place news last week.

Pennsylvania Amends Sunday Film Law

Pennsylvania amended its local option law Wednesday in the Legislature, and sent it for signature to Governor Arthur James. The law now permits referendums locally, on Sunday film showings, upon petition of five per cent of the local voters belonging to the political party dominant in the last election. The amendment raises the percentage to 20. It also makes the period every four years, instead of five, in which the question may be raised at the polls. Although the bill increases the frequency with which referenda may be held it also requires the signature of more voters. Exhibitors are inclined to believe the law, if signed, will mean a victory for the Reverend George Forney and his Lord's Day Alliance rather than a relaxing of "blue laws" in the state.

Portland Theatre Competition

Plenty of new competition for the regularly established exhibitors in and around Portland, Ore., has now been opened with again starting night dog races, and a number of parks which have decided that not only will they feature outdoor attractions, but will show motion pictures also. The Oaks Park, Portland, is now showing films for the third season, and the Blue Lakes Park has entered the field, with N. B. Welsh as manager.

Hemispheric Defense Film

The Canadian National Film Board on Wednesday disclosed a projected "hemispheric defense" film, to be completed by November with cooperation of Canadian and American authorities. John Grierson, Film Commissioner, said in Toronto that the Department of Public Information would sponsor the picture.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

By virtue of her work in and for motion pictures, it is proper to record here and commend a most admirable attitude and statement of formal public policy by that roundish Elsa Maxwell, noted party-getter-upper.

Seems that Elsa Maxwell believes that the boys in army camps should have free beer and blind dates; this, to keep up army morale—to say nothing of what it would do keeping up the morale of the boys in army camps.

And Elsa says so in print, in an interview with Helen Worden, New York World-Telegram reporter.

"These men are not going to stand for old-fashioned, supervised, rationed entertainment," says Elsa. "Tiddly-winks is no substitute for a girl or pink lemonade for beer."

Proceeding on the premise that even bugs get sore at times, Dave Fleischer, movie cartoon producer for Paramount, charged his cartoonists at the studios in Miami to go out and coin some new cuss words for the bugs in Fleischer cartoons.

"Sufferin' snapdragons!"
"By dandelion!"
"Oh, go butter a butterfly!"
How about "Gnats!"

"Hank" Harold, of the Regent-State Corporation, in Ohio, writes about the letter received by the manager of the cricuit's St. Mary's Theatre, in St. Mary's, from a young girl patron, who explained that she was writing in confidence, unknown to her father, who had purchased a child's ticket for her when he should have bought an adult's. Seems the old man had his wife and daughter stand in the lobby so the cashier out front could not see her size. The gal returned 29 cents, the difference between juvenile and adult prices.

Jules Levey, the producer, Jim Luntzel, his press agent, Lou Pollack, of Universal, and the whole shebang over at Universal's home office, put on a Broadway show for Broadway, the other night, "premiering" Damon Runyon's new movie story, "Tight Shoes." They invited all the Broadway characters and hangers on. Heading the list were Broadway Rose, Blackie Chink, Paddock Charlie, Chicago George, Commodore Dutch, Big Dutch and Swifty Morgan, Harry the Horse, Renee the Hatcheck Girl, Cheesecake Ike, Chicago Browne, Izzy the Painter, Skibooch, Louis the Louse and others from the Roaring Forties to the Fitful Fifties.

Add to the Nice-Goings-on Department the subject matter of the newest of the short subjects which the Rockefeller-Whitney-U. S. Government Committee is circulating in this country in the interests of developing cultural goodwill among the Americas. It deals with the marriage customs of the Mixtec Indians in Mexico, where six- and seven-year-old child marriages are the rule. An eight-year-older is an old buck.

The child bride is chosen by the boy's old man and is brought to live with his family. On the marriage day, the entire village turns out for a big shindig, while the bride and groom kneel tied together by a stout fibre rope throughout the night.

Now that the remaining 35 passengers of the S.S. Robin Moor have been found alive at sea, the story may be told of how Ben Cohen, Loew theatre manager, and one of those rescued last Monday, after weeks afloat, tried repeatedly to make up his mind whether to take that particular ship or another, to his new post for Loew's in South Africa.

Seems that friends in New York, acting on "hunches," "premonitions," or something begged him not to take the American boat that was torpedoed and sunk in the South Atlantic, and its passengers and crew of seven passengers and 29 crewmen set afloat in four lifeboats to the fates of the wind and the sea.

One Cohen advisor insisted strongly, weeks before, that Cohen take the Egyptian ship ZamZam. That, too, however, was torpedoed, but its passengers fared better than did the Robin Moor's, the Nazi ship which attacked the ZamZam picking up her passengers and depositing them safely at a port in France, from where they were later released.

After doing this, one removes the top name from the list, adds his name to the bottom and sends the letter to four persons—friends or enemies. When your name reaches the top of the list you will receive 1,024 Dollar Defense Stamps for yourself.

In case anyone wants to know, that shrill Boooop . . . Booop . . . BOOOOEEEEP! sound at the end of those Pall Mall Cigarette recorded spot announcements is the sound of the collision alarm siren used on a U. S. destroyer.

When a destroyer is in a collision, this siren is blown, followed by the regular whistle which indicates where the point of collision is; two whistles mean forward, one whistle aft., etc. Thirty minutes prior to sailing, a destroyer tests out the alarm siren; blows it three times: Booop . . . Booop . . . BOOOOEEEEP—and follows with one blast of the whistle. All naval ships have somewhat similar alarm sirens, but they differ in pitch according to the type of vessel.

In case anyone wants to know why the Pall Mall Cigarette people use the Booop . . . Booop . . . BOOOOEEEEP of a destroyer, or any other collision alarm, for that matter, they'll have to go and ask the Pall Mall people.

"Do you smoke?"

"Do you swear excitedly?"

"Do you run around nights?"

Myers Invites All Factions to National Convention; N. J. Meeting Warns Distributors on Increases under Decree

by FLOYD STONE
in Atlantic City

An invitation to all factors in the industry to a mid-September conference in the interests of unity and harmony was issued by Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel of National Allied, at a three day convention on June 11th, 12th and 13th of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey. The convention, held at the Ritz-Carlton hotel in Atlantic City, also heard a plea that all units of the industry cooperate in ascertaining the causes of business decline, an intimation the National Allied would fight attempts by distributors to increase the number of percentage pictures, and a counterwarning, from Arthur Kelly, United Artists acting chief, that producers of big pictures deserved "proper terms."

Other matters discussed at the meeting, which included a session of eastern regional directors of National Allied, were a projected advisory service on trade screenings for exhibitors in remote areas and a plan for a poll of the public's film tastes.

Meanwhile, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners were meeting in joint convention in Los Angeles. (See page 15).

Cites Kuykendall Speech

Mr. Myers, chief speaker at the business sessions Thursday, said the national organization's annual convention, at Philadelphia, September 16th through 19th, would be the proper occasion for an all-industry conference. He referred to a speech advocating the same idea, by Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and said the coincidence of convictions that the film industry needed unity and harmony, produced the inference that the Philadelphia convention should embrace all factors, including MPTOA representatives.

He added, however, he did not favor having only a single organization for exhibitors. Two such, at least, are essential, he said.

The committee for the forthcoming convention will work to bring every branch of the industry together, it was said. So far, Allied spokesmen asserted, there has been merely talk about joint conferences and they promised the convention would produce action.

In this connection, he declared that if the Allied organization, and others could not meet the test of unity and cooperation, then exhibitor organizations should be junked.

Asserting the film industry faced the business slump, the loss of public interest, and an untried method of selling, with "the greatest lack of internal unity in its history," Mr. Myers profferred a five-point plan for immediate trial: regional and national exhibitor cooperation; stimulation of showmanship; economies in operation (citing double features as a "waste"); cultivation of public good-will; and unity in the film industry."

The call to all units of the film industry to unite in studying the causes of the business decline, was issued, via resolution unanimously adopted, at the Friday afternoon session.

At that same session, Mr. Kelly pleaded for cooperation in helping his company, a distributor of "quality" pictures, to stay in business. He warned that producers were "taking a terrific gamble" in putting forth their best pictures for selling under the consent decree, and that, in making big pictures, they were entitled to a return for such.

This followed discussion earlier that day by the delegates to the Eastern regional conference of National Allied States Association, of the attempts by the distributors to increase the number of percentage pictures; and their warning, after the discussions that "It is the unanimous opinion of the directors, that the block of five sales plan (consent decree method) is not a justifiable reason for an attempt to obtain an increased number of percentage pictures."

Mr. Kelly said his company had depended previously on foreign markets to return profits on big pictures, and was still endeavoring to obtain the utmost from whatever markets remained. He pointed out that this country alone never heretofore afforded a producer profit from a special picture, and that in turning to this country now as never before, United Artists needed the cooperation of exhibitors, in order to stay in business.

Showmanship Vital

He said too much attention had been given in the past by exhibitors to "the buy," not enough to showmanship. The consent decree may change this, he noted, by eliminating some of the exhibitors' worries about product, enabling them to concentrate on selling the good product they may obtain. With exhibition assertedly faring better than production, in his opinion, the distributor and producer will rely more than ever upon the exhibitors' showmanship, he said.

The advisory service on trade screenings, announced during the convention, is to be conducted for the benefit of exhibitors in remote areas, by Allied's Information Department. Members of that department met Saturday morning after the convention closed to discuss the advisory service.

Colonel H. A. Cole, president of National Allied, a speaker on the second convention day, along with Mr. Myers, was optimistic over prices under the decree, also saying better product was certain because inclusion of poor films in a block of five would lower the price of the whole and influence prices of subsequent blocks. He also reminded the convention that the same playing time still existed for the same number of films.

Of the new MGM policy of percentage pictures, disclosed by the company's general sales manager, William F. Rodgers, at the Los Angeles convention of the MPTOA last week, Colonel Cole said he approved if percentages were fair and if the company did not demand too much preferred playing time.

"Bad" business occupied the initial session of the convention, but was tabled with sentiment that it might be only temporary. The speeches by Mr. Cole, Mr. Myers, and others, and the resolution that all factors in the industry ascertain the causes, did not again bring the subject up for definite action, however, during the convention's length. On the convention's second day, both Colonel Cole, and P. J. Wood, executive secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, rebuked the theatre men for not taking definite action on the business slump.

Myers' Views Outlined In Convention Journal

Mr. Myers' views were outlined at length in the convention journal. He indicated that one cause of the reported recession might be the morbidity of some pictures in an era when people more than ever wanted the screen to make them forget the ugliness of the world. He objected to propaganda, remarking: "It is proper to inquire whether the volume of subjects dealing with war and preparedness for war is not hurting the national morale by denying to the public one of the few remaining avenues of escape from the horror of war."

He also noted: ". . . It is significant that the industry leaders who formerly extolled motion pictures as a medium of entertainment, and an escape from reality, now speak of the movies as an instrumentality for the dissemination of information."

The committee which is to conduct the poll on public tastes, to occur during the next three months, is headed by Sidney Samuelson, representative of the Allied of Eastern Pennsylvania, who, in discussion of the project, commented that producers would do well to "make pictures in line with the facts (of the poll) that are to be collected, or else . . ."

The convention tabled a proposal to sponsor a state bill limiting programs to 135 minutes, thus preventing double features. This was believed a step toward more government control.

Elections were held Friday afternoon, with following unanimous choices: Harry Loewenstein, Newark, president; David Mate, Little Falls, secretary, succeeding Mr. Lowenstein; Maury Miller, Passaic, northern New Jersey vice-president; Ralph Wilkins, Pitman, southern New Jersey vice-president; David Snaper, New Brunswick, treasurer; Louis Gold, Newark, and Harry Hecht, Passaic, directors. The latter five were reelected.

The convention closed Friday evening, with a cocktail party, and testimonial banquet for Mr. Newbury.

L. & J. TRAILERS ON AMERICANISM

Arthur Lucas, president, and William K. Jenkins, secretary and treasurer, of the Lucas and Jenkins Theatre Circuit in Georgia are using special trailers in all of their theatres to promote Americanism.

Aided by special background and music the trailers point that sacrifices on the part of all will be necessary and the "full and uninterrupted cooperation of labor and capital with every constitued authority is of vital necessity." Other trailers prepared by the circuit quote President Roosevelt's various Americanism messages and pledge the cooperation of the L. & J. Circuit toward that end.

Brandt Again Heads The New York ITOA

Harry Brandt was reelected president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York, last week. All other officers were reelected save Frances Bregman, secretary. Abe Leff was chosen for this post.

The meeting last week also discussed product availability, and the rentals situation.

BREEN LEAVES CODE POST, NOW WITH RKO

Hays Discusses the Methods of Board Operation in the Industry's Self Regulation

The resignation of Joseph I. Breen as director of the Production Code Administration of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America became effective Tuesday, June 17th, when Mr. Breen, in New York to conclude his negotiations with George J. Schaefer, president of RKO Radio Pictures, assumed his duties as head of the company's studios in Hollywood.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, from his home in Sullivan, Indiana, where he is spending the week, expressed his regret at Mr. Breen's resignation and said:

"Mr. Breen's service as director of the Production Code Administration has been an immeasurable contribution in demonstrating the value and success of self-regulation under the Motion Picture Production Code. His signal ability, indefatigable energy, and complete devotion to the principles upon which the Code is based enabled him to perform a very difficult task in a truly masterly manner. The entire industry is under great obligation to him. All wish him the greatest success in his new connection."

Staff to Continue

Further, Mr. Hays said: "The work of the Production Code Administration is so organized that it will continue to function effectively with its present staff until the post of director is again filled. The Code Administration operates as a board with a director who is the presiding officer."

It is understood that Geoffrey Shurlock, senior member, who has presided at the daily conferences of the board in Hollywood during Mr. Breen's absences will continue temporarily as acting director.

The Code Board, charged with supervision of the Motion Picture Production Code, which was adopted in 1930 as part of the industry's system of self-regulation, maintains headquarters in Hollywood and a branch in New York. The members of the Hollywood board are:

Geoffrey Shurlock, Charles R. Metzger, Arthur Houghton, Harry Zehner, Earl E. Bright, T. A. Lynch, C. C. Pettijohn, Jr., and Addison Durland.

Francis S. Harmon, executive assistant to Mr. Hays, also serves as head of the eastern branch of the Code board, assisted by Lester Thompson, who, in addition, is director of the Advertising Advisory Council, the department of the MPPDA, which supervises the Motion Picture Advertising Code.

It has always been the custom of the board in Hollywood to assign two of its members to handle each script or picture submitted under the provisions of the Production Code. Daily conferences are held to discuss pictures viewed the previous day and scripts read the previous 24 hours. Opinions are then prepared on the basis of decisions reached by the board in these daily conferences. The identical procedure will continue to be followed.

The Hollywood board handles pictures which are produced in the studios there, while the eastern branch of the board reviews foreign films as well as features and short subjects made in the East.

The magnitude of the work of the Code board is indicated by the fact that it approves between 500 and 600 feature pictures and approximately 800 shorts annually. Some 500 opinions under the Code are written each month, and, in addition, members of the board each year read several thousand scripts, screen treatments, story outlines, novels, short stories and stage plays. As many as nine successive scripts have been submitted on a single film, and the records also disclose that 53 opinions were written in connection with one picture.

The facilities of the board are available on equal terms to members and non-members of the MPPDA as a service to the public and to the entire motion picture industry. Of the 523 features approved during 1940, 329 were for member companies and 194 for non-members of the MPPDA.

Call Consolidated Stockholders

A special meeting of stockholders of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., has been called for July 8th, at the corporation's office in Wilmington, Del., to vote on proposals to remove restrictions and empower the company to purchase its outstanding preferred stock. Consolidated has said that at present it has no plan for the purchase of this stock, but it is recommending that stockholders approve amendments removing the requirement that it may not purchase its preferred stock if it is in default in the payment of any fixed cumulative dividend, or if the net current assets are less than $2,400,000.

National Screen Holds Convention

The four-day annual sales convention of National Screen Service, which opened last Monday at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York, coincided with RKO's annual sales meeting held in the same hotel. George Dembow, vice president in charge of sales of NSS, presided. Herman Robbins is president of the organization. Home office and field executives, as well as branch, district managers and salesmen of NSS, and its two subsidiaries, Advertising Accessories, Inc., and National Screen Accessories, attended the sessions.

On Monday, Mr. Dembow announced the winners of the "Beat Par" sales drive. In the first group Washington was the winner, followed, in order, by Seattle, Atlanta, Des Moines and St. Louis. Indianapolis was winner of the second group, followed by Dallas, Memphis, Oklahoma City and St. Louis.

On Tuesday, RKO invited NSS delegates as its luncheon guests at the Waldorf, and later, the afternoon session of the NNS meeting was held jointly with RKO's meeting, at which Ned E. Depinet, RKO vice president, announced the new season's product. Following the meeting, NSS members were guests at the March of Time-RKO cocktail party held at the Park Lane Hotel. That night, delegates were invited to see RKO's "Citizen Kane," at the Palace Theatre.

The Big Store

(MGM)

Marx Mummery

Slated to be their last picture as a team, "The Big Store" is also one of the funniest ever made by the Marx Brothers. It is, additionally, as was "Night at the Opera," replete with musical interludes, over and above those contributed by Harpo's harp and Chico's piano.

The serious music is provided by Tony Martin, who sings "If It's You," and, in less romantic vein, "Tenement Symphony." On the humorous side of the song schedule, besides the contributions of Harpo and Chico, are Groucho's antics to the tune of "Sing While You Sell," and Virginia O'Brien's version of "Rockabye Baby," performed in her own deadpan way familiar to the many who saw her on the stage in "Meet the People."

The cast includes Virginia Grey, who lends romantic interest; Margaret Dumont, in her usual role of Groucho's humorously romantic foil; Douglas Dumbrille, Henry Armetta and the Six Hits and a Miss.

As is usual in a Marx picture, the story serves only as a peg on which to hang the succession of gags and slightly feverish activity which constitute the Brothers' stock in trade. This time, it makes Martin a singer and composer, who inherits a half interest in a large department store. Since his desire to dispose of his share will lead to an investigation of the store's books, the management is inclined to, in turn, dispose of him, at which point Groucho enters as "Wolf J. Flywheel," private detective.

Two of the most hilarious episodes, done as always in the zany manner of the Brothers, are a sequence concerning mechanical beds, in which half a dozen children get lost and in which, also, the Marxes are attempting to prolong their slumbers, and, at the picture's close, a chase in the best traditions of the movies since the days of "Great Train Robbery," with comic overtones involving bicycles, roller skates and assorted items of merchandise.

Louis K. Sidney produced and Charles Reisner directed, while the three songs were, respectively, the work of Hal Borne, Sid Kuller and Ray Golden; Borne, Kuller and Hal Fimberg, and Ben Oakland, Artie Shaw and Milton Drake. Save for the serious song interludes, all efforts were devoted to and pointed for fun.

Six Hits And A Miss

Three Cockeyed Sailors

(United Artists)

British Humor

Herewith are 75 minutes of British comedy, produced in the England of today's war, bought by Edward Small and released through United Artists.

Judging by Hollywood preview reaction, showmen should have no trouble with the picture save that occasioned by hanging out the S. R. O. signs. For the preview witnessed by your reporter was seen, as well, by several hundred exhibitors of the Los Angeles territory, who found the picture conducive to laughter ranging from chuckles to guffaws, and whose post-preview comment was built to a great extent around the magic word "sleeper."

Most comparable to the American team of Abbott and Costello is the British trio featured here, comprising Tommy Trinder, Michael Wilding and Claude Hulbert. As British sailors, they quite inadvertently find themselves on the German pocket battleship which their own English battleship has been assigned to hunt down. They manage to turn the vessel over to their own captain, after a series of incidents patterned wholly for laughter and successful in their design.

The film is propaganda only in that the sympathetic characterizations are marked with the Union Jack rather than the swastika. Indicative of the light tone sustained through the picture is the fact that a figure of Nelson tattooed on a sailor's chest is changed to one of Hitler for reasons pertaining only to comedy.

Michael Balcon produced at England's Ealing studios, and Walter Forde directed. Carla Lehmann provides romantic interest most competently.

Hit the Road

Reform School Reform

Apart from the marquee dressing supplied in cast names, this comedy-melodrama adds little or nothing to the showman's stock in trade. It is weak in story, performance, production and direction, to the point of nullifying whatever virtue the original idea may have possessed.

The basic idea appears to have been to present a situation in which the overseer of a reform school, having placed five boys on parole to a reformed gangster, in whose criminal hire the fathers of four of the boys have been murdered, sees her experiment succeed in rehabilitation of all hands. That is, in fact, the outcome of the story, detailed on page 146 of the Product Digest, but by the time this has been arrived at, the point of it all has been obscured by a welter of stilted and largely meaningless activity depicting the incorrigibility of the youngsters.

The film may have some usefulness for Saturday matinee purposes of exhibitors whose adolescent customers thrive on gangsterism, fight and motion. Whether it would make clear that vengeance isn't a lofty motive is something of a question.

Previewed in studio projection room to a small press audience which seemed to regard the film as a somewhat regrettable enterprise from all standpoints.—W. R. W.

Moon Over Miami

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Names, Music and Technicolor

In this combining of marquee names, popular-type music and Technicolor the house of Twentieth Century-Fox offers a box office item in the general nature of "That Night in Rio."

It is perhaps stronger than that success in the music department, offering a sparkling collection of numbers by Leo Robin and Ralph Rainger, sung and danced ably by the principals, sometimes with chorus, in the course of the proceedings.

It is as strong as "That Night in Rio" as to Technicolor values.

It is a letdown from the "That Night in Rio" standard in point of story, which limps badly, and humour, neither plot nor dialogue measuring up to precedent. The comedy interludes shared by Jack Haley and Charlotte Greenwood stand out from the rest of the picture in a fashion to make the stretches between seem dull.

The locale is Miami and thereabouts, and the place is glorified by the Technicolor camera beyond the liveliest imagination of the most talented Chamber of Commerce. Outstanding among many spectacular sequences are episodes involving racing speedboats and under-water incidents photographed from the interior of a diving bell. These gladden the eye and please the senses generally.

Production glitter achieved by Harry Joe Brown goes far toward offsetting weaknesses in the story and comedy departments. Direction by Walter Lang struggles against these weaknesses and manages to overcome them as often as not. The principals are similarly successful, individually, in most instances.

In addition to the names of Don Ameche, Betty Grable, Robert Cummings, Charlotte Greenwood and Jack Haley, all known values,

No Greater Sin

(Edward Golden-University Film)

Story of a Syphilitic

This is a utilization of the screen form of dramatic expression for presentation of arguments for stimulation of publicity and legal activity against syphillis.

It was filmed by Edward A. Golden for purposes of distribution and exhibition on what is termed "a road show basis" and is reported to have been produced in nine days. Save in that it relates the subject to National Defense by reference to man-hours lost due to venereal disease, the story follows in general the lines of the original plot of "Damaged Goods," the Eugene Brieux play which reached the screen for states rights distribution in 1915.

The picture does not bear a Production Code Administration certificate.

It is not entertainment, although a song number is sandwiched into the middle of it, and it is not for children.

Broadway Limited

(Roach - United Artists)

Cross-Country Comedy

Primarily "Broadway Limited" introduces Hal Roach's "wham" girl, Marjorie Woodworth, who has been publicized in most of the picture magazines and newspapers in recent months for her journey to Harvard University. The plot is the familiar one told at least once before, in the John Barrymore-Carole Lombard picture "Twenetieth Century" of some seven years ago, a film producer's attempts to sign a star, a madcap publicity stunt beneficial to the actress and himself, and his attempts to frustrate a looming romance between his protege and her current interest. Miss Woodworth is seen as the actress in the story and Dennis O'Keefe portrays an old friend who reappears after years of absence.

Produced by Hal Roach the cast also includes such familiar players as Victor McLaglen, Patsy Kelly, Zasu Pitts, Leonid Kinskey and George E. Stone, each in a role bringing out the utmost in a rather limited story.

Gordon Douglas, the director, with the material at hand has, nevertheless, kept the plot and theme at a steady if not rapid pace. The actress, on a cross-country publicity tour, adopts a baby. En route they discover that it is a kidnapped child for whom the police are searching. From there the plot develops into numerous comical escapades and futile attempts by the principals to rid themselves of the evidence.

Exhibitors will be aided by a campaign currently being conducted by the Pennsylvania Railroad which cooperated in the production of the film.

Underground

(Warner Brothers)

Anti-Nazi Melodrama

Based on recent newspaper stories of Germany's illegal short wave radio system being utilized to undermine the Hitler regime, "Underground" is concerned with the efforts of a group of people in Berlin who sacrifice all so that their truth messages will be heard. The screen adaptation is swift paced. Philip Dorn, remembered for his characterization of the sympathetic German concentration camp doctor in "Escape" is seen as the leader of the illegal radio group in a portrayal that matches his previous role in dramatic perfection.

Jeffrey Lynn, although given top billing, is seen in a more subordinate role as a maimed German officer still faithful to the Reich, and the brother of the underground radio chief. It is not until the climax that his histrionic training is revealed when in an emotional scene he realizes that he has exposed his brother's illegal operations, has sent him to the guillotine and, as a result, has his parents beaten and tortured by storm troopers.

Vincent Sherman, the director, has been given a story which itself is swift paced and of vital interest, and under his directorial guidance its transposition to the screen has retained these elements plus that of suspense which is predominant throughout. A romance between Lynn and Kaaren Verne, who makes her film debut in this production, further aids the progression of the central theme.

In a supporting role is seen Martin Kosleck who, as the cruel and ruthless Gestapo official, renders an impressive performance.

Audiences who were attracted by previous Anti-Nazi films would enjoy this latest contribution. For others, the names of Lynn and Dorn offer box office inducement.

Previewed in the Warner Brothers projection room in New York at a screening for the professional reviewers of the daily, magazine and trade press. The Fourth Estate gave the film concentrated and undivided attention—GEORGE SPIRES.

The Shepherd of the Hills

(Paramount)

Technicolor Drama

Harold Bell Wright's story of the Ozark hill country with its superstitions has been made by Paramount into a lavishly staged Technicolor production, with John Wayne, Betty Field and Harry Carey in the principal roles. The film, as produced by Jack Moss and directed by Henry Hathaway, tells the simple story of a stranger who begins a new life among the hill folk, and who later is found to be the father of the boy who has sworn to kill the parent who long before deserted his mother.

Supporting the principal trio are Beulah Bondi, James Barton, Samuel S. Hinds, Marporie Main, Ward Bond, Marc Lawrence, John Qualen, Fuzzy Knight, Tom Fadden, Olin Howland, Dorothy Adams, Virita Campbell and Fern Emmett.

Reminiscent of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," whose grosses Paramount hopes will be equalled or surpassed by this, "The Shepherd of the Hills" is told slowly, at times straining credulity and leaving loopholes in the narrative.

Outstanding in the cast is Carey, whose portrayal of the title role marks his 33rd year in motion pictures. Wayne has the role of the leader of the moonshiners, all of whom believe they are "hexed" by the desertion of the young

Amusement to Music

Few pictures of comparable length and budget impart amusement equivalent in quantity or consistency to that provided by this 63-minute exercise in the realm of humor and song. Never highbrow, glamorous or pretentious in either department, the picture hits a fast stride as to action and a popular level as to music and stays in the groove from beginning to end.

Having to do with experiences of a dance band and a sister act precipitated into proprietorship of a night club, the story serves well enough as framework on which to append nine song numbers full of snap and charm. Most of these are sung by the Merry Macs including the highly exploitable "Hut Sut Songs." Also notably active vocally is Jane Frazee, who works with and without the mace, and Robert Paige, romantic lead seen as leader of the band.

In contrast to more elaborate and less effective musicals, this one merely sends the talent to the microphone directly and often and lets the singing occur. It's a technique with much to recommend it.

Outstanding on the comedy side is Shemp Howard, lately seen in just about every picture from the Universal studio, who gets in this one a chance to work out and takes full advantage of it. Lon Chaney, Jr., cast as a bumbling muscle man, displays an unsuspected comedy talent alongside. Eve Arden contributes a telling performance as a night club entertainer who knows her way around.

Direction by Charles Lamont keeps events flowing smoothly and extracts full value from his material.

Production by Ken Goldsmith, whose "Hit the Road," reviewed in this edition, bears no kinship whatever to this production, is a credit to his ability and his craft.

The Parson of Panamint

(Paramount)

Man of the Cloth vs. Greed

This latest Harry Sherman production comes to a world at war as did the first film version of the Peter B. Kyne novel, made by Pallas-Paramount in 1916, and starring Dustin Farnum.

Here Phillip Terry plays the part of the young parson, who reaches a western town in the 1890's and tries to instill a spirit of brotherly love among its inhabitants, only to find that their greed for gold has shut them off from communication with other values. Ellen Drew enacts a dance hall girl in love with the parson. Charlie Ruggles, in his first completely serious screen role, is seen as the mayor and founder of Panamint, disgusted with the town's allegedly "respectable" leading citizens. The story is told through the familiar flashback technique, opening and closing with Ruggles' reminiscences about Panamint, now a "ghost town," ruined by its own greed.

In the film's action filled climax, the story takes on the quality of allegory in contrast to earlier portions of the narrative, related in a particularized and straight forward narrative form.

Four songs in the mood of the time, and the hymn, "Rock of Ages," are sung by Miss Drew.

Western

Along about the 1860's there was trouble in the west between the stagecoach lines and the new-fangled iron-horses that puffed along on rails. One of those factional fights is singled out here for Roy Rogers to straighten out. Roy does just that, but not before he and the others concerned in the story engage in the usual western prerequisites.

Supporting Roy are George "Gabby" Hayes, the engaging comedian who is a fixture in this series; Sally Payne, who has appeared in comedy roles in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer short subjects, and here plays a combination comedienne-heroine; Billy Lee, a youngster who does a bang-up job, and Fred Kohler, Jr., the villain of the story, and, incidentally, becoming more and more a chip off the old block.

The Morrison and Lidell Stage Company is an established company. The California Central Railroad is a-building. When the stage company's coaches and relay stations are burned, it appears that the railroad company is behind the burnings. Roy, however, doesn't believe that the railroad president, "Mark Benton" (Joseph Crehan) is that kind of a man. Roy gets himself heartily disliked by both sides before he is able to prove that an unscrupulous financier is playing the companies one against the other so that he can step in and pick up the pieces.

Songs include "Lonely Hills," "Prairie Serenade" and "Stars Over the Prairie."

Poland Forever

(World Pictures)

Documentary

Here is Poland before the war—the scenic highlights, the industries and pleasantries; during the invasion—the bombings, the terror, the siege of Warsaw and the refugees; and now—the armed forces of "Free Poland" fighting back. It is timely and stirring. The scenes of the bombings and the on-rush of the Nazi war machine, although depicted in newsreels, gains immeasurably in emotion when preceded by the peaceful scenes of a Poland before the war. But the very fact that it is about war and suffering makes it a subject of grimness. Running time, 20 minutes.

We Americans

(Pathe-FHA)

Government Documentary

Produced by RKO Pathe for the motion picture division of the Federal Housing Administration, "We Americans" is a one-reel color production of the work accomplished by the FHA. Using as a basis a simple plot of a young married couple who find lasting happiness in a modern home with all the up-to-date appliances made possible through an FHA loan. With Frank Craven, stage and screen star, in the starring role and off screen commentator the subject is entertaining and heart warming. —Running time, ten minutes.

Hollywood awarded new acting and directorial contracts, or extended present agreements, to the number of 12 during the last fortnight.

Leading numerically was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with 50 per cent of the total; five to players, one to a director. The latter, an extension, was given David Miller, following his work on "Billy the Kid." This was Miller's first feature assignment, his work having formerly been in the short subjects department.

Conrad Veidt, Maureen O'Sullivan, Fay Holden, Virginia Gray and Lew Ayres were all given new contracts to supplant or extend present commitments with MGM.

At Warners, James Stephenson was given a new term contract, as was director A. Edward Sutherland. The former will next appear in "Kings Row," and the latter is working on "Nine Lives Are Not Enough."

Bob Hope, who has just finished work in "Nothing But the Truth," has been signed to a new long term deal by Paramount, and will star in "Louisiana Purchase."

Universal has renewed the contract it has with Robert Stack, who starts his third year with that studio.

Director Eugene Forde has been given a new one-year directorial pact by Twentieth Century-Fox.

At RKO Radio, a contract has been given Ann Burr, who was the leading lady in the Orson Welles presentation of the stage play "Native Son." This marks the fifth contract awarded by RKO to actors first cast by Welles. The others have been Dorothy Comingore, Ruth Warrick, Joseph Cotten and Ray Collins, all of whom appeared in "Citizen Kane."

John M. Stahl has signed a producer-director deal for two years, with Twentieth Century-Fox. His first film will be "Another Spring" based on the H. M. Thornman novel.

"THE IRON CLAW" STRIKES AGAIN

If there's advantage to be had in remaking popular feature films, reasoned Larry Darmour, why shouldn't the same principle apply to serials?

Reasoning which wise, this week Monday saw cameras starting to photograph, for Producer Darmour, a modernized version of "The Iron Claw," memorable among the serials of that day when not only the kiddies but also parents and grand-parents found it barely possible to wait seven days for local arrival of the next chapter in the hair-raiser of the screen.

Principal star in the new version, which James Horne is directing, is Charley Quigley, the support including Walter Sande, Joyce Bryant, Forrest Taylor, Hal Price, Paul Ellis, Marion Sais, Frank La Rue, Norman Willis, John Beck and Lee Sargent.

(Hollywood Scene's candidate for next re-make in the serial field is "Million Dollar Mystery". What's yours?)

Boom Town

One of the busiest, if not the busiest, summers in Hollywood production history is shaping up at present. As the returns recording present activities, and the forecasts of future commitments continue to roll in, it is evident that there will be no dearth of pictures for early-season selling.

This week Warners announced that 54 writers have been assigned to 38 screen plays, coincident with the scheduling of 13 features for July production. This marks a new record for the studio.

Ten features and a serial are now in various stages of editing at Columbia, the result of that company's intensive production drive during May, when an all-time high was reached. And a few blocks south on Gower Street, RKO-Radio has nine films in its cutting room, three before the cameras and two more ready to start this month, which puts its further ahead of its new season schedule than ever before in its history.

Continuing its recent heavy production schedule, which is slated to bring in 18 completed pictures by July 1st, Paramount will start five during that month, as well as having put four before the cameras during June. Of these, one in each month is in Technicolor; C. B. De Mille's "Reap the Wild Wind," which started this week, and "Louisiana Purchase," set to go July 7th. Additionally, between now and mid-November, Paramount has scheduled definite starting dates for 33 features.

At Universal, work is continuing on six features, and an equal number are being readied to start within the next fortnight. Monogram has slated six more pictures for the remainder of this month.

Roy Jones has been signed to a new four-year pact as head of the Universal still department in Hollywood. Mr. Jones, who has been with the company for ten years, won first prize at the first annual still photographers' show of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Miss Mary Pickford has accepted chairmanship of the Hollywood Women's Division of United China Relief and is gathering a group of the film capital's leading women stars to participate in a campaign among the stars and studio employes.

Eddie Albert, former Warner player, and Irving Applebaum, independent producer, have formed a company to produce "Treasure Hunt" in which the actor will star.

Republic has announced the special release this month of Richard Llewellyn's "Poison Pen." The film, taken from a story by the author of "How Green Was My Valley," stars Flora Robson.

U.A. STARTS REGIONALS NEXT WEEK WARNERS' HINTS DUAL SALES POLICY

Sears Expects Single Sales In Important Situations and Blocks - of - Five for Others; Convention Is Set for July

Product and policy commitments for 1941-42 this week reached the half-way mark and moved quickly into the second half of pre-seasonal fabrication of what a new year's product supply might look like and the manner and method of offering it for sale and playing to the exhibitor customers.

RKO's sales convention, in New York, opening Monday, brought forth an announcement of from 40 to 45 features for the new season, titles of which appear on pages 29 and 30, along with other convention reports.

On Tuesday, United Artists announced that it would be the sixth distributor to have studio and distribution management meet with sales forces to lay down a season's program.

Warners Will Sell Singly, Says Sears

Meanwhile, Warners, still to meet, was considering selling under the decree by the method of single sales for large spots, and blocks of five for smaller ones.

In some of the more important situations, Warners will sell films singly, Gradwell A. Sears, the company's vice-president in charge of sales, said last weekend in Hollywood, where he has been conferring on new product plans. In other situations, it will, of course, adhere to the blocks of five selling method prescribed by the consent decree, he added.

"There is no particular advantage in either method as I see it," he said.

Regarding extension of single picture selling to smaller situations, Mr. Sears said it was impractical.

He declared the time and site of the company's sales convention had been decided and would be disclosed in New York probably before the week's end.

It was unofficially reported at the New York home office on Wednesday, after Mr. Sears' return, that the Warner convention would be held the last week of July, probably in a mid-west city; and that a Canadian sales convention might also be held, separately.

With the designation of "Dive Bombers" for August 30th release, the 1940-41 program will be completed, Mr. Sears said. The complete list of July-August releases follows:

July 5: "Kisses for Breakfast," with Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyatt and Shirley Ross.

July 12: "The Bride Came C. O. D.," with Bette Davis and James Cagney.

July 19: "Bullets for O'Hara," with Joan Perry and Roger Pryor.

July 26: "Bad Men of Missouri," with Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, Wayne Morris and Victor Jory.

August 2: "Three Sons O'Guns," with Wayne Morris, Tom Brown, William T. Orr, Marjorie Rambeau and Irene Rich.

August 9: "Manpower," with Edward G. Robinson, Marlene Dietrich, George Raft, Alan Hale and Frank McHugh.

August 23: "Highway West," with Brenda Marshall, Olympe Bradna and Arthur Kennedy.

August 30: "Dive Bomber," with Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy, Robert Armstrong, Allen Jenkins, Alexis Smith and Regis Toomey.

PROBE REVIVAL OF "DEALERS IN DEATH"

Los Angeles investigators for the Dies Congressional Committee investigating un-American activities this week began a probe into the Institute of Universal Research and Administration, which is making use of a film, made in 1934, called "Dealers in Death," an expose of munitions makers' profits.

The Institute, an organization described as extremely pacifist, is obtaining members through the distribution of leaflets in automobiles and elsewhere, inviting persons alarmed at the possibilities of war involving the United States to showings of the film. After the film is shown, the audience is asked to join the organization by paying $20, which entitles them to 12 hours of training which will then enable them to become instructors in the movement, "making from $100 to $300 weekly."

Monroe Shaff, who produced the film and who now is a Hollywood writer, has not authorized the use of the film by the organization, which is being kept secret as to officers and membership.

Paramount Holds Canadian Meeting

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, stressed the importance of films in current affairs, in an address which was a feature of the opening day, Monday, of the company's first Canadian sales convention. The convention was at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, and continued through Wednesday.

On the first day, more than 100 exhibitors from adjacent parts of Canada were the company's guests at a luncheon. Among the prominent exhibitors present were: J. J. Fitzgibbons, new head of Famous Players Canadian Corporation; Nicholas Ganetakos, of the United Theatres, Montreal; Jules and Herb Allen, Toronto; Morris Milligan, Hamilton; Simon Moretsky, Windsor, and Jack Ward, Niagara Falls.

Other speakers were Austin Keough, general counsel, who discussed the consent decree's effect upon Canada, predicting better product as a result; Neil Agnew, sales manager, who discussed new product; Oscar Morgan, short subjects manager, who outlined the company's new and larger shorts program; Robert Gilham, advertising and publicity director, who noted advertising's role in selling films.

They were introduced by Del Goodman, Canadian sales manager.

The first day's business was concluded by a screening of the new Bob Hope comedy, "Caught in the Draft," and some short subjects.

Tuesday and Wednesday were devoted to new season product, and selling plans. There was a screening Tuesday evening of "Skylark."

Other pictures discussed at the meeting, it is reported, were: "Sullivan's Travels," the new Preston Sturges' film; "Birth of the Blues," the Bing Crosby-Mary Martin film; "Bahama Passage," with Madeleine Carroll and Sterling Hayden; "Nothing but the Truth," with Bob Hope, and "Among the Living." Dorothy Lamour and Jon Hall are starred in "Aloma of the South Seas," produced in Technicolor.

Meanwhile, the company is continuing its heavy production schedule, with five pictures to begin work in July, and 18 pictures to have been completed by July 1st. The pictures to be filmed in July are "Louisiana Purchase," "Take a Letter, Darling," "Sing a Song of Homicide," "Mrs. Aldrich's Boy," and "American Empire."

United Artists Begins Regionals on Monday

United Artists will hold the first of five district sales meetings in New York City next Monday and Tuesday. They will be presided over by Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president in charge of sales, assisted by Harry L. Gold, vice-president and eastern sales manager, and Haskell M. Masters, western sales manager.

The other meetings will be held in New Orleans, Cincinnati, Chicago, and San Francisco.

Personnel to attend the New York meeting will be from the Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Buffalo, and New Haven offices; to attend the New Orleans meeting, June 26th and 27th, from the Atlanta, Dallas, Charlotte, and New Orleans offices. The Cincinnati meeting will occur June 29th and 30th, with men from the office in that city, in Indianapolis, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh; the Chicago meeting will be on June 30th, July 1st and 2nd, and will comprise persons from the offices in that city, the Canadian office, and the offices in Denver, Detroit, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, and St. Louis.

The final district meeting will be July 7th and 8th, San Francisco, with sales people from that city, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, and Seattle.

Walter Wanger, producer for United Artists, on Tuesday announced signing of Ernst Lubitsch as director, and the acquisition of screen rights to an original melodrama-comedy, written by Melchior Lengyel and Mr. Lubitsch.

Republic Reports New Circuit Deals

Republic Pictures has closed for its entire 1941-42 program with the Publix-Great States Theatres, of 58 houses in Illinois and Indiana.

It also negotiated a contract for the same product with the Essaness circuit of Chicago, with 27 theatres.

Additionally, the film company has signed with the S. J. Gregory circuit, operating 18 theatres in Indiana and Illinois.

James R. Grainger, president, was in New York briefly the beginning of the week, leaving hurriedly for product negotiations in Dallas, Oklahoma City, St. Louis, and Detroit.

Twentieth Century-Fox last week signed John M. Stahl to a producing-directing contract, and he will report at the lot as soon as he finishes his current assignment for Columbia, "Our Wife."

With four June releases and two of four scheduled for July release already completed, Producers Releasing Corporation is ahead of schedule, it reported Monday. The June releases are "Paper Bullets," "Texas Marshal," "Criminals Within," "Double Cross." The two July releases completed are "Desperate Cargo" and "Gambling Daughters." The two other July releases are "Billy the Kid in Santa Fe" and "The Lone Rider."

Other pictures in preparation are "Reg'lar Fellers" and "Mr. Celebrity."

DAILY TELEVISION READY, BUT FOR WHOM, WITH WHAT IS A QUESTION

Adjustment of Receiving Sets to New Standards and Bands Stumbling Block; Manufacture Delayed by Defense Needs

Regular daily television will be on the air starting July 1st, at least 30 hours a week in the New York area, in accord with the edict of the Federal Communications Commission which approved commercial television following hearings in mid-March. At the 11th hour however, just what the programs will be, who will see them, and how, remains a question.

At least two New York stations are ready to start their television program on July 1st. Others will be on the air as soon as they can complete transmitter installations and set up a program department.

Most of the programs to be televised on July 1st and afterwards appear destined, at present, to bloom unseen. Only a few of the estimated 3,500 to 4,000 television receivers in the New York metropolitan area are adapted to the new standards and channels decreed by the FCC for commercial operation. Each receiver must be readjusted to increase the line definition from 441 to 525, to receive frequency modulation sound signals, and cover the widened range of channels to which licensed stations have been assigned.

Manufacture Delayed

Prospects for large scale manufacture of new television receivers, and the launching of an extensive sales campaign to popularize them appear slim. Defense demands on radio manufacturers are likely to preclude any large scale television expansion until after the national emergency, according to experts in the field. Meanwhile both broadcasters and manufacturers say they will comply as far as resources allow with the FCC order for immediate commercial television. The Radio Manufacturers Association at its convention in Chicago last week was pessimistic about television development now.

Commercial sponsorship of the initial television programs appears unlikely. The larger stations report that the sponsors of some of their regular radio programs, department stores, and a few national advertising agencies have dickered for quotations on television rates and program material. No contracts have been signed however, and not much hope is held of obtaining large-scale sponsorship until audiences have been built up through good sustaining program material and high-pressure sales promotion of receiving equipment.

Material for sustaining programs is meanwhile giving the program directors of television stations a persistent headache. Talent scouts are knee-deep in auditions at all of the major television studios, interviewing everyone from news commentators to acrobats and bicycle clowns. Dramatic programs, with doubling eliminated by the visual nature of the programs are expected to require large additions to rosters of radio actors.

Films will supply a sizeable portion of the television programs, in some instances as much as fifty per cent, but again the product supply is limited by the reluctance of motion picture companies to release their product for air use, by difficulties over ASCAP music licenses, and by the shortage of quality product produced outside the organized motion picture industry.

Theatre television, utilizing one of the several large screen methods demonstrated within the past few months is also biding its time in an "up in the air" state. The Radio Corporation of America reports that it is still negotiating sales of its $30,000 large-screen apparatus for both independent houses and circuits. The Rialto theatre, New York, has installed the Scophony equipment brought from London and will start tests next week. Meanwhile a new "little theatre" television project was announced in New York by a British promoter.

NBC Asks New Licenses

The National Broadcasting Company operator of W2XBS, atop the Empire State building, New York, announces that it is ready for July 1st operation. The station has been on the air experimentally since 1936. How much of the 15 hours a week scheduled program material will be commercially sponsored was not revealed in preliminary announcements. To meet the FCC rulings broadcasts will be transmitted on a minimum weekly schedule between 6 and 11 P.M. for at least six days a week. Meanwhile NBC gave the first indication of what the inaugural programs will include.

The Radio Corporation of America, manufacturer of receivers, and co-sponsor with NBC of experimental broadcasting announces that it will adjust its television receivers to new standards without charge. The project is an extensive one however, and engineers predict that home sets will have to be returned to the factory for adjustment. Estimates of the cost run as high as $50 per set. The work will be sandwiched between regular RCA operations, and officials would make no guess as to how long, with defense work on the prior list, the readjustment of the several thousand sets in the New York area alone would take.

RCA has also asked permission from the FCC to set up television stations at New York and Washington. A construction permit has already been granted to NBC for F3XNB in Washington. The FCC has been asked to extend the permit to cover commercial operation. The station is scheduled for completion in November and for commercial operation in March 1942.

Sets Miss Columbia

Columbia Broadcasting System, busy at its television headquarters in the Grand Central Terminal, New York, with program preparations and engineering work intends to be on the air July 1st from its transmitter atop the Chrysler building. Its lot is the unhappiest of all the telecasters however in respect to being seen and heard by existing receivers.

Under the FCC order assigning channels CBS resumes operation on Channel No. 2, formerly held by the U. S. Army. None of the home sets now in use are equipped to dial this waveband. CBS however asserts that it will be on the air anyway, and expects manufacturers to make adjustments in the receivers. Program preparations at CBS are under the direction of Adrian Murphy, director of the television division and Gilbert Seldes, program director.

DuMont Ready Later

DuMont television, linked closely with Paramount Pictures Corp. will not be on the air with 15 hour per week commercial programs until later in the summer. Work is still underway on its New York transmitter at 515 Madison Avenue and no commercial programs will begin until it has been thoroughly tested. Auditions and talent rehearsals are continuing however under the direction of William Baltin, program chief.

The DuMont Laboratories at Passaic and its sales organization in New York are completing arrangements to adapt outstanding receivers to new standards. Under the guarantee with which the sets were sold the company will make all necessary changes without charge. The sets however will have to be returned to the Passaic laboratories. There the company is completing work on new factory space, to be ready for occupancy next week. Defense contracts again hold prior call on DuMont workers and materials but the company is hopeful of adjusting old sets and launching a new manufacturing program within a few weeks.

Film is expected to play a large part in the DuMont programs. Paramount newsreels and the parent Paramount Pictures Corp. are reported surveying their news and studio product for reels which may be adapted to air use. It is held not unlikely that Paramount will make special film subjects for the television subsidiary.

Defense Curbs Production

Very slight interest in the immediate production of television receivers and frequency modulation sets was evident among members of the Radio Manufacturers Association at their annual convention at the Stevens Hotel, Chicago, on June 10th.

With a material shortage facing them and a scarcity of machine tools, the manufacturers are not tooling up for new products, according to Bond Geddes, executive vice-president of the RMA.

"Metal shortages caused by the defense program and tube materials, which will soon be hard to get, preclude any great development of television in the coming year", said Mr. Geddes, "and I see no enlargement of the frequency modulation broadcasts because of the transmitter situation, the building of which requires large quantities of steel, manganese, mica,

UNIONS DISCLAIM TELEVISION FIGHT

Locals in Chicago, of the IATSE, and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, have denied reports of friction over installation of television equipment in theatres—reports which began when work was stopped on installation of a machine in the Balaban and Katz Chicago Theatre.

The circuit claimed the machine was for exploitation purposes, not air use, and that its complete installation was for their decision, at a time when such would draw most business to the house; and, consequently, no dispute existed between the circuit and the unions.

A similar disclaimer of union friction was issued by Robert P. Brooks, Business agent of the electrical workers, Local, Number 2, who added: "We are not interested until it (television) gets going commercially and the subject hasn't come up yet."

aluminum and other metals on the priorities list."

James S. Knowlson, president of the RMA, in his address to the members said, "Although the FCC has given television the 'green-light' and approved the standard for commercialization, it does not mean a great deal, so far as immediate television business is concerned, but it does put television development in the place where you can all go ahead with the confidence that when we return to times of peace this field will be open, and I hardly need say that, in the opinion of most of us, television is going to be a service that outrivals radio."

It was the opinion of Mr. Geddes that as far as RMA members were concerned there would be little or no production of television sets in the coming year, despite the start of commercial operations on July 1st.

The RMA includes all the principal manufacturers of television equipment. At the Chicago meeting they voted to continue through RMA research and engineering committees the work of standardization launched originally by the National Television Standards Committee. A sub-committee of the RMA will continue the study of color television. Dr. Peter Goldmark, head of the CBS television research division is chairman.

Report Technical Progress

Major progress in the development of pickup and broadcasting methods has been reported in recent months. Both CBS and NBC have worked out new systems of lighting television stages. The CBS method utilizes a hanging bank of fluorescent lamps and is said to completely eliminate the overheating and high power consumption of early illumination for the television cameras.

DuMont Laboratories recently announced a new electronic view finder for television cameras. The device permits the cameraman to see the video image, transferred to the cathone ray tube of the finder, in exactly the same form in which it is broadcast. Hitherto there had been discrepancy between the optical view finder's image and the broadcast picture. Cameramen had to reply on distant monitors for correction of the video signal. Controls on the electronic view finder now permit instant adjustment of focus, brightness, video gain and image size.

DuMont has also developed a new 12 unit portable transmitter unit to facilitate remote pickup of television events. The equipment is standardized in protecting cabinets and can be packed into a normal sedan. It includes single iconoscope camera, power unit, rectifiers, film scanner, and control equipment.

Theatre Television Delayed

Theatre television remains in a stage presently characterized by many "ifs." According to exhibitors the largest "if" is the cost of theatre receivers now on the market. Also in the "if" class is the availability of product for large screen exhibition at a profitable admission price. Sports events are generally conceded to offer the best immediate program source. They however are conditioned by a capital "if" which includes all the problems of royalty arrangements with the sports promoters, transmission by a television product corporation and the ultimate amount which the public will pay for theatre television.

To determine the latter RCA, following its recent telecast of a Brooklyn-Dodgers—Philadelphia baseball game to a "cross section" audience at the New Yorker theatre, New York, passed out questionnaires asking how much audiences would be willing to pay for sports events, plays or news programs. Thomas F. Joyce, vice-president in charge of television, reported that the replies "were unexpectedly high, and very encouraging." He said a large percentage of the audience, which included soldiers, sailors, and youths, some baseball fans, some not, replied to the query. Prices which they expressed willingness to pay ranged from 50 cents to $2.00. The average he said compared favorably with first run motion picture admissions in the New York area.

At New York DuMont officials admitted that they were "very interested" in the possibility of theatre equipment use. The specific nature of DuMont plans was not revealed however. A spokesman classed them as "very tentative, until we see how extensive defense demands become."

B. & K. Asks Extension

Progress is being made slowly but definitely at the Balaban & Katz television station W9XBK, Chicago, according to W. C. Eddy, who is in charge. Although equipment is still incomplete it is hoped that materials will be delivered so that the station will be operating on a commercial basis on or before the expiration of the construction permit in September, Balaban and Katz is affiliated with Paramount, which in turn controls DuMont operations.

Meanwhile the station is telecasting experimentally each day for 15 to 30 minutes mostly to simplify studio technique and to train personnel. Programs are not designed for entertainment purposes. A new method of studio lighting has been developed using less than 800 foot candles incandescent light. Image being used at present is 525 lines, 30 frames per second interlaced. In the extensive engineering program planned, Mr. Eddy has the assistance of A. H. Brolly, chief engineer, and Reinald Werrenrath.

Second New York Theatre

Jack Davis, English exhibitor, will open the second television theatre promised for New York. He followed Arthur Mayer's recent announcement of large screen television for the Rialto theatre, with a statement that he had leased the Little Carnegie Playhouse on 57th St. for ten years and will convert it into a newsreel and television theatre. The house recently ended its 13th season as an "art cinema" specializing in foreign films.

Mr. Davis, who was managing director of the British newsreel theatre chain known as the Monseigneurs, operators of 12 houses in London and Scotland, is financed by American capital. He plans to reconstruct the Little Carnegie into an intimate, "club-like" theatre, seating 400 or 450 persons comfortably, providing spacious restrooms, reading and writing rooms, and light refreshments, all for a 25c admission price.

The English theatre director when interviewed last week about his plans for the 57th Street theatre, said he would install either Scophony or RCA equipment. The London television theatre, built in 1939, was equipped with the Scophony system.

According to Mr. Davis, television for cinema houses "is bristling with difficulties. First, one must get the right to enlarge television pictures. Next, you must get permission from the people who own the land on which an event takes place, to screen it, and third, you must get permission from the promoters of the event."

At the time of the Boon-Danaher fight in England in 1939, Mr. Davis' theatre, the New Monseigneur Cinema in London was opened to the public for the first time. Before the promotors of the fight would give him permission to televize the event, Mr. Davis "had to make a deal."

As far as television in the United States is concerned, Mr. Davis doesn't "believe that the government will allow television to be restricted to any one particular group. However, there's nothing to prevent a chain of theatres, like Loew's or RKO, for example, from getting in touch with a promoter of a popular high-publicized event and arranging with them for exclusive showing of that event. In effect, the highest bidder, of course, can set such a deal."

Mr. Davis admits plans to run pictures televising prize fights or other sports events, must include arrangements with promoters to reunit a percentage of theatre receipts.

"But", according to Mr. Davis, "after television has been launched, the revenue derived from the small set users will far exceed theatre revenues."

He declared that the sale of home television sets was greatly increased in London and its metropolitan area right after the Boon-Danaher fight. He believes that a similar event in America will result in the sudden upswing of sales here.

At present, he is negotiating with the British Ministry of Information for permission to run British newsreels and documentary films at the Little Carnegie, but, he explained, "conscientious effort will be made to avoid propaganda films."

Test Longest Coaxial Cable

Engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company this week reported the conclusion of experiments with long distance transmission of television signals over an 800 mile coaxial cable loop between Minneapolis and Stevens Point, Wisc. The tests, they said, show that the coaxial line is perfectly adapted to the transmission of network television signals.

The line, laid in a four-wire conduit over the 200 miles between Minneapolis and Stevens Lake was constructed in order to experiment with long distance transmission of multiple telephone signals. Following telephone tests the Bell engineers experimented with television signals. They reported that signals were received without distortion after traveling 800 miles over the four looped 200 mile lines. Relay stations boost the impulse every five miles.

Chief obstacle to installing coaxial line for television use alone is its high cost. The 200 mile line cost $2,500,000 to construct. Coaxial line is feasible for telephone use only where there is a large volume of inter-city direct long line business. In such cases it would also be available for a television network. Currently A. T. & T. is linking Baltimore and Washington with coaxial line and is expected to soon close the New York-Philadelphia link with a Baltimore-Philadelphia line. This would provide coaxial lines for 225 miles along the eastern seaboard, linking three cities which have where television stations already under construction.

PARAMOUNT AND WARNERS REPORT PROFITS; KAO STOCK DEAL IS HIT

Balaban Tells Holders of 100% Increase; Debt Reduced by $3,900,000 in 1940; Warner 26-Week Net $2,782,544

Financial and corporate situations of some of the film companies were a shifting picture this week, with reports from several showing a favorable tinge; with one, the Disney company, deferring the quarterly preferred stock dividend; and with another, United Artists, going through certain corporate realignments.

Meanwhile, another realignment, the refunding and consolidation plan for Keith-Albee-Orpheum, almost received a setback when Russell M. Van Kirk, a New York stock broker, acting through J. M. Farlee, a general brokerage firm of that city, on Thursday, June 12th, obtained a temporary injunction in Wilmington, Delaware, Chancery Court, restraining Radio-Keith Orpheum from voting on the deal until after required hearing and ruling July 2nd at Wilmington.

However, on Wednesday, Chancellor W. W. Harrington dismissed the injunction, on petition of complainant, for reasons unstated.

Profits Doubled

Paramount's stockholders on Tuesday reelected their board of directors, and heard from Barney Balaban, president, that the earnings for the 1940 fiscal year were nearly 100 per cent more than those of 1939, that the debt of Paramount and consolidated subsidiaries showed a reduction of $3,900,000, and that the earnings for the first quarter of this year were $2,475,000, including a $650,000 share of undistributed net earnings of partially owned non-consolidated companies, compared with the similar figures, $1,606,000 and $716,000 for the first quarter of 1940.

Warner Brothers at the same time reported a net operating profit of $2,782,544 for the 26 weeks ended March 1st, this year, compared with a figure of $1,518,497 for the same period last year; and Monogram reported that, paying back $300,000 to the Guaranty Trust Company this month, it now has no more outstanding bank loans.

United Artists partner-owners, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, and Alexander Korda were reported this week continuing negotiations for the Fairbanks stock, and offering partnerships to producers such as Frank Capra, David Selznick, and their like.

Paramount Stockholders Reelect Board of Directors

With more than 77 per cent of its stockholders represented either in person or by proxy, the annual meeting of the stockholders of Paramount Pictures, Inc. was held Tuesday in New York, and the entire board of directors was unanimously re-elected.

The members of the board of directors who were reelected are: Neil F. Agnew, Barney Balaban, Stephen Calaghan, Y. Frank Freeman, Harvey D. Gibson, A. Conger Goodyear, Stanton Griffis, Duncan G. Harris, John D. Hertz, John W. Hicks, Jr., Austin C. Keough, Earl I. McClintock, Maurice Newton, E. V. Richards, Edwin L. Weisl and Adolph Zukor.

Mr. Balaban said that earnings for the 1940 fiscal year were nearly 100 per cent more than in 1939. "Combined consolidated earnings and share of undistributed earnings of partially owned non-consolidated subsidiaries for the fiscal year 1940 aggregate $7,633,130 as compared with $3,874,944 for 1939" he told the stockholders. "Dividends paid stockholders during 1940 aggregated $2,273,923, representing dividends at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on the first and second preferred stocks, and three dividends aggregating 45 cents per share on the common stock." The company's financial position is "excellent" he said "On January 4, 1941, its consolidated balance sheet shows cash and marketable securities at $12,593,455, with total current and working assets of $35,304,371, and current liabilities of $7,974,516. a ratio of about 4.4 to 1." Current and working assets of the company and its consolidated subsidiaries" he continued, "aggregate $30,446,808, equal approximately to all liabilities of these companies, including a funded debt, regardless of when due."

Paramount Debt Reduced

Mr. Balaban also remarked the reduction of debt and senior securities. He said: "The debt of Paramount and its consolidated subsidiaries shows a reduction of $3,900,000 . . . in the aggregate, these debt reductions and preferred stock retirements represent a decrease in these accounts of approximately $6,900,000."

He added that Paramount's earnings for the first quarter of this year were $2,475,000, including a $650,000 share of undistributed net earnings of partially owned non-consolidated companies. "This," he added, "compared with $1,606,000 for the first quarter of 1940, which includes $716,000 share of undistributed net earnings of partially owned companies.

"Present indications are that earnings for the second quarter of 1941 will exceed the $1,478,000 for the second quarter of 1940."

Mr. Balaban remarked the increase in taxes, because of the defense situation, and that the quoted earnings for the first quarter of 1941 were after deducting income taxes of 30 per cent of the net profits higher taxes than last year. He added:

"The matter of calculating excess profits taxes is rather complicated, and few court interpretations have been made.

"No excess profits taxes were believed to have accrued on the earnings of the company and consolidated subsidiaries for last year. Whether there will be any for 1941, depends upon whether the earnings continue to show a similar substantial increase over 1940."

Mr. Balaban commended "escape" pictures in the reported current business depression and said experience showed theatres playing such pictures profited compared with last year. He noted: "There has been no response at the box office as yet in proportion to the increased industrial production. It is hoped that the box office will finally respond to such increased defense production, as it did in England and Canada."

Mr. Balaban adverted to the anti-trust suits ended and pending and said, "Your company intends to exert its best efforts to make the (consent) decree work successfully in the interest of the public and of the motion picture industry."

The Paramount executive asserted "Theatre operations for 1941 are to date somewhat better than for the previous year," with, however, "increased taxes offsetting the improvement in earnings."

PARAMOUNT PREPARED FOR DECREE COSTS

Paramount's increased costs under the consent decree are apparently calculated at $1,000,000 or more, it was indicated on Monday, at the annual meeting of the company's stockholders. Barney Balaban, president, told them the firm had already absorbed, or charged to operating costs, between 60 and 70 per cent — $500,000—of the anticipated costs. He noted that decree operations would necessitate more sales people, and, possibly, more advertising. He also predicted, answering a stockholder, that irregular flow of product and higher picture costs, under the decree, might help eliminate double features.

Obtains Writ Against RKO in KAO Voting

An order requiring Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation to appear in the Court of Chancery, Wilmington, Del., July 2 and show cause why it should not be enjoined from voting its holding of seven per cent cumulative preferred stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation in favor of a proposed reorganization of KAO, was issued by Judge Richard S. Rodney, in that court Thursday, June 12th.

Judge Rodney, sitting as associate judge of the court in the absence of Chancellor W. W. Harrington, restrained RKO from voting the stock or carrying out the proposed reorganization until after the ruling on July 2.

Plaintiff's counsel abruptly withdrew the action, however, on Wednesday, whereupon Chancellor Harrington dismissed the injunction and invalidated the order.

J. S. Farlee & Co., a New York corporation, instituted the action against RKO. In addition to seeking a prevention of the stock vote, Farlee asked exclusion of RKO from participating in the reorganization plan.

The complainant charged that one part of the proposed reorganization was detrimental to it and other minority stockholders of the defendant. It pointed out that it was beneficial owner of 1,764 shares of cumulative 6 per cent convertible preferred stock of RKO since reorganization of the defendant in 1939 and prior to that it had owned in excess of $100,000 principal amount of 10-year six per cent gold debentures issued by RKO.

In striking at the one part of the proposed reorganization plan the complainant contended that under the plan the defendant would be compelled to purchase 26,825 shares of preferred stock of KOA at $114.24 per share or a total cost of $3,064,756 which said shares they have agreed to sell to KOA at a rate of $65 a share or a total consideration of $1,743,625 resulting in a cash loss to the defendant of $1,321,131.

The complainant further contended that the defendant now carried its present holding of 21,761 shares of preferred of KAO at $100 a share plus accrued dividends amounting to $15.75 per share and that the sale of these at $65 a share would result in a capital loss of $791,635 plus a loss of $342,735.75 in accrued dividends.

This, the complainant charged, would make an aggregate loss of $3,455,511.75 and for this loss to the defendant it is receiving no present consideration.

Farlee charged that the plan had "been fraudulently evolved solely for the benefit of certain individual and corporate interests participating in the control of both the defendant and KAO" and that to permit "this defendant to vote its preferred stock of KAO in favor of this plan would result in irreparable damage to the complainant and other minority owners of preferred stock of the defendant."

Farlee asked that a temporary injunction be issued until further hearing preventing the defendant from voting any or all of the 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock of KAO owned by it in favor of the proposed reorganization of KAO and from joining or participating, either directly or indirectly in the said plan in any manner whatsoever.

Farlee, a New York general brokerage firm, specializing in bonds, was represented by C. Edward Duffy, Wilmington attorney.

Judge Rodney ordered that affidavits by the complainant be filed by June 19, reply affidavits by June 26 and that affidavits on behalf of the complainant in reply on or before June 30.

The company will fight the injunction, which it feels is directed against it, rather than the plan, observers in New York said last week. Meanwhile, the special meeting of the KAO stockholders Thursday, June 12th, was adjourned to next Tuesday, because final contract drafts on the refunding were not complete.

RKO Radio Pictures has reported the following salaries to the SEC: George Schaefer, president, $81,808 in salary and fees, plus $250 per week for certain expenses; Ned E. Depinet, vice-president, $55,060; N. Peter Rathvon, chairman of the executive committee, $28,387. These sums are for the year ended December 31st, 1940.

Gordon E. Youngman, who became an officer May 1st, had no stock interest in Radio Keith Orpheum, according to a report disclosed by the Securities and Exchange Commission, in Washington, last week.

United Artists Stock Transfer Deals Active

David O. Selznick, producer, arrived in New York last week from the Coast for reported conferences with United Artists' executives on his more extensive participation in the affairs of the distributing company. That participation is said to be actual partnership in the company, which had now two blocks of stock outstanding, those of Samuel Goldwyn and the late Douglas Fairbanks, Sr.; however, it has been impossible to obtain confirmation of the specific nature of the Selznick discussion, either in New York, or on the Coast.

Meanwhile, in a Los Angeles Probate Court, Judge Jess Stephens was expected on Wednesday to rule on acceptance of a United Artists' bid of $400,000 for the Fairbanks shares, by the Bank of America, executor of the Fairbanks estate.

In this connection, it was said discussions in that court centered last week around the by-laws of United Artists, which ban the sale of the corporation's stock to any individual outside the corporation, and on the reported intention of the distributing company to attract outsiders.

At the same time, Alexander Korda, Mary Pickford, and Charles Chaplin having recently stated they would devote their attention more fully to the conduct of United Artists, their representatives on the directors' board are reported to have resigned. These are Herbert Maas, for Miss Pickford; Charles Schwartz, for Mr. Chaplin; and Steven Pallos, for Mr. Korda. Another reported resignation was that of Dennis F. O'Brien, representative for the late Mr. Fairbanks.

While UA was reported dickering for the Fairbanks stock, his widow, Mrs. Sylvia Fairbanks, was reported opposing the transfer, and to have hired counsel. It was said, further, she would institute suit to determine the value of the stock, and that she wanted $1,000,000 for it.

Alexander Korda said in New York Monday UA board meetings would be held henceforth on the Coast, there being but three owners left, Miss Pickford, himself, and Mr. Chaplin, these constituting the board. These, he noted, reside on the Coast.

Warners Reports Net Profit of $2,782,544

Warner Brothers and subsidiary companies report for the twenty-six weeks ending March 1, 1941 a net operating profit of $2,782,544 after deducting all charges including amortization and depreciation and normal Federal income taxes, as compared with a net operating profit of $1,518,497 reported for the corresponding period the previous year.

During the twenty-six week period ending March 1, 1941, there was an additional provision for contingencies in the amount of $414,000, increasing the reserve in respect of net assets of subsidiaries operating in foreign territories to $750,000.

The net profit from operations for the twenty-six weeks ending March 1, 1941 before charges for amortization and depreciation of properties and normal Federal income taxes, was $6,381,844.

The gross income, after eliminating intercompany transactions, for the twenty-six weeks ending March 1, 1941, was $51,009 860. The comparable gross income for the twenty-six weeks ending February 24, 1940 was $50,-728,842.

Cash in the United States as at March 1, 1941 amounted to $10,932,279 as compared with $7,445,285 as at August 31, 1940.

The earnings are equivalent to $27.93 per share on 99,617 shares of preferred stock outstanding and 70 cents a share on 3,701,090 common shares, after current preferred requirements. Preferred dividends in arrears as of March 1 amounted to $33.69 a share.

The company also this week, said that its business in seven foreign countries, for the 1940-41 fiscal year, was "breaking all past records." The countries are Finland, China, Egypt, Sweden, Java, Yugoslavia, Hungary.

Monogram Has Repaid $300,000 Bank Loan

Monogram has repaid its only outstanding bank loan, of $300,000, W. Ray Johnston, company president, announced last week. The loan was from the Guaranty Trust Company. Mr. Johnston added the company's annual report, to be issued June 30th, and of that date, would show no direct bank loans outstanding.

The studio, the disclosure continued, now has three films completed, and seven ready to go before the cameras before the month's end. In addition, "Tower of Terror," to be released here in October, is now in production in England, he said.

Disney Directors Defer Dividend

The directors of Walt Disney Productions, Inc., last week announced deferment of the July 1st dividend on the quarterly preferred stock. "The omission is made necessary," the announcement said, "by reduced income as a result of the spread of the European War and its repercussions, and by the company's working capital requirements for producing and carrying future pictures for release in the most advantageous manner in the market now available."

Giveaways No Draw, Warners Drop Practice

Warner Brothers theatres in Philadelphia, the last in the city to turn to dishes and sundry merchandise items to complement the admission ticket, are the first to discontinue the giveaway. Lack of interest on part of the patrons is the primary reason for discontinuing the premiums. At peak times, some 35 or 40 circuit houses were distributing dishes to patrons. At the present time, only three neighborhood houses are still giving away dishes—the Ogontz, Forum and Liberty theatres. However, at the conclusion of the dish set series at these houses, the entire circuit will be devoid of giveaways.

That the movie-goers have lost interest in dishes was evidenced by the fact that they became visibly annoyed, and in many cases outspoken about it, when handed a dish or a plate upon handing in their tickets. To show their annoyance, house managers reported that many patrons would break the dishes on the spot, a good many others leaving them behind in the theatre.

Independents Drop Policy

A curb on dish giveaways also has been manifest at the independent neighborhood theatres, although to a lesser degree. Several of the independents have instituted "dish clubs." Examination of the classified listing of independent theatres in the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger, which carries the largest number of classified theatre advertisements, shows that only 21 theatres of a total of 115 houses are offering a premium on a normal "dish night" (Thursday, June 12). It is also interesting to note that the independents are now using their newspaper space to plug the picture, the giveaways being mentioned in small type.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Western Zone, has gone on record in Buffalo as being in accord with Police Commissioner Austin J. Roche's efforts to eliminate all games of chance now being played in Erie County. A. Charles Hayman, managing director of the Lafayette and president of the MPTOA, wrote to Commissioner Roche, commending him for his stand on the question.

"Most of the theatres in Erie County have been forced into these games to counteract vicious competition by persons not connected with the theatre business," Mr. Hayman's letter reads, "and the theatre stands ready to discontinue these games without any legal action on your part, providing these games are proven to be illegal."

The Commissioner has ordered police captains in various sections of the city to close bingo games in theatres, at the same time expressing displeasure with the progress of six test cases again bingo operators. Latest police action came Thursday night when a squad of downtown police warned the management of the Academy Theatre, in Main Street, to set aside plans for a bingo session or face arrest. Jay-Phil Company, Inc., one of the six defendants in the test cases, complied.

U.S. ORDERED TO DEFINE CHARGES OF CONSPIRACY

Attorney General Must Give Particulars in Schine Suit; Gary Suit Dismissal Upheld

A definite statement as to whether the Government claims a collective or individual conspiracy in the Schine Circuit anti-trust suit in Buffalo, N. Y., was ordered Wednesday, June 11th, by Judge John Knight in the United States district court. The court directed the Government to state whether it claimed the five non-defendant distributors (the Big Five) were still conspiring with the Schine defendants, and, if not, when such alleged conspiracy ceased.

"It is important that the defendants be so advised in order to make the proper defense," said Judge Knight, in a ruling supporting the motion of the Schine defendants for clarification of the Government's amended complaint and a bill of particulars.

The defendants are entitled to the information requested particularly in view of the Government statement made during argument of the motion that "the Government had not dropped the charges in the original complaint herein charging conspiracy between each distributor acting separately and the Schine defendants."

Ruling on the Schine request that the Government state separately the percentage of "first class feature pictures" distributed within the last ten years by the defendant distributors and the non-defendant distributors, the court pointed out that the collective figures were set in the amended complaint and that there was no reason why the separate figures should not be given. He ruled, however, that the Government "should not be restricted to any definite percentage" although he ordered the Government to make available what figures it had.

Skouras Dismissed In Pickwick Action

The defendant Skouras Theatres Corp. in the $5,452,575 Pickwick anti-trust action against the eight major companies and Skouras interests, has had its motion granted to have the complaint dismissed and the "purported summons" quashed, by Judge Carroll C. Hincks of the United States district court in New Haven, Conn.

Skouras Theatres Corp., George P. Spyros P. Skouras, and Fox Metropolitan Playhouse, Inc., all move to be dismissed because of summons and lack of jurisdiction of the court in New Haven.

The motions of the major companies for a more definite statement and extended time in which to plead have not been decided by the court.

Chicago Circuit Court Dismisses Gary Suit

The United States circuit court in Chicago last week upheld the Federal district court of the northern district of Illinois in the latter's dismissal of the anti-trust action brought by the Gary Theatre Co. against exhibitor defendants—Balaban & Katz Corp. and Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corp.—and distributor defendants comprising United Artists Corp., Columbia Pictures Corp., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and Vitagraph, Inc.

The action was brought by the plaintiff with the contention that the defendants conspired to withhold product from the Palace theatre in Gary, Ind., operated by the Gary Theatre Co., and, in instances, subjected the house to unreasonable clearance by exhibiting preferentially in competitive stands with adjacent Chicago, principally situations on the city's south side.

26 Additional Crescent Theatres Cited by U. S.

The Government has filed an additional bill of particulars in its anti-trust suit in Nashville, Tenn., against the Crescent Amusement Co., listing 26 additional theatres it alleges Crescent or affiliated exhibitors have taken over or kept closed during the past five years. The Theatres named are in Tennessee, Alabama, Arkansas and Mississippi.

The Crescent trial is set for July 7th. Assistant United States Attorney O. W. Hughes said the Government had asked Judge Elmer Davis of the federal court for authority to subpoena about 70 persons residing more than 100 miles from Nashville to testify for the Government. Altogether there will be more than 100 witnesses for the Government, Mr. Hughes said.

Meanwhile, George H. Armistead, chief defense attorney, has filed a motion in the federal court demanding a jury trial in the suit. The privilege of a jury trial is claimed under Rule 39B of Federal Court Rules of Procedure.

A jury in the common pleas court in Columbus, Ohio, has awarded the Ardmore Amusement Co., operators of the suburban Bexley theatre, judgment for $25,275 in a suit against United Artists filed three years ago, charging violation of contract.

The petition pointed out that, despite terms of contract entered into in 1937, the defendant sold product away from the Bexley after it had been advertised for showing, and gave priority to the Drexel, a nearby theatre. "Goldwyn Follies of 1938" and "Marco Polo" were specifically mentioned. The plaintiff asked $275 under the contract, and $25,000 as damage to its reputation and goodwill. United Artists is expected to appeal the case.

Universal Branch Changes

William H. Sherman, Universal city salesman in Indianapolis, has been appointed branch manager in Omaha, succeeding Otto Siegel, who returned to the Buffalo office as salesman. Paul Fine has been added to the Universal sales office in Omaha, replacing Irving Weiner, resigned.

New Ray-Bell Contract

Ray-Bell Films of St. Paul have taken over the screen advertising privileges for the entire circuit of Minnesota Amusement theatres in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota from the Ludwig Screen Advertising Co., headed by L. J. Ludwig, former Minnesota Amusement official.

Monogram, Astor Close Deal

John Mangham, president of Monogram Southern Exchanges, has closed with Astor Pictures for the distribution of the streamlined version of "The Last Mile" in the Atlanta, Charlotte, Memphis and New Orleans territories.

National League Film Completed

The National League's annual motion picture of baseball highlights and stars has been filmed in Boston. Complete equipment was set up in The Braves' Field under the direction of Ethan Allen, a former big leaguer who supervised the film.

The picture is sponsored by the league this year instead of by outside interests, all commercial angles having been discarded.

One hundred copies of the 1940 film were made and it is expected that approximately 75 copies of this year's film will be distributed, to be shown to baseball fans all over the United States.

NBC, CBS NOT HONEST IN MUSIC FIGHT, SAYS ASCAP; SUIT PLANNED

Directors Order Damage Action On Ground That Networks Are Monopoly After Negotiations for New Con't Collapse

Escaping prosecution by the Department of Justice's anti-trust division, thus far, even though not free from attacks by the Federal Communications Commission, the nation's two largest broadcasting chains, the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Broadcasting Company on Friday, June 13th, heard that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers had instructed attorneys to sue them for treble damages under the Sherman anti-trust law.

These instructions to attorneys Schwartz and Frohlich occurred at a meeting in New York, on Friday, June 13th, of the Society's directors, who charge the networks "have no honest intention" of returning to the radio waves 1,250,000 ASCAP songs, and therefore are a monopoly conspiring to deprive ASCAP of a public medium, and the revenue to be derived from that medium.

Barred Since January

ASCAP songs have been barred from the networks since January 1st, when five year pacts between the Society and the broadcasters expired, and the latter began to rely exclusively on outside music, especially that from Broadcast Music, Inc., which the National Association of Broadcasters established to rival ASCAP as a music source not only for radio, but also for all other entertainment mediums.

John G. Paine, general manager of ASCAP, said Friday, June 13th, that the directors felt there was "a definite combination existing against ASCAP. There has to be a determination", he continued, "as to whether or not there can exist such a combination, which can preclude American composers and authors from dealing with any part of the combination.

"We can't get to first base with the single stations, and we can't get to first base with the chains," he asserted.

The remarks came after about a month of desultory negotiations between ASCAP and the two chains, and after the other large chain, Mutual, had broken the broadcasters' united front by signing with ASCAP, so that it has now been playing its songs for approximately one month.

Mr. Paine explained further, in commenting about the negotiations, that, in approaching the single stations, who are members of either CBS or NBC, "They say they can't play our songs until the chains make an agreement, and the chains say they can't play the songs until the single stations do so."

What the extent of the damages to be claimed will be, the Society's officials did not indicate this week, merely saying figures were being examined.

Also to be named in the suit will be the National Association of Broadcasters, Broadcast Music, Inc., and RCA.

Observers said this week the damages to be claimed may total $20,000,000.

It was remarked that the suit was not a "trial balloon", purpose of which would be to force the networks into conclusive negotiations; but that it was, instead, a fully calculated and long prepared suit, instigated by the beliefs of publisher members of ASCAP that the two networks were merely "stalling" ASCAP in the negotiations, which began shortly after the Society entered into a consent decree with the Department of Justice, after that body began an anti-trust suit.

Meanwhile, pursuing the reformation of its government, under the decree the Society's board on Friday made public the names of six on the authors' nominating committee, which is to function in the Society's first general membership election. The six are Leo Robin, Howard Dietz, George Whiting, Jacques Wolfe, Jerry Livingston, and John Redmond. They are to choose two candidates from the membership to run against each of six incumbent writer-directors.

Under the new by-laws, four author and four publisher directors must be elected annually; however, for the first election, one half of the 24-man board, six of each category, must be elected.

Film Companies Suffer

Film companies owning music publishing firms probably have lost thousands in music publishing royalties, as a result of the half-year old fight which has kept their ASCAP music off the air, and the delayed settlement of the dispute between the networks and the Society. All ASCAP members will lose proportionately for the same period, ending on June 30th, observers reported.

Heads of film-music firms were never called into the inner war circle of ASCAP at the outset of the battle, it is charged, and had no voice in shaping the "war" policies or suggesting plans for its settlement. If ASCAP's "big five" council who have controlled the negotiations with the networks from the start, had enlisted the cooperation of Warner's or Paramount, for example, film-music interests assert the dispute might have been settled long ago, because the networks would not have fought the film industry with its powerful public contacts.

That the movie music publishers were entirely ignored, that their high-geared instruments for exploitation and public relations were set aside, is part of the general bungling of which certain sources accuse ASCAP leadership.

The fight started when the networks decided to refuse ASCAP's demands for a new "3, 4, 5 and 7½%" remittance on the networks' income.

The "public relations war campaign" waged by ASCAP last fall and through the winter, cost approximately $100,000.

John G. Paine, general manager of ASCAP, said Saturday the Society did not contemplate raising fees for the nation's theatres, despite revenue losses. The statement was issued after A. Julian Brylawski, of Washington, given at the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America convention in Los Angeles last week that theatre owners might well ask whether the Society intended to recoup its radio losses by raising theatre seat taxes. The reply by Mr. Paine emphasized that the theatre licenses were on an automatically renewable basis, and that the Society had not even thought of changing

Mutual Network Dissolves Rebellious Organization

The Independent Mutual Affiliates, a group of stations belonging to the Mutual Broadcasting System, but opposed to its signing of an ASCAP pact last month, was dissolved by Mutual this week, it announced from Washington.

The group had protested Mutual's breach of the broadcasting chains' "united front" against the Society—a breach which led to strained relations between Mutual and the National Association of Broadcasters, at the convention of the latter in St. Louis last month. Subsequent endorsement by Mutual of the Federal Communications Commission anti-monopoly report has widened the breach, inasmuch as the NAB, the CBS, and the NBC are now actively pursuing an expected Congressional investigation of the FCC, and there have been Congressional hearings on the report itself, at which the FCC chairman, James Fly, has been forced to explain and defend his actions.

BMI Has 686 Stations; WNEW, New York, Latest

Broadcast Music, Inc., music source established by the NAB to rival ASCAP, over the weekend signed radio station WNEW, New York, hitherto a user of ASCAP music exclusively, and now has 686 stations, it announced Monday. Since April 1st, it added, 23 stations have procured its licenses.

Meanwhile, the BMI directors last week approved the forms of blanket and per program contracts for stations, as well as a contract permitting optional clearance at the source for electrical transcriptions. It is understood some forms of contract are undergoing minor revisions, and will be sent to stations shortly.

BMI also said that, in its "first year" it has "brought the music of more than 500 writers" to the radio—writers "who had little if any opportunity to reach the public under the conditions which prevailed prior to April, 1940."

Florida Permits Blanket Licensing for Theatres

The Florida legislature this week enacted legislation exempting theatres from its previous anti-ASCAP measure, which would have required exhibitors to secure permission, for music playing, from individual owners of the copyright rather than from the Society.

The nullifying measure had been expected ever since it became apparent that the anti-ASCAP bill, constitutionality of which was upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court, would mean endless complexities for buyers of the Society's music.

A similar nullifying measure, for radio stations, hotels, taverns, and the like, was expected shortly.

Conferences were held in Washington, last week, between representatives of the Society and those of the Independent Radio Networks Affiliates, an independent radio station group, headed by Samuel R. Rosenbaum. Under discussion were understood to be the terms by which the group will be able to use the Society's music.

Eastern Central Theatre Spending Highest in Study

Residents of the area from Pennsylvania west through Illinois, in most income brackets, spend slightly more on motion picture entertainment than those in New England communities of comparable size, it was revealed this week by the Bureau of Labor Statistics at Washington.

A study of five small cities in the East Central Region, just completed by the bureau, shows that the average annual expenditure for motion pictures ranges from $6 per year for families with income of $500 to $749, to $32 per year for those with incomes of $3,000 or more. An earlier survey of four small cities in New England showed that such expenditures there ranged from $5 to $29.

Higher Than New England

In three middle-sized cities in the East Central Region, motion picture expenditures ranged from $4 for families with income of $500-$749 to $39 for families with income of $5,000 and over, while in two middle-sized cities in New England the range was from $4 to $30.

In the small cities of Beaver Falls and Connellsville, Pa.; Logansport and Peru, Ind., and Mattoon, Ill., which were studied, the largest groups whose expenditures were analyzed were in the classes with income of $1,000 or more a year.

In those classes, it was found that the families of clerical workers spent more for motion pictures than those of business and professional men or wage earners, the range being from $15 to $35 a year. Business and professional families spent from $8 to $32 and those of wage earners $12 to $30.

In the middle-sized cities of Muncie, Ind.; New Castle, Pa., and Springfield, Ill., in the corresponding income groups, the families of independent business and professional workers spent most. On the whole, their range was from $9 to $43. Families of salaried business and professional men spent from $14 to $36. Those of clerical workers with income of $1,000 to $2,500 spent from $9 to $21 and those of wage earners in the same groups spent from $9 to $19.

To complete the picture, the bureau studied one large city, Columbus, Ohio, where it was found that motion picture expenditures of white families ranged from $3 per year for those in the $500-$750 group to a high of $48 for the $5,000-$7,500 class. In the corresponding New England city—Providence, R. I.—expenditures were recently found to range from $3 to $42, the latter figure for the $3,500-$4,000 class. In both instances, motion picture expenditures tapered off for groups above the top income cited.

This was evidenced by the study of the expenditures of salaried business workers in Columbus, where families in the $4,000-$5,000 class were found to spend $35 a year, while those in the $5,000-$7,500 class spent $56 and those in the $7,500-$10,000 class spent only $25. The same phenomena was shown in the figures on salaried professional workers, where the $4,000-$5,000 group spent $33 against $22 for the classes immediately below and above; in the independent professional and business group, where the $5,000-$7,500 class spent $49 as against $33 for clerks and laborers, where the $2,000-$2,250 class spent $15, the $2,250-$2,500 class $35 and the $2,500-$3,000 class $24. Only in the wage earner group was there any definite relation between motion picture expenditures and income.

FROM READERS

To the Editor of the Herald:

You've seen a lot of discussion lately of business falling off and some answers, such as double features, etc.; however, I think the real answer is poor pictures due to too much talk, which slows down action, and before the program is over, with all talking shorts one is tired of the gabble.

Ever since the talking picture has been brought out, all the producers seem to think everything must be 100 per cent all talking. Personally I don't think so, and I believe that the perfect picture will be one containing beautiful restful scenes with music, and the important sequences and climax in talking. Shorts, too, should not be all talking. We seem to forget the beautiful strains of the violin and great pipe organs. We need restful scenes in our pictures, and we need more action, and not so much dialogue.—Charles H. Richelieu, The Tarpon, Tarpon Springs, Fla.

Power Rationed In Alabama

Expectations of serious reactions in theatre business, and other industries from threatening shortage of power resulting from drought and defense needs were fulfilled somewhat this week when power rationing was ordered for all of Georgia's 331 theatres starting at 6 A.M. June 16th. Industries, with certain specific exceptions, including radio, were placed on a weekly electricity allotment basis. The move was dictated by the grave power shortage and the failure of voluntary power reduction to solve the problem although the latter totaled 450,000 kilowatt hours per day.

Indications over the weekend were toward the rationing of power throughout the southeast with reports that all affiliates of the Commonwealth & Southern Corp. would adopt the program not only in Georgia but in Alabama, South Carolina and Mississippi. Gulf power companies are expected to fall in line with the move to cut the use of power by one-third. It was also reported that the T.V.A. was giving the matter much consideration.

Theatre operators are expected to cut elevator service by one-half; reduce air-conditioning to maintain a difference of not more than five degrees between outdoor and indoor temperatures and eliminate all showcase, window and ornamental lighting.

Mass To Be Filmed

Johnny Walker, former film star who in the past few years has been identified with motion picture production in the East, has announced plans to film the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass in color with Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen, famed through his Catholic Hour Broadcasts, in a leading role. Bert Ennis, script writer and publicist, has provided an original story to serve as a background for the presentation of the Mass based on a scenario by the Reverend Vincent Connors of the Passionist Order. The picture, presently titled "Mystery of Faith," will be directed by Mr. Walker. Father Connors will be technical advisor. Production will start at mid-July and it will be released in the autumn.

History of Films Shown in Exhibit

An exhibition of the "History of the American Movies" was opened at the Museum of Modern Art in New York last week, which records the rapid development in movie making by means of explanatory text, photos of early equipment, studios, sets and production shots, as well as stills from important movies utilizing the new techniques which were instrumental in developing the American film.

This is the first time New York has had an opportunity to see the exhibition which, during the past year, has toured seven cities throughout the country as one of the Museum's circulating exhibitions.

The exhibit is concerned with the use that has been made of the movie. An explanatory note describes the motion picture as the "newest, liveliest and most popular of the arts; the film is also the most significant of contemporary mediums of expression in America. Though it has borrowed from literature and the theatre, it is essentially an original means of expression. It has and continues to exercise a tremendous influence on millions of people."

Four Stages Shown

The exhibit is divided into four sections: Early Experiments, showing the first films and the transition from box to screen; Development during 1903-18, with the "Great Train Robbery," the first animated cartoon, "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and early comedies, including the Chaplin reels; World Industry, noting the beginning of the star system, epic films, westerns, early documentaries, etc.; Sound Film, showing first sound pictures, Disney's cartoons, new stars, musicals, later documentaries and newsreels.

Under the direction of Miss Elodie Courter of the Department of Circulating Exhibitions, the exhibit was compiled and assembled for its nation-wide tour before coming in to New York, together with another exhibition, "The History of the Modern Poster." Both exhibits will remain at the New York museum until July 12th.

Since 1931, the Museum has sent out 119 travelling loan exhibitions which have been shown 1,389 times in 257 cities outside New York City, at which 8,000,000 people have viewed the displays, including exhibits on architecture, painting, sculpture, graphic art, industrial art, theatre art, folk art, murals, posters, book illustrations, book-bindings, photographs and motion picture material.

Ashcraft Manufacturing Co., projection lamps.

NEITHER BOMBS, BULLETS, BLACKOUTS HALT BRITISH FILM FLOW TO CANADA

Total for Year Increases to 67, While Other Foreign Pictures Drop to 2; U. S. Product Totals 1,903 Features, Shorts

In spite of bombings, bullets, blackouts and threatened invasion, there was an increase in the number of British features submitted to the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors during the fiscal year 1940-41, according to the annual statistics of O. J. Silverthorne, chairman. The total from the United Kingdom was 67 as compared with 54 during the previous year when hostilities were getting under way.

In the year ending March 31, 1941, not one British film was rejected and 15 were revised before final approval, compared with 28 altered releases in the previous fiscal period. The report shows that 181 of the 1,903 films, features and shorts, produced in the United States were altered and these figures indicate that British pictures still come in for more censorship than Hollywood product, a fact that brought caustic comment from the Ontario chairman several years ago when he declared that the British producer apparently preferred the "continental attitude" rather than American or Canadian standards.

In his current report, Mr. Silverthorne extended praise for the manner in which the British industry was maintaining production and in improving its technical standard which "is all the more noteworthy because it has been done while war raged in the sky over the British Isles and invasion seemed imminent."

Foreign Films Down to 2

During the two years, the number of foreign films—those from countries other than the United States and Great Britain—dropped from 304 to 2 because of the interference of war and the strong stand against subversive material by the Ontario Censor Board. Altogether, only eight foreign-language films were examined by the Provincial Government during the past 12 months and six of these were made in the United States. They consisted of 2 Ukranian, 4 Jewish, 1 Finnish and 1 Chinese pictures. There were 16 Made-in-Canada pictures during the year, the great majority of which dealt with the war effort.

The chairman noted a decided improvement in the tone of film advertising material, only 25 posters or accessories being condemned out of a total of 30,379, with 10 others being approved after alteration. In the previous year, the Board condemned 194 specimens of advertising out of $38,967, while 28 were passed after revisions had been made. The rejected advertising was largely of the violence type, sex themes having been treated with discretion. The reduction in advertising accessories was due to customs restrictions under war regulations and the drop in the total of films.

Licenses were issued by the Theatres Inspection Branch for 12 new theatres; 23 theatres had been remodelled; 5 theatres had been closed and 2 re-opened, making a net gain during the past fiscal year of 9, the licensed theatres in Ontario now totalling 400. Licenses had been issued to 2,530 public halls in which safety films and other entertainment could be presented, as compared with a total of 2,554 at the close of the previous year, while licenses had been granted to 133 travelling shows, including carnivals, circuses, midways and menageries, as compared with 155 one year before. The number of licensed projectionists increased from 733 to 761 but the apprentices were down to 241 from 290. There were, 1,051 projectionists and apprentices for the 400 licensed theatres. The records of the Department showed 329 theatres in operation in 1937, 354 in 1938, 372 in 1939, 391 in 1940 and 400 on March 31 last.

CANADIAN BUREAU TO DIRECT FILMS, RADIO

Reorganization of the Canadian information, radio broadcasting, cinema and tourist services and their grouping under one head has been announced by Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King. Joseph T. Thorson, member of Parliament for Selkirk, will direct all the services as Minister of National War Services.

Mr. Thorson is a Canadian of Icelandic origin. He won a Rhodes scholarship at Oxford, served in the British Army during the first World War and is a barrister. He has been a member of Parliament with one intermission since 1926.

An order-in-council passed by the government Tuesday places the Motion Picture Bureau directly under the National Film Board, of which John Grierson is commissioner. Previously they were separate branches in the Department of Trade and Commerce. The term, Government Motion Picture Bureau, will be dropped and the name, National Film Board, will cover film planning, supervision and production activities.

Remittance Tax Cut To Save $300,000

The action of the Dominion Government in amending the Income War Tax Act with respect to remittances of film companies in Canada to their home offices in the United States by reducing the tax on such payments from 15 to 10 per cent, means a saving of $300,000 to the film distributors in one year, according to figures compiled in the trade at Toronto following the announcement of the concession.

The annual receipts of all film exchanges in Canada last year totalled $10,400,000 and figures supplied by a reliable authority provide an estimate of $6,000,000 in so-called excess income over local operation expenditures which is remitted to producing and distributing companies outside of the country. The 15 per cent tax, as provided under the terms of the recent budget, would have reduced this payment by $900,000 but the amendment to the Act, proposed by J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Finance, provides that the tax shall be 15 per cent on only two-thirds of the money sent out of Canada by the film companies. This is equivalent to a reduction to 10 per cent on the whole sum, therefore the saving to the exchanges is one-third of $900,000.

Attention has also been drawn to the fact that no reduction has been made by the Government in the tax on remittances by any other classification of business, this being an exclusive concession for the motion picture industry which, according to Mr. Ilsley, has been losing money on its operations.

In connection with remittances to "foreign" head offices, reference is made to the fact that 50 per cent of excess revenue of film distributors in England is being frozen by the Imperial government for the duration to conserve foreign exchange, while a similar ratio must be retained in the Commonwealth of Australia for the same reason and as a war measure. Canada has not taken similar action, probably because of the proximity of Canada and the United States and the special desire for good relations with the American Republic by Canadians.

The session of the Canadian House of Commons came to a close June 14, to meet again next November, with no changes in the legislation affecting the motion picture industry apart from this amendment to Section 16 of the Income War Tax Act. The Ilsley move was made following representations by officials of the Hays office in New York who made a special trip to Canada to negotiate with the Government, by the U. S. Minister to Canada and by T. J. Bragg, former secretary of Famous Players Canadian Corp., who discussed the situation with Fraser Elliott, Canadian Commissioner of Taxation, in behalf of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association.

Coldwell Defends Grierson's Work

M. J. Coldwell, leader of the Co-Operation Commonwealth Federation political party in Canada, has come out in defense of John Grierson of London, England, for his work as Commissioner of the National Film Board since the establishment of this government office two years ago. The commendation apparently was inspired by the announcement of plans to reorganize the Film Board, the long-established Dominion Government Motion Picture Bureau and the office of Director of Public Information under the newly created Department of National War Services to which J. T. Thorson of Winnipeg has been appointed as Minister.

Mr. Coldwell, who has sometimes been charged with radical views, said, with reference to Grierson, that a tremendous amount of imagination had been shown in connection with the production of Canadian Government films which had been exhibited in some thousands of theatres in the United States, United Kingdom and Canada.

"I think that the work which is being done under Mr. Grierson is remarkably fine," he declared, "and we should continue and extend it—and do our level best to keep the man who is doing it in the position which he now holds." He added the hope that Mr. Grierson's services would be appreciated.

A group of independent theatre owners in Saskatchewan has protested that the newspapers, periodicals, job printers and broadcasting stations are being paid for display advertising, printed material and services in connection with war loan, recruiting and war savings campaigns while the exhibitors of Canada are expected to donate the use of their theatres, give time on their programs for special trailers and contribute co-operative advertising and theatre front displays for the same purposes.

Hollywood and Newsreels Help Train Soldiers

The motion picture industry, already deeply engaged in the business of entertaining Uncle Sam's Army, is now helping to train the soldiers for war and defense.

Hollywood also is producing patriotic and defense shorts for Governmental circulation among the public, physical distribution of which is in the hands of the majors' exchanges in the field.

Hollywood makes some training pictures; the U. S. Signal Corp makes many more. Its training film production center at Fort Monmouth, N. J., is virtually a "little Hollywood." From California, and from the newsreels in New York and the field have come cameramen, cutters, writers and production men to make pictures, as soldiers, in the U. S. Army's vast project of training soldiers.

Studio Technicians in Charge

In charge of Lieutenant-Colonel M. E. Gillette, these Hollywood technicians carry over from their civilian jobs years of experience in all the major coast studios. A roster of them reads like a session of Hollywood and Vine. In the film production laboratory building recently completed at Fort Monmouth, the nine thousand square feet of space is divided up into editorial cutting rooms. In the cutting department, which Lieutenant William H. Rivers is in charge of are: Pvt. Victor Kline, 7 years at Warner's as a cutter; Pvt. Jason Bernie, former assistant cutter at Universal, and Ben Bernie's son; Pvt. Albie Shaff, who last worked on an RKO release; Pvt. William Reynolds of Paramount; Pvt. Jerome Thomas of Monogram, and Pvt. Ed Selwyn of Metro.

Colonel Zanuck on Army Films

Lieutenant-Colonel Darryl F. Zanuck, U. S. Signal Corps Res. Chairman, and Captain Gordon S. Mitchell, Signal Corps Res. manager, of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences arrived Monday in Washington to confer with War Department officials on a new future Army Training Film production program being carried on by the Council for the War Department. While in the capital he visited President Roosevelt.

The Research Council is now in the process of completing training films in all of the studios participating in the Council's activities, and the conferences in Washington will be for the purpose of determining the details of the next six months' training films production program.

Colonel Zanuck will also submit a number of completed training films for War Department approval, and will attend showings at which these films will be reviewed by the chiefs of the various branches.

U. S. "Earmarking" Film Workers for Defense

Engaged for nearly a year in compiling a roster of scientific and specialized workers from which can be drawn men needed for any particular requirements of the defense program, the National Resources Planning Board this week disclosed that it is adding hundreds of names of motion picture persons to its catalog.

The list is being developed by questionnaires which have been going to men and women in specialized activities all over the country since last October, in which complete information is sought regarding the citizenship, marital status, education and professional activities of the individuals.

The project was initiated last July by the National Resources Planning Board, a branch of the Executive Office of the President, jointly with the United States Civil Service Commission and in cooperation with the American Council on Education, the American Council of Learned Societies, the National Research Council and the Social Science Research Council.

A special organization was set up, known as the National Roster of Scientific and Specialized Personnel, with Leonard Carmichael of the board as director and James C. O'Brien of the Civil Service staff as executive officer.

A survey of the various types of industries in which specialized personnel is employed was made, as well as of professional fields, such as engineering of all types, architecture, etc., and technical check lists were made for each, on which the persons approached could note their fields of specialization.

These check lists, together with the questionnaire, were then distributed, so far as possible, to all persons in the selected industries and professions.

The filing of the questionnaire is not considered as an application for a position in the Federal service and the work is not designed to fill any positions in the service at the moment. The objective is to get a list of men and women qualified to fill particular places in the national defense program which may arise in the future, particularly in the event of war.

Although a large number of persons trained in various branches of the film industry have been listed in the past eight months, the board some weeks ago developed a new check list for that field, covering production, directing, promotion, distribution, editing, writing, sound, camera and laboratory activities.

Studios Preparing More Films on War, Defense

Various studios last week prepared still more new theatrical pictures dealing with national defense preparations, or the war abroad. David Hempstead, producer, and Lewis Milestone, director, are assembling newsreel shots of Gen. Charles De Gaulle, Free French leader, for inclusion in their RKO production, "Joan of Paris." Lucille Ball has been set by the same studio for a starring role in "Passage to Bordeaux," which deals with a group of Americans caught in France at the time of the Nazi invasion.

Don Castle will be featured with Richard Arlen in "Torpedo Boat," a Paramount picture. Stirling Hayden will also appear in a featured role in "Tomorrow's Admirals" for Paramount, and the company announced that it would produce "Shutterbugs" dealing with the aerial photographic unit of the U. S. Air Corps.

Uncle Sam, Film Exhibitor, Playing To 300,000 Soldiers Nightly

Army motion picture service will be available to 300,000 men a night in the near future with the completion of theatres now under construction, it was disclosed this week by the War Department. Already, it was said, 265 theatres are in operation and 101 are building at Army posts in the United States and Alaska and the Atlantic Base Commands.

Under the Department's policy of providing one seat for every six men stationed at a post, the 265 theatres now operating, with 204,000 seats, can serve about 1,224,000 men, while the houses under construction, with a seating capacity of 96,929, will accommodate close to 600,000 more when completed.

The new theatres, some of them of wood construction and others consisting of tents, are being put up as rapidly as possible, and film service is started as soon as the sound and projection equipment is installed, it was said.

FCC CALLED 'TERROR' OF THE AIR; NBC GETS 90 DAYS TO SPLIT UP

Network Officials Beg Protection from "Uncertainty", Seek Revision of Present Law; New Regulations Challenged

The Federal Communications Commission eased up this week on its drastic order splitting the National Broadcasting Company in half, the while network broadcasters, at the continued hearings of the White resolution, were calling the commission the "terror of the air."

On Saturday, June 14th, the FCC amended its chain broadcasting regulations to clarify its intent that the National Broadcasting Company should have ample time to dispose of one of its networks. It was announced by the commission the amendment was voted so as to "leave no question" but that the ninety-day deferment period granted for readjustment of existing contracts applied to the National Broadcasting Company as well as to individual licenses.

It was also provided by the commission that the ninety-day period might be extended from time to time to permit "the orderly disposition of properties."

Act Revision Urged

Revision of the Communications Act, to put a period to the uncertainty which for years has prevailed in the broadcasting industry as a result of the unpredictable policies of the Federal Communications Commission, was urged upon the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee this week by officials of the senior major networks.

The plea for a law which would clearly define the powers of the commission and the rights of broadcasters and networks was laid before the committee by William S. Paley, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, as it entered upon the third week of its hearing on the White resolution for an investigation of the network regulations promulgated May 2nd and the authority of the commission to issue them.

Mr. Paley recommended that the law be revised to provide for licensing of networks as well as stations; to require fair treatment to both sides on all controversial or public interest questions; to more clearly define the powers and duties of the commission; and to leave radio regulation to a commission divorced from the common carrier field, with clear and specified provisions for proper judicial review.

Appearing before the committee Monday morning, Mr. Paley declared that the licensing of networks would safeguard their rights and define their position, arguing that if individual stations are licensed there is no reason why the chains—more important as a single element—should not be.

Attacking the commission's regulations, which he said would eliminate the possibility of economic reward which has been the motivating influence of network development in the past, he charged that the FCC had been "obsessed" by the belief that it was not proper for a chain to be successful, on which basis it had reasoned that "virtually every practice which we in long experience have found to be essential is wrong and must be stopped regardless of the effects on programs and the public service.

"The very fact that in the things it seeks to do right now the commission seems to find it necessary to slip through the back door and strike at us through the licensing power it holds over our affiliated stations is proof that there is something inadequate in the statute itself," he said.

If policy is not set and implemented by Congress, he continued, "I fear, from what I have observed in the past few years, that we will drift into an exercise of vague and undetermined powers by the commission; I can even see conditions under which such vague powers can be used by a commission as an instrument of oppression and a threat to genuine freedom of the air."

Sees "State of Terror"

Declaring that the industry was literally in a "state of terror," Mr. Paley charged that the commission, disregarding the prerogative of due process, had acted "as complaining witness, prosecutor, judge, jury and hangman, and we find ourselves at the end of the row stigmatized as a monopolist and most of the important practices of our business sweepingly abolished by administrative fiat."

The commission, he declared, should be limited to the necessary "traffic job" of allocation; to insuring that the air is used fairly and without editorial bias, and to reviewing the operations of networks and stations to determine whether they have operated in the public interest.

Mr. Paley testified that with the development of FM, it might be possible to have as many as 14 national networks in that field, but expressed doubt whether, in the regular broadcast field, a greater number of networks would have given the public better service than it has received from the four now operating.

Getting into a discussion of the regulations, he charged the commission with making a "bogy man" out of the chains, and holding them up as a horrible example of what must be avoided. He analyzed the regulations to show how, in Columbia's view, they will tear down the present broadcast structure, leaving in its place a chaotic condition in which neither broadcaster nor network will know how to operate safely.

"I want to tell you frankly that one of my very strong reasons for hoping that you gentlemen will decide to vote out this resolution and that the Senate will pass it is that I am confident that we need a full and complete inquiry by Congress into the realities of broadcasting," he said.

With the appearance before the committee of the opposition to the regulations, Mr. Fly began the publication of orders and letters designed to demonstrate the liberality with which the rules will be applied.

On June 14th, an order was issued providing for such extension as may be necessary for orderly disposition of properties, of the regulation requiring companies with more than one network to divest themselves of their second chain, and on June 16th a letter from the commission to Committee Chairman Burton K. Wheeler was made public, explaining that no station will be able to deprive another of its network programs unless the latter voluntarily rejects them.

In his letter to the committee, Mr. Fly also spoke of the KOA case, answering a charge that there the commission had reversed its usual practice of maintaining a station on the air throughout any proceedings in which it might be involved, explaining that the grant to Station WHDH, Boston, of the same frequency was not a matter involving the existence of the Denver broadcaster.

Commenting on the interpretations now being given the regulations, Mr. Paley declared that when Mr. Fly appeared before the committee he didn't seem to "understand his own rules," and that there was no assurance that the interpretations would be maintained.

New Legislation Asked

NBC joined with CBS last Tuesday, in asking for new radio legislation. Niles Trammell, NBC president, who testified before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, said that the FCC regulations issued against the networks on May 2nd, presented a "vital" issue which should be settled by Congress.

Mr. Trammell followed Judge John J. Burns, CBS counsel, who challenged the right of the commission to issue the regulations, and charged that they were promulgated with "absolutely no attention to the evidence involved."

Representatives of the networks contend that the commission was attempting to write law, without regard to the fact that such action can be taken only by Congress, and has gone about that purpose in such away as to render it difficult to secure a court decision before the regulations are applied and such damage done as they may cause.

Mr. Trammel charged that the FCC network changes contemplated were not the "result of public demand or a deficiency of service."

Much of the day's hearing was taken up by argument between Chairman Burton K. Wheeler and witnesses, as to the quality of programs and the necessity for the chains giving service to small Montana stations. These questions were brought up as William S. Paley, CBS president, completed his testimony and prepared to leave the stand.

Senator Wheeler declared it was unfair to local advertisers to have to move on 28 days' notice, under the affiliation contract, and told Mr. Paley, "It is just as important that the local advertiser know his time is fixed as it is to a national advertiser."

The Senator also attacked the "soap dramas" which, he said, fill the morning hours, denouncing them as "cheap junk" and "dime novel stuff," and warning the industry that it would have to afford better fare, despite the protestations of Mr. Paley that these programs had proven exceedingly popular.

Senator Wheeler also charged that radio was responsible for the increase in crime, declaring, "I am not a purist, but I feel that a lot of the stuff that is going over chain broadcasting is just wrong. I am trying to appeal to the radio industry to cut out this dime novel stuff which I think tends to break down the morals and make criminals of boys and girls in this country."

Radio Officials Ask Law Revision

At the final sessions last week, the committee heard the majority of the FCC charged with having "usurped" authorities never intended to be exercised by it.

The charge of usurpation was leveled by Commissioner T. A. M. Craven, one of two members dissenting from the majority-approved network regulations, while the suggestion of a full investigation was made by Mark Ethridge of Louisville, Ky., former president of the National Association of Broadcasters, who dropped a study of the industry he was making at the request of President Roosevelt.

FCC Violated Principles

Mr. Craven urged that Congress rewrite the Communications Act so as more clearly to define the duties and powers of the commission, and Chairman Wheeler agreed that the act needs clarifying but questioned the desirability of holding up the application of the regulations pending enactment of legislation.

Questioned by Senator Tobey as to whether he denied the power of the commission to make the investigation, Mr. Craven said it had full authority to do so but he felt that instead of issuing the regulations it should have made recommendations to Congress for legislation or, if it had determined monopoly to exist, sent a report to the Department of Justice.

Predicting that enforcement of the regulations would open an era of experimentation in the shuffling of broadcasting facilities, Mr. Ethridge told the committee that the industry was "unanimous" in its desire for a Congressional investigation of both itself and the commission.

He charged that in at least three instances the commission had "violated" its own principles in handling applications of persons "not unfriendly" to the Administration.

Throughout the sessions, members of the committee criticized "one-sided" commentators, the lack of network facilities for small stations in remote rural areas, because of high line charges, and the various types of programs that are being offered.

It was clear that members were deeply interested in getting network service for the rural areas and that there was considerable dissatisfaction with what Chairman Wheeler termed "Tin Pan Alley," gangster plays and "dripping dramas."

Indicative of the liberal attitude which he had promised the committee would be adhered to in application of the regulations, Mr. Fly on June 13th made public the text of a telegram he had sent on May 24th to Gordon P. Brown of Station WSAY, Rochester, N. Y., in answer to a request for his interpretation of the rules.

"The regulations do not prohibit a contract establishing a network and station affiliation whereby a network agrees to offer all its programs to one particular station in a community," Mr. Fly wired the broadcaster.

"However, the station must make a reasonably prompt determination whether it will carry any program and there can be no restriction upon the right of other stations in the community to make arrangements for the broadcast of any refused or rejected programs.

"Nor do the regulations prohibit a contract whereby a station agrees to take all the programs of a network if the time is available when such programs are offered, subject to the station's right to refuse or reject the programs pursuant to Section 3.105 of the regulations."

Decree Decentralizes Coast Circuit Buying

Roy Cooper, San Francisco division manager of the Golden State Theatre Circuit since 1938, has been made assistant to R. A. McNeil, general manager. Mr. Cooper's new post makes him film buyer for 37 Golden State neighborhoods in the San Francisco Bay area.

"We are getting ready for the new season's buying," said Mr. McNeil. "Hereafter Mr. Cooper will concentrate his efforts on the buying of pictures for our San Francisco and Metropolitan Oakland theatres unhampered by the details of circuit management."

As successor to Mr. Cooper, Hal D. Neides was named San Francisco division manager for both Golden State and San Francisco Theatres, Inc., totaling 21 local houses of the two circuits.

FCC Releases 1940 Radio Data

The broadcasting industry in 1940 employed more persons and paid them slightly higher wages than in 1939, it was disclosed this week by the FCC.

Reports from 765 stations, three major chains and six regional networks showed that in a typical week last year, 21,646 persons were employed, an increase of 1,773 over the 19,873 reported for 1939, while the weekly payroll of the industry was $1,020,348, an increase of $107,295.

The commission's figures covered only the staffs of the networks and stations and did not include talent employed by sponsors, and showed that in 1940 the stations employed 215 executives and 1,490 employees more than in 1939, while the regional networks had 14 executives and 65 employees more, and the major networks had three executives more but 14 employees less.

The average weekly compensation for all employees was $47.13, up $1.23 from 1939, but the average for the 19,326 employees who were below the grade of executives was $41.68, an increase of only 60 cents.

For the stations, the average weekly compensation for executives was $84.69, an increase of $4.99, while for employees it was $37.97, up $1.33. For the major chains, the average for executives was $251.68, up $21.19, and for employees $57.55, down 64 cents.

Employment Statistics

The average employment per station was 70 on clear channels, 32 on regional frequencies and 13 on local wavelengths, but a greater number of employees were found in stations in the more densely populated areas than in the rural districts.

Allocating employment by the networks between net and station operations on the same basis that is used for separating network and station revenues and expenses, which means that some network employees are included in the figures for stations, the commission found that National Broadcasting Company last year had 47 executives and 2,051 employees; Columbia Broadcasting System, 55 executives and 1,562 employees; Texas State Network, nine executives and 48 employees; Mutual Broadcasting System, seven executives and 40 employees; North Carolina Broadcasting System, one executive and nine employees; Intermountain Network, three employees; Yankee Network, three employees; New York Broadcasting System, one executive and two employees, and the Colonial Network, three executives.

In addition to the regular staffs reported above, the industry had 4,007 part-time employees whose average weekly compensation was $110,144. Of the total, 3,511 were employed by the stations with a payroll of $78,917 per week and 492 were used by the major networks, with a payroll of $31,171.

Hunt Operates Seven

William C. Hunt again will operate his seven theatres in Wildwood, N. J., and at nearby Cape May during the summer season. The New Shore, New Casino and Strand, playing first runs, opened last week. The Regent, reopening June 28th, and the Nixon, on July 2nd, are the second run houses. The Liberty and City Pier in Cape May also opened last week. In addition two houses are operated on Hunt's Ocean Pier in Wildwood, the Ocean for features and the Mickey Mouse for cartoons and short subjects. Mr. Hunt is assisted by his son, Bud Hunt, in the operation of the resort houses. William Keegan, general manager of the Hunt theatres in the Trenton, N. J., territory, is manager of the resort circuit.

Canadians Test Blackout Effect

Monday night, June 9th, long-standing plans of the Montreal Civil Protection Committee for a blackout were put into effect. This originally had been scheduled as a phase of the ordinary preparedness program, but in that it made excellent propaganda, it was announced in association with the drive.

Fears for the box-office ran high for a time, until it was made known that the blackout would take place at 10:30 P. M., and continue for a 15-minute period. Exhibitors here pointed out that the majority of shows playing during the week would be out at between 10:30 and 11 P. M. and that they anticipated no decline in box-office grosses.

Air-raid sirens, factory whistles and train whistles sounded the "alert" at 10:15 P. M. Managers supervised the dousing of marquee signs and lobby lights, and had their doormen on the alert at exits with pass-out checks for those curious who desired to leave the theatre.

A checkup of first-run houses here after the blackout found exhibitors insisting that business went on as usual, with small disruption by people leaving their seats and returning. Receipts were about normal, but it was pointed out that not only was Monday the date of the blackout, it was the day on which Canada officially celebrated the birthday of His Majesty King George VI. The long week-end from Friday night until Tuesday morning, together with reasonably good weather, might have enticed many families to vacation briefly, but there was no startling evidence of this at the box-office, managers said.

Box-offices displayed posters stating "uninterrupted showing during blackout" or "show as usual during blackout," and managers point out that no difficulties whatsoever were encountered, and that business was wholly unaffected.

Week's Receipts Donated

On a voluntary basis, the Kent theatre, new Westmount (Montreal) neighborhood house, will turn over its first week's receipts to the "Wings for Britain Fund."

The new theatre will be managed by Bob Johnson, who expects that doors will be opened in a week or two. Seating capacity is 800, in a thoroughly modern, up-to-date structure. Classic smoking lounge and soda bar are included in the building.

Attempts are now being made to secure a first-run feature, which will be shown together with patriotic shorts. "Wings for Britain" officials are also reported making arrangements for a film star, as yet unnamed, to appear at at least one performance of the benefit show.

Various local service organizations will also co-operate with theatre employes in conducting the special show. Regular prices will prevail, it is said.

Standard Pictures Moves

The home office of Standard Pictures has been moved to 723 Seventh Avenue, New York. Arthur Bonns, formerly with Grand National and later with Pathe, is now general manager of the company.

Russell Brown Joins Warners

Russell Brown, formerly associated with Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres, Inc., in Spokane, Wash., has been appointed manager of Warner theatres in Hoquiam and Aberdeen, Wash. He succeeds O. T. Taylor, who resigned to enter business for himself.

"Kiss the Boys Good-bye" Pre-release Dates Set

Scheduled for national release in mid-August, Paramount's "Kiss the Boys Good-bye" will have pre-release engagements in Washington, D. C., Richmond, Va., and San Antonio, Texas, Charles Reagan, assistant sales manager of Paramount announced last week.

The Don Ameche-Mary Martin-Oscar Levant musical will open on July 4th at the Earle Theatre in Washington, and at the Colonial in Richmond and Majestic in San Antonio on July 11th. Additional key cities in which the film will be pre-released early in July, will be announced later. Special advertising and publicity campaigns will be tried out by Paramount on these pre-release engagements.

Paramount's world premiere of "The Shepherd of the Hills" will be held on June 26th, at the Ambassador Theatre in St. Louis.

M. & P. Outing Set

The firm of Dowling & Brownell, formerly located at 6625 Romaine Street in Hollywood, has been changed to Pat Dowling Pictures, 1611 Cosmo Street, Hollywood.

FPC Adds Six New Theatres

President J. J. Fitzgibbons of Famous Players Canadian in Toronto last week leased two theatres in that city from Ray Lewis and T. M. Sterling and announced the purchase of the Stanley at Vancouver and a lease on the Hollywood in that city as well as a long term lease on the Bijou and Rio theatres in Winnipeg. One of the Toronto houses, the Pylon, will be operated by Bloom and Fine Theatres, Ltd., a subsidiary of Famous Players Canadian, while the Avenue will be operated by FPC in association with Lewis and Sterling.

The two Winnipeg theatres will be added to Western Theatres, Ltd., which is FPC's Manitoba subsidiary.

N. A. Taylor, head of 20th Century Theatres in Toronto, officially announced Monday he had made a deal with FPC to "operate a group of theatres for Famous Players, but no sale of theatres is involved."

Mr. Taylor said the exact number of houses involved is not yet determined but it will be about 20. He said he would have no executive title.

The Taylor interests recently opened the Midtown in Toronto, but no additional houses are to be built, he said, because of war restrictions on materials. Mr. Taylor previously had been connected with N. L. Nathanson in the formation of the new Odeon Circuit.

Meanwhile it was reported that Mr. Nathanson had closed a partnership deal with Don Stapleton for the Centre and Westboro at Ottawa, where the Roxy and Nola are already lined up.

Vogel Talks to Kiwanis About Films and Morale

Describing the role of the industry and the theatre manager in the nation's defense program, A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers Round Table of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, speaking before the Kiwanis Club of Gloversville, N. Y., Tuesday, declared that "Granted that the newspaper relays any informative, spot-minute account of what is happening here and abroad, the motion picture is needed to transform the printed word to an actual image on the screen which gives reassuring evidence, even to the least informed, that national defense is indeed much more than a catch-penny headline, as certain segments of public opinion would have us believe."

Mr. Vogel commended the work of J. Myer Schine and Louis W. Schine for their assistance in the national defense program. He said the contribution of the Schines was a long and lasting one, and declared they had made it possible for people of many communities to point with pride to the theatres of 1941 in the same manner they single out their churches and schools.

Schine circuit representatives Lou Hart and Harold Sliter, who are on the Kiwanis Club's program committee, arranged for Mr. Vogel to address the meeting, assisted by J. Meyer and Louis W. Schine.

Mr. Vogel stressed the need of the industry to maintain public morale during the national emergency. "For a long time," he said, "the motion picture has helped in building love of democracy and of our system of government through production of dramatic pictures based on historic beginnings of our country. . . . Our motion picture industry is a product of that democracy and it is natural that we should have a share in maintaining it.

"Shortly after England went to war, all theatres were closed by the Prime Minister as a precautionary measure. Immediate protest and demand was made that theatres be opened to maintain morale. And they were. All through the war this morale has been bolstered by the uninterrupted supply of American motion pictures brought to England by the express wish of the British government."

Mr. Vogel reviewed the results of the ambitious program set up by the industry's committee cooperating for national defense, which represents exhibitors, distributors and producers.

Mr. Vogel reported that 10,000 of the nation's 17,000 exhibitors already have signed written pledges expressing their desire to cooperate during the national emergency, "and more are expected," he declared.

Citing President Roosevelt's statement made during the historic May 27th radio broadcast, calling for the need of strengthening civilian as well as military morale, Mr. Vogel said, "That is a challenge the industry is meeting in producing and exhibiting the right subject at the right time."

Striking at the industry's critics, the "zealot reformers" and others "who keep up a steady fire trained upon the industry," Mr. Vogel declared, "The public is well treated in the small cost of admission; the fine entertainment, the elaborate and modern structure of today's theatre and the pride with which these theatres are operated by hardworking showmen."

On behalf of the industry, he presented a special "Vogel" corncob pipe to Frank L. Rogers, general manager of the Leader-Republican, in appreciation of the cooperation of the press.

SMPE Nominations Weighed

The committee charged with nominating Society of Motion Picture Engineers officers and governors for 1942 will make a report on this matter to the Board of Governors at the latter's meeting on July 24th in order that the Society's membership may consider the proposals. Personnel of the committee comprises Herbert Griffin, chairman; E. A. Williford, H. G. Tasker, K. F. Morgan, Barton Kreuzer, James Frank, Jr., A. C. Downes, E. K. Carver, and M. C. Batsel.

Exhibitors Acquire Theatre

A group of independent Wisconsin exhibitors have annexed the Colonial theatre in Milwaukee, a local neighborhood theatre, and have retained Ernst Langemack, operator of the house, as manager. The new operating company is headed by William L. Ainsworth, Fond du Lac, while A. C. Guttenberg, Milwaukee, is vice-president and Harry Perlewitz also of Milwaukee, is secretary-treasurer.

RKO Advances Writers

Following President George Schaefer's announced policy of "promotion within the ranks," Collier Young, head of RKO Radio's story department, has advanced two of the studio's readers to writing posts. John Humphrey and Ardel Wray, who have been assistants to Mr. Young, have been advanced to the new positions. Both have been with the department for several years. William Nutt and Paul Perex, readers, will fill the two vacancies on the staff.

European Exiles See "Underground"

An imposing roster of famous European statesmen and writers in exile, were invited to a special showing in New York of warner Brothers' new picture, "Underground," last Saturday. The film, starring Jeffrey Lynn, is the story of the anti-Hitler radio within Germany, and is scheduled to open at New York's Globe Theatre June 21st.

Among those present at the screening were Stefan Zweig, Jules Romains, Dr. Raoul Auernheimer, president of the Austrian P.E.N. Club and well known dramatist; Ferdinand Bruckner, leading German and Austrian dramatist; Emery Gonder, Hungarian painter and cartoonist; Victor Trivas, Russian director and scenario writer; Robert Goffin, Free Belgian representative and author of "Has King Leopold Betrayed the Allies"; Klaus Mann, son of Thomas Mann; Annette Kolb, German novelist; Count Ferdinand Czernin, son of the former Foreign Minister of Austria and president of Free Austria in America; Minister Rott, Catholic leader and Minister of Social Welfare in the Schusschnigg Cabinet in Austria; Alvarez del Vayo, former Foreign and War Minister of Loyalist Spain; and Dr. G. P. Bronisch, president of the Loyal Americans of German Descent.

Williams Joins Loew

Rex Williams, an Elkhart, Ind., showman, has joined the Loew advertising department to handle special promotion work. His first assignment will be in Evansville, Ind., where Loew operates two theatres.

"I'VE GOT SOMETHING THERE!"

"With all the newspaper stories about shortages in materials, I realize more and more how much my Altec agreements are going to mean to me—in fact, more than ever before. Altec knows how to keep the equipment I've got in my theatre functioning well. They'll know how to conserve what I've got, how to keep me supplied. I've got something there!" Change to Altec today.

IGNORE PICKETS OF UNWARRANTED STRIKES, PETRILLO BIDS UNIONISTS

Musicians' Leader Cites Teamster Strike as Typical; Arnold Attacked for Union Stand; Browne, Bioff Trial August 18

Union musicians were advised to use their own judgment—"to inquire into the causes, the demands, the underlying motives of strikes and picket lines" — and to walk through those picket lines when they are "not legitimate," at the 46th annual convention of the American Federation of Musicians, in Seattle, Monday through Saturday of last week.

The adviser was the Federation's president, James Caesar Petrillo, head of the Chicago local and elected last year to carry on the office held for so many years by Joseph N. Weber. Mr. Petrillo was unanimously reelected at the convention, along with C. L. Bagley, vice-president, Fred Birnbach, national secretary, and Harry Brenton, financial secretary-treasurer. Salaries of Mr. Birnbach and Mr. Brenton were increased from $10,000 to $15,000 per year.

Teamsters' Strike Cited

The advice on picket passing was given during one of the closing sessions, and was motivated by the strike of the New York teamsters' local against theatres, radio stations, and the headquarters of the New York musicians' Local 802, for the alleged refusal of members of the latter to employ the teamsters for the transportation of musical instruments from place to place, and from vehicle to stage door.

Mr. Petrillo said: "If you've got an idea that because some unions are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, you've got to stand by, you got the wrong idea. . . . Where the picket lines are not legitimate, in your belief, you can walk through them, and continue your employment."

The convention considered many matters pertinent to union music, chiefly employment conditions, and re-employment of members made unemployed by mechanical devices.

So-called "juke-boxes"—coin music machines —were discussed as well as recording and transcription employment. The executive board was to consider a resolution to stop these recordings and transcriptions by union musicians, if they continue to be used in competition with "live music." Other resolutions to be mulled by the executives were one to license the operators of coin music machines, another to force the giving of a vested interest in such music to the artists employed.

The resolutions were opposed by Mr. Weber, now honorary president, who said: "If you are of the opinion that 140,000 musicians can control an industry in which 150,000,000 Americans are interested, you are wrong. The Government would stop us so quickly, it would make our heads swim. Nothing can be done, except to make the recording companies pay a decent price for our services."

Voted down was a resolution requiring hotel and ballroom operators to give one-third employment to local resident musicians for every two-thirds given traveling "name bands."

Thurman Wesley Arnold, Assistant United States Attorney General in charge of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice, received a tongue-lashing from Mr. Petrillo, who called him a "menace" to organized labor for his charges that some unions constituted a monopoly. He referred to Mr. Arnold as a "man who holds a high position in Washington, D. C., who has not only tried to blacken one of our eyes, but both of them."

At the convention's closing business session, delegates refused to reconsider a previously adopted resolution requiring national officers to publish a list of Federation employes and salaries. The officers, opposing the idea, said it would mean needless work and expense.

The approximately 600 delegates were paid $22.50 daily during their stay. On the closing day, the national treasurer distributed more than $94,500.

Dallas will house the 1942 convention, it was decided.

STUDIO FIVE DAY WEEK INDICATED

Predictions that the Hollywood studios might soon have an eight-hour, five-day week were heard on Tuesday, in Hollywood, after preliminary negotiations between business agents of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees studio unions, and producers' labor representatives, Fred Pelton and Pat Casey. The negotiations were over the 16-point program for changed working conditions and higher wages, advanced by the Alliance unions some months ago; and the proposals for the new work week came from Mr. Pelton and Mr. Casey. The conferees were to meet again Thursday.

Disney Strikers Insist On Full Union Shop

Replying to counter demands by Walt Disney last week, the members of Screen Cartoonists Guild, Local 852, said this week they still wanted a full union studio, and full reinstatement of employees, as of May 16th. However, they also voted willingness for a National Labor Relations Board election, if such could be legally attained. Previously, the board had called the Disney studio unfair and its present union a "company union." The strike began two weeks ago, with the studio attempting to maintain a normal work schedule, the union attempting to enlist all labor organizations as well as theatres and other studios, and Mr. Disney asking several times for an election.

The Los Angeles Central Labor Council said last week it would ask AFL members, nationally, to stay away from theatres showing Disney cartoons.

Directors of Wall Disney Productions, Inc., on Friday night, June 13th, deferred the quarterly preferred stock dividend due July 1st, because of "reduced income as a result of the spread of the European war, and its repercussions, and the company's working capital requirements for producing and carrying feature pictures for release in the most advantageous manner in the market now available."

Meanwhile, the New York unit of the Screen Publicists Guild was informed Monday by the NLRB that it would soon be appraised as the bargaining agent for home office publicity and advertising workers.

George Browne, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and Willie Bioff, a vice-president, and Browne's personal representative in the leadership of the Hollywood studio unions, will stand trial August 18th in New York Federal Court on charges of extorting $550,000 from Warner Brothers, Paramount, Loew's, and Twentieth Century-Fox.

The date was set by Federal Judge John G. Knox, who at the same time warned against intimidation of witnesses by the pair, who are charged with extorting the mentioned sum from the film companies under the threat of causing labor tieups. He was to hear motions against the indictment of the two next Monday.

The indictment was returned several weeks ago by a Federal grand jury in New York, and the two labor leaders were immediately arrested, Browne in Chicago and Bioff in Los Angeles, both cities being their operating headquarters.

Both men maintained their innocence, and at the hearing in New York Thursday, June 12th, Bioff, addressing the press in the courtroom, charged that all the unions on the Coast were "infested with Communists," and that 18 known Communists were expelled from these unions during the past year.

He also said that, in the national defense interest, the Coast unions would now have a policy of mediation rather than striking.

Approximately 40 witnesses are expected to be haled to court by the defense. Also, it is anticipated there may be new charges, inasmuch as parts of the indictment were left open by the use of "and others."

During the hearing last week, United States District Attorney Mathias F. Correa charged the pair with threatening bodily harm to the executives of the film companies from whom they extorted the $550,000. There then followed the warning by Judge Knox against molestation of witnesses, with his threat that the two would be jailed if such occurred.

Equity Elects Eight Council Members

Eight new council members to replace those who quit last week charging that, as a result of elections two weeks ago, the group would be dominated by Communists, were elected by the Actors Equity council Monday. They are Donald Randolph, Robert Ross, Alexander Clark, Jose Ferrer, Ben Smith, Evelyn Varden, Roy Roberts, and Walter Gilbert. No replacements were made for two other resigned council members, Florence Reed and Peggy Wood, vice-presidents.

The organization's executive secretary, Paul Dulzell, characterized these charges of Communism "ridiculous." William David, one of the resigned councilors, said an official of the organization, not a paid employee, should have issued the disclaimer.

On Tuesday, Bert Lytell, president asked the Dies Committee to investigate charges of Red activity in the organization. Such action had been asked before as a "cleaner," and to refute the charges by William Lambertson, Republican Representative from Kansas, who was instrumental in killing the Federal Theatre Project some years ago, who has, from time to time, attacked several members of Equity's council of 50, by name, as Marxists. It was Congressman Lambertson who injected the radicalism issue into the election of two weeks ago by saying that Alan Hewitt, subsequently elected, was a Communist, and who asked that he be denied nomination. Mr. Hewitt ran on an independent ticket.

First National

HIGH SIERRA: Humphrey Bogart, Ida Lupino—Exceptionally good. Did nice business on Foto Nite to a nice build-up for the second night. Play it; a natural for a small town.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SANTA FE TRAIL: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Raymon Massey, Ronald Reagan, Alan Hale—Wonderful show. We had large crowds every time we showed this one. Raymond Massey's acting is superb. Played April 24-25.—Car Presley, New Madison Theatre, Huntsville, Ark. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

COME LIVE WITH ME: James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr—Excellent. James Stewart gives his usual highly superior performance, and Hedy Lamarr is very good. Ian Hunter and Verree Teasdale are excellent, while Adeline de Walt Reynolds really goes to town. Hope to see her on the screen again very soon. Stormy weather again but the picture is mighty good. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 9-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

COME LIVE WITH ME: Hedy Lamarr, James Stewart—Good picture that pleased. James Stewart is OK any time; Lamarr is OK also. Played May 17-19. —Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

COME LIVE WITH ME: Hedy Lamarr, James Stewart—Very good feature and coupled with "Son of Monte Cristo," U-A, certainly clicked. Stewart and Lamarr make a good team in my estimation. Should do business wherever shown. If you haven't booked it, do it now and co-feature something for support and then watch B.O. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 1-2.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood and transient patronage.

COMRADE X: Clark Gable, Hedy Lamarr—Good picture that pleased most of the fans. Palyed May 10-12.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S CRISIS: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day, Robert Young—Just another Kildare picture. They are very good, but too much alike to stand an extended run. Ran this after it had been shown everywhere else, so did not do much at the box office. Pleased those who came. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 15-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FLIGHT COMMAND: Robert Taylor, Ruth Hussey, Walter Pidgeon—A good picture and enjoyed by all. Walter Pidgeon and Robert Taylor were both good. Business was a little above average, but we had opposition all week, a revival. Played May 28-29.—Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

KEEPING COMPANY: John Shelton, Ann Rutherford—Fills the need on the lower half of a double bill; not much to it as the initial offering of a new family series. Running time, 87 minutes. Played May 27.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

LAND OF LIBERTY: Historical—Just what I thought, good picture, no business. But had to book it. You can't pay bills with this type of picture. Played May 27-29.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

MAISIE WAS A LADY: Ann Sothern, Lew Ayres —Played with Joe E. Brown co-feature, "So You Won't Talk" and added attraction—"Louis-Baer Fight Pictures." Story rather light and of the usual "Maisie" type, but Lew Ayres made a good leading man for Ann Sothern. Business OK but could have been better; think "Fight" special helped gross to quite an extent. Running time, 79 minutes. Played June 5-6.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

MAISIE WAS A LADY: Ann Sothern, Lew Ayres—Double billed for one day with "Next Time We Love," a reissue, and had no complaints from those that saw it; however, the attendance was too light to show a profit; the picture was fair but not outstanding. Running time, 79 minutes. Played May 20.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

MEN OF BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney—This picture was excellent. It is one of the best I have played this year and also did all right at the box office. It was quite sad in parts and had most of the women in tears at the end. Running time, 100 minutes. Played June 1-2.—Walter Eldred, Colfax Theatre, Colfax, Calif. Small town patronage.

PHILADELPHIA STORY: Katherine Hepburn, James Stewart, Cary Grant—Excellent picture and well supported by three stars, all of whom did their parts well. Business held up good both days of run and patrons' comment was fine. This should do well wherever played especially if it is not percentage. Running time, 112 minutes. Played May 25-26.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood and transient patronage.

WASHINGTON MELODRAMA: Frank Morgan, Kent Taylor, Ann Rutherford—Just a program picture which didn't draw and didn't please. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 3.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL, THE: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—Good picture and good business. It is really three plots in one and some complained that it was too long. Running time, 131 minutes. Played June 4-5.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Monogram

TAKE ME BACK TO OKLAHOMA: Tex Ritter, Bob Wills—Bob Wills is liked very much in this community. If your patrons like westerns with plenty of music, this will please. Business above average. Running time, 50 minutes. Played May 18-19.—H. E. Fulgham, Ideal Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Paramount

COMIN' ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Bob Burns, Una Merkel, Jerry Colonna—An excellent piece of entertainment which was well liked by everyone. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 20-21.—H. E. Fulgham, Ideal Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LADY EVE: Barbara Stanwyck, Henry Fonda—Good feature picture. Business held up well, better second day of run. Had just enough comedy to make it interesting to all patrons. Stanwyck and Fonda make a good team in my estimation. Exhibitors should book this one. Running time, 95 minutes. Played June 3-4.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

MOON OVER BURMA: Dorothy Lamour, Robert Preston—Nothing to rave about. Not as good as her previous pictures. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 8-9-10.—Harry Tishkoff, Empress Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Neighborhood patronage.

NORTH WEST MOUNTED POLICE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll—Magnificent production, many good comments. Business not up to average on account bad, rainy weather. It would take more room than allowed here to say the good things about this picture. Played May 31, June 1.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

NORTH WEST MOUNTED POLICE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll, Paulette Goddard, Preston Foster, Robert Preston—One of the outstanding pictures of the year. We are sorry to have played it so late.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. Generl patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RIVER: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin—Lots of walkouts on first double reel. The worst Paramount picture every played; the singing is terrible, the comedy is silly and music is no good. Except the announcement about "Kelso Cucumber Cream" which lasted two minutes is the best part in the picture. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 8-9-10.—Harry Tishkoff, Empress Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Neighborhood patronage.

ROUND-UP, THE: Richard Dix, Patricia Morison, Preston Foster—Good show. Richard Dix not as good in this one as in "Cherokee Strip." We had fair crowds both nights. Played May 28-29.—Carl Presley, New Madison Theatre, Huntsville, Ark. General patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS RIDE AGAIN: John Howard, Ellen Drew, Akim Tamiroff, May Robson—This was one of the westerns that seemed to please everyone. Played to a good house with good box office. Played May 30-31.—Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronge.

THERE'S MAGIC IN MUSIC: Allan Jones, Susanna Foster—This picture is classed too high. As far as box office is concerned, it is a failure. Very few who liked it. Good for music lovers of high class singing, but we have so few who like it. Played May 26-27.—Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

Republic

BORDER LEGION: Roy Rogers, Carol Hughes—One of Roy Rogers' best, but I think he needs better musical accompaniment and not so much history. Played April 18-19.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

COUNTRY FAIR: Eddy Foy, Jr., June Clyde—Radio stars Lulu Belle & Scotty sure brought them in for us on this one. Exceptional business all four days. The picture is OK but should have had more of Lulu Belle & Scotty as they mean more to small towns than the star names in this feature. Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 25-28.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Granden, Wisconsin. Small town and rural patronage.

FRIENDLY NEIGHBORS: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—Very good program. Played as a double feature to a good house for the week-end trade. Played May 30-31.—Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

IN OLD CHEYENNE: Roy Rogers, "Gabby" Hayes —Rogers and Hayes excellent. Sally Payne grand. Great little western that will more than please. Running time, 59 minutes. Played May 29-31.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Granden, Wisconsin. Small town and rural patronage.

MELODY RANCH: Gene Autry, Ann Miller—Worst Gene Autry ever played. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 6-7.—Harry Tishkoff, Empress Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Neighborhood patronage.

PHANTOM COWBOY: Don Barry, Virginia Carrol —Good but not Barry's best. Running time, 56 minutes. Played May 22-24.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Granden, Wisconsin. Small town and rural patronage.

ROOKIES ON PARADE: Bob Crosby, Ruth Terry —Very good title, but just very ordinary picture;

however, the patrons liked it and there were a lot of laughs and after all the public is the judge, so I will say it was OK. Played June 3-5.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

SING, DANCE, PLENTY HOT: Rutb Terry, Johnny Downs—A musical production which was varied in plot and in scenery. Went over very well here. Satisfied the most critical. Played May 3-4.—W. J. Overstreet, Florida State Prison Theatre, Raiford, Florida. Prison patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby—Republic and Judy delivered again, a very swell show witb Judy right up to standard. Keep her going in this type, Republic, and let her sing just as often as you can find a spot for a song. Business above average. Played May 23-24.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALONG THE RIO GRANDE: Tim Holt, Ray Whitley—Usual run of cowboy picture with added singing by unknowns except for Whitley. Business good—matinee only as children like this type of feature. Evening business off or light. Suggest this one as a fill-in some time if an exhibitor is stuck for single day billing. Running time, 64 minutes. Played May 31.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS: Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Freddie Bartholomew, Jimmy Lydon—Liked extra well. Had several compliments on this one. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 24.—H. E. Fulgham, Ideal Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

RIDE ON VAQUERO: Cesar Romero, Mary Beth Hughes—Good picture and good business. Romero is liked here. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 6-7.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SCOTLAND YARD: Nancy Kelly, Edmund Gwenn—Doubled witb the "Bank Dick" to lengthen out tbe show and find out wbat it would do. I found out. A good concrete example of what is wrong with the sbow business; people come to be entertained, not bored. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 30-31.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

TALL, DARK AND HANDSOME: Cesar Romero, Virginia Gilmore, Charlotte Greenwood, Milton Berle—This is really a very good picture, but no box office names to bring them in. Charoltte Greenwood is the whole show. That gal is plenty good. Why don't they give her the lead? Romero is not too good, but Milton Berle is excellent. This one will please if you can get them in. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 23-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TALL, DARK AND HANDSOME: Cesar Romero, Milton Berle, Virginia Gilmore—Good picture and weil done by Romero; even better than his usual "Cisco" roles. Milton Berle did himself proud in my estimation; also Miss Gilmore held up part. Business fair both days. Played with "Turnabout," U-A. I sincerely recommend booking this one—soon. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 29-30.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

GREAT DICTATOR, THE: Charles Chaplin, Paulette Goddard—Played on Sunday and Monday to fair business; consider the picture not worth the percentage asked. Impossible to operate a theatre successfully under these terms. You will be money ahead if you pass it up. Running time, 129 minutes. Played May 18-19.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

OF MICE AND MEN: Burgess Meredith, Betty Field—Fair picture but did not hold up both days of run. Patrons liked it fairly well because it was a mite different from average run features. Wouldn't recommend using it for feature unless one had a Premium or Bank Nite for support. Running time, 106 minutes. Played May 27-28.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

SO ENDS OUR NIGHT: Fredric March, Margaret Sullavan, Glenn Ford, Frances Dee—Fair picture to fair business. I don't think the producers should make this type of picture with the present world conditions. People want light comedies and musicals and nothing about the war, as was the case with this one. Running time, 120 minutes. Played May 16-17.—Walter Eldred, Colfax Theatre, Colfax, Calif. Small town patronage.

Universal

BANK DICK, THE: W. C. Fields, Cora Witherspoon—A perfect example of what this company bas been doing all the season, placing an ordinary program picture with running time short for double billing in the top bracket allocation, then if you squawk too hard to make an adjustment, and you still lose the playing time without a profit, it's good business for the company if you are able to take it. I don't want it any longer than this season. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 30-31.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

BOYS FROM SYRACUSE, THE: Allan Jones, Martha Raye, Rosemary Lane, Joe Penner—I picked up this old one to fill a date because it has star power. Some liked it, some didn't, but I'm not sorry I played it. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 8-9.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Thetare, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GIVE US WINGS: "Dead End Kids," "Wallace Ford—Not bad, not good, just so-so. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

THE PROOF OF IT

The Managers' Round Table of June 7th reproduced a newspaper layout, part of the original and revolutionary advertising created by United Detroit Theatres executives for "A Woman's Face". The campaign was credited for better business than in similar situations playing the same date. So successful was it, in fact, that M-G-M brought out supplementary ads incorporating the same selling slant, so following dates could have the choice of either approach. Many took advantage of the Detroit plan. In New York, for instance, the Loew's metropolitan theatres followed through fully in newspaper ads, lobbies and other advertising.

In this week's book is reproduced a newspaper layout by Eddie Sniderman for "Devil and Miss Jones" at RKO Proctor's, Newark, N. J. Here, too, the selling plan was different. The success of it is marked by the adoption of it by other of the circuit's houses playing the attraction.

Both of the above instances were made possible by the eagerness of theatremen to explore other avenues of appeal, to test the box-office returns of one advertising approach as against another.

For some time now, Paramount has been studying the possibilities of advance test campaigns. Now, the company announces such advertising tests for "Kiss the Boys Good-bye" in a half-dozen July runs where various combinations of newspaper and poster advertising will be used. Upon the results of these openings will be based the final campaigns to be used later in the summer when the picture is released nationally. The new distribution set-up has to do with the Paramount plan since, on individual picture buying, exhibitors will be influenced by the business done at these advance showings.

Pre-testing is not new in general business. Few advertised products are launched by national advertisers until exhaustive analyses are made of what form of selling approach in print will return the best results.

The advantages of such presentation have long been recognized by distribution and exhibition advertising heads. Years ago, this observer sat in on home office discussions that sought ways and means to put the idea into work. But, always, national exhibitor demand for immediate release dates prevented any wide solution of this pressing problem. There wasn't enough time to try one approach against another. Circumstances of release schedules forced home-office admen to stick to getting out one campaign in time

The new distribution alignment now promises an adequate breathing spell between picture distribution and exhibition so that a real job of pre-testing can be done. Thus, what Paramount proposes rates serious study by the rest of the industry as an assured means of returning to good attractions the fatter grosses these pictures deserve that are not now being had.

POINT OF INFORMATION

Reasons-why for attendance at the New York Strand on the Sunday opening day of "Million Dollar Baby" among 2,300 patrons present some highly interesting percentages, as is to be noted in the news section of last week's issue. Queried by Warner Brothers, most of the customers, 67 per cent of them, admitted that newspaper advertising brought them in; 41 per cent credited the newspaper reviews, 19 per cent the advance trailers and—get this—11 per cent were attracted by the front display.

It is to be expected that the preponderance of patronage for a Broadway first-run is to be drawn through the newspapers. And that almost one-fifth of the admissions were brought in by trailers attests to the drawing power of this medium even upon sophisticated metropolitan audiences. However, the figure of 11 per cent of patrons attracted by the theatre front requires further exploration, since the total is well under the number that Broadway displays should attract.

Before accepting these findings as final, we should like to see further figures based on a poll taken throughout the week.

With the "Fortnight" listings in this issue, the Second Quarter of the 1941 Quigley Awards officially concludes. Now begins the second and final half of the year's Competitions to determine exhibition's outstanding showmen.

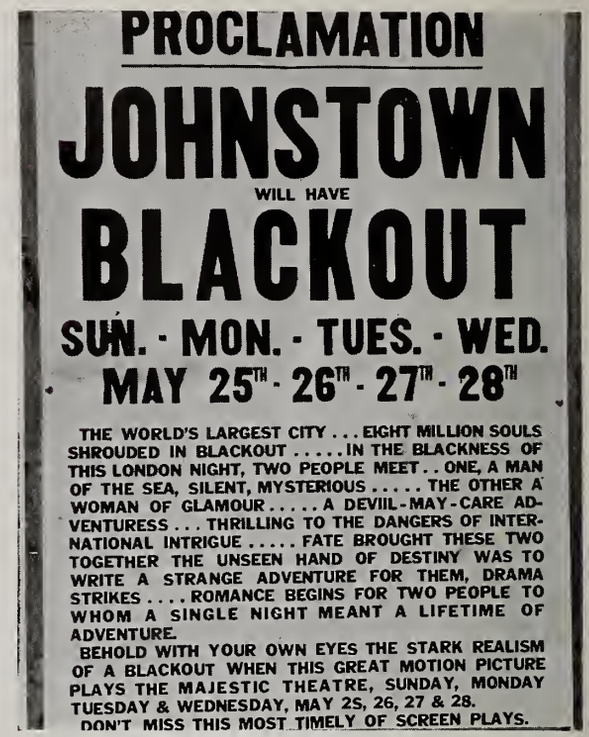
Giant display on "Convoy" at Warners Colonial, Philadelphia, was animated by Stan Benford through slot directly behind plane covered with tracing paper. Behind this was rigged endless belt with series of bombs, which when in operation gave effect in silhouette of bombs dropping on ship below. Effect was heightened as bombs touched flashers that gave impression of ship blowing up.



Reported a "first-timer" was tieup effected by T. Teschner with local bank for the travelogue "Yosemite The Magnificent" at Loew's Stillman, Cleveland. Main window was devoted to the picture with cards calling attention to the opening and the bank's travel bureau.

Designed by Al Reb at the Stanley, in Philadelphia, was eye-arresting setpiece for "Love Crazy," featuring star cutouts and scene stills. In addition mechanical man bally toured streets during peak hours dressed as Powell in woman's garb, distributing heralds carrying picture copy, playdates, etc.

Round Table In Pictures

One-sheet "Blackout" proclamations were spotted about town by Walter Hall during that engagement at the Majestic, in Johnstown, Pa. In addition, front of house was blacked out at scheduled times each evening, during which huge searchlights, mounted atop theatre, swept the skies.

Brightly colored and illuminated by Neon tubing was the lobby setpiece constructed for date on "Blood and Sand" at Loew's Poli, in Bridgeport by Matt Saunders. Lower part had cutout figures of the stars on a slow-moving turn table.

Promoted from local Sinclair Oil Company was pilot trainer apparatus, which Frank Bickerstaff of L&J Georgia, in Athens, Ga., planted out front for "Power Dive." Ground pilot trainer was on hand day ahead of opening to answer all questions.

Promoting leading department store in Denver for advance window display on "Sunny," Round Tabler Mickey Gross at the RKO Orpheum Theatre effected a neat tieup. Carrying out the bridal atmosphere and stressing linens for the couple, center of window featured enlarged scene still of wedding procession.

Reported by Great States City Manager Len Worley is attractive front turned out by Artist Dusty Rhodes for "Ziegfeld Girl" at the Madison, Peoria. Above boxoffice are mounted stills, which through use of motor and rheostat, displays a new photo on each turn. Blow-ups on either side of front are brilliantly illuminated at night.

The combined efforts of Howard Waugh's boys, Morrison, Dearth, Barnes and Davenport brought forth above live animated display for "Million Dollar Baby" at Warner's down Memphis way. Attractive miss seated atop boxoffice in deck chair created much comment.

Promoting the "Victor Dog" from local merchant, Round Tabler Bob Berezin at the Elgin in Ottawa, Canada, planted him in his lobby with setpiece carrying records from "Penny Serenade." Radio concealed behind the dog played hit tunes from the picture.

Institutional Trailer Copy Campaign Effective for L&J

Immediate favorable audience reaction to the statewide institutional trailer campaign recently instituted for the Lucas & Jenkins Theatres of Georgia is now reported by Earle Holden of the Capitol, in Atlanta, who prepared the copy, working with "Whit" Whitaker, district manager, who designated the style. Holden proceeded on the idea that in such parlous times motion picture entertainment is more important than ever, the copy also urging attendance more than once a week.

Of the entire first series of trailers, run at end of the feature and changed weekly, the following two are representative:

After a week's run at the Fox, in Atlanta, each trailer is routed to another circuit house and a new one of the series shown at the Fox. This is to be continued until the entire seven are in circulation when another series, now in preparation by Holden and Whitaker, will be instituted.

Local Boy Angle Sold By Charninsky for "Adam"

Focusing his selling point on "Adam Had Four Sons" around the fact that a local boy had an important part in the film, Louie Charninsky and publicist M. O. Rike, Jr., for that date at the Rialto planted stories in dailies, columnists also coming through with breaks. For their front, large cutout heads of the stars and featured players were displayed atop boxoffice.

In connection with "Life with Henry," Charninsky staged a "Fathers and Sons" Night at which both were admitted for the price of the father's admission. Here, too, papers were generous coming through with stories and art. Ahead of "Honeymoon for Three," Louie advertised for a newly married couple and a friend to be guests of the management opening night of film. Promoted by the theatremen were dinner, dancing and accommodations for the night at the hotel for the couple.

House Remodelling Job Good for Newspapers

With the Strand, in Muncie, Ind., closing for the summer months for redecoration, Melvin B. Grundy in an effort to keep his theatre's name in the public's mind, is planting a barrage of publicity which includes art work. First ad, headed "It's only the beginning, folks," listed some of the new equipment. Paper carried photo of new projection lamps to be installed together with brief description.

In connection with his run on "Lady Eve," Grundy distributed cards attached to which were promoted large red apples, these were given to leading merchants and were good for admissions if presented at boxoffice. Created by house artist Max Coulson was an effective lobby display consisting of cutout figures of Stanwyck and Fonda seated on giant compo apple, title letters were pasted to smaller apples and hung above.

Flex Sells "Sunny" With Ace Contests

Playing up the clothes angle in "Sunny," Jack Flex tied in a dress designing contest on the date at Keith's, Syracuse with readers invited to design and color costumes they thought appropriate for Anna Neagle. Flex hooked another sheet to a hat designing contest, paper running star head layout to guide those interested. Third newspaper contest was a quiz idea wherein the title of the picture was used as the cue word, readers invited to make up a list of as many words as possible based on the weather.

The Schiner made use of various radio possibilities, tying the attraction over six popular broadcasts on three leading stations, WFBL, WOLF and WSYR the broadcasts running from Jerome Kern recordings from the picture to synopsis of the story, biographies of the stars, etc. Windows were tied in on style displays and for top lobby attraction, giant setpiece, 30 by 17 feet plugged the title in cutout block letters with transparencies used to emphasize the leads.

Ties Benchley to Father's Day

Billed on the same program was Paramount's Benchley short "The Forgotten Man" which was given buildup by Flex for Father's Day campaign in cooperation with leading department store using cuts of Benchley in advertising, plus theatre credits. Store used full front window of different fathers gifts, elaborated by Benchley stills and copy. Postal was promoted for jumbo telegrams in windows and branch offices with snipes calling attention to the date and cast.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Rosenthal Offers Tickets On "Pot o' Gold" Wheel

Special story was landed in all dailies in Bridgeport, through efforts of Morris Rosenthal at Loew's Majestic, concerning the new Loew Merit system for outstanding pictures. The first picture to receive this award being Morris' then current "Cheers for Miss Bishop." Comment cards asking patrons if they agreed with the Loew selection were available and used for 40 by 60 out front. Newspaper essay contest was arranged, guest tickets going to those submitting best 100-word letters on whether they agreed with Martha Scott's decision in the film.

On "Pot o' Gold," Rosey arranged with local store for main window in which he planted a wheel with numbers corresponding to pages in phone book. Telephone was hooked up in window and girl spun the wheel. First spin indicated page number, second spin the number on the page to indicate the winner. Girl then dialed the party and if they answered the phone they were advised they would receive two tickets in the mail to see the picture. Newspaper coverage included photo of Rosenthal taken with Horace Heidt and his arranger and a three-column cut was run on the radio page showing the selection of winner as done in the picture.

Greenway Reports "Kid" Campaign

Batting for the vacationing Lou Cohen at Loew's Poli, in Hartford, Fred Greenway reports his "Billy the Kid" campaign, stressed being costumed horseback rider covering schools, playgrounds, etc., with theatre credits lettered on saddlebags. Ushers in western costume paging "Billy the Kid" in the audience was another thought and the costume idea was carried further by dressing the personnel accordingly. For newspaper attentions, a sombrero promotion was worked by sending the hats to the motion picture critics in fancy boxes with tiein card copy.

Featured in the publicity was classified tiein announcing a search for old newspapers or clippings containing references to the famous outlaw. It was planned to tie this idea to the paper's own promotion by running similar clippings from issues of that period. At the theatre, a coloring contest was planned to interest youngsters and for street stunt, Greenway togged out some of the local kids in cowhand costume leading bannered baby goat around town.

Newspaper advertising was built along co-op ads featuring Mary Howard and a used car promotion was another thought, with dealer tying in with bannered copy such as "Why Ride a Horse," "No Hold-ups Here," etc. For feature stuff, local Chief of Police, said to be an authority on this type of picture, was invited to opening to be interviewed about it. In addition to the usual radio announcements, costumed ballyman was set to be interviewed by popular man-on-street program.

The above are highlights of the campaign planned at a publicity meeting of the Hartford Loewmen, in addition to Greenway those suggesting ideas being Sidney Kleper, Wallace Cooper and Russell Grant.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Walsh Ties "Wings" Date To Memorial Day Parade

Bill Walsh and assistant manager Paul Tighe of the Comerford Theatre, in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., let no grass grow under their feet to capitalize on the fact that "I Wanted Wings" opened at the house on Memorial Day and tied it in with the annual parade and the Army Recruiting Program. Crowning achievement was tie-up with Army Recruiting station whereby 1,000 miniature parachutes bearing guest tickets and special bulletins were released from Army training plane at climax of parade. In addition a regular Army truck, bearing play date banners, rode in the parade.

Officials of local Army induction station, legion officers and city officials were guests at a special showing with shot of group appearing in local papers. A miniature plane with propeller whirling plugging pilot instruction at airport was in center of lobby. Art Shop director Art Bullock designed some outstanding displays, one including miniature plane and colored cutouts of plane. In addition they distributed 200 two-sheets, 50 bumper sheets, 50 bus cards and used teaser ads in addition to regular ads prior to opening.

LAST OF THE "SECOND"

With the listings set down in these columns, the Second Quarter of the 1941 Quigley Awards officially closes. The entries of all winners in this Fortnight, including previous promtoions which won other awards for them during the entire Quarter, are now to be judged for the Quarter-Master Plaques, Medals, and Citations. PHILADELPHIANS HIT HARD ON CAMPAIGNS

Stan Benford Reports on Barutio Warner District Promotions; Other Circuitmen Active

Continuing admirably in his capacity of Committee Head to report Round Table activities from the Philadelphia Warnermen in Steve Barutio's district, Stan Benford forwards joint campaign put on recently by M. Rosenbluth and I. Wernicke of the Colney and Strand Theatres respectively, having to do with a "Shock Show" made up of "Mad Doctor" and "Monster and the Girl."

Both theatremen started with an appropriate trailer run in conjunction with special sound effects recorded over the non-sync, the effects consisting of hair-raising yells, moans and other chilling noises. Teaser cards with scare copy were contributed two weeks ahead, followed at the theatres by the regular exchange trailers with such copy as "Do you like thrills and chills? See the greatest double feature shock show on earth. It's creepier and chillier than a cemetery on a foggy night. Don't Miss It."

Theatremen Feature Shock Shows

Rosenbluth and Wernicke blanketed the section with multicolored heralds and both managers made much of lobby displays in keeping. Gorilla ballyhoos were used on the streets and "Shock Show" posters planted in drug stores, restaurants and other popular gathering spots. The excellent two-theatre campaign was topped with comprehensive publicity in the local papers and advertising in the downtown dailies.

For "Men of Boys Town" at the Colonial, Stan Benford tied his neighborhood paper to a "Boy and His Dog" contest, in which pictures of boys and their pet canines were invited for prizes. All pictures of this nature were eligible. Readers instructed to take shots of boy and dog combinations on the street or to dig through the old family albums for any previous prints. Stan promoted a camera for the first prize, among others, and received more than 250 entries, with publicity on this running almost three weeks ahead.

Questionnaires Issued on "Forum"

Activities among other Warnermen featured a campaign put on for the first of the "International Forum" short subjects at the 69th Street Theatre, in Upper Darby, Pa., with Manager Hadden Matthews tying in with local druggist, brother of William Rowland, producer, of the series. Giant poster at the store plugging the short brought lots of attention and Matthews was also able to obtain out-of-the-ordinary publicity in the local dailies. Druggist also supplied questionnaires having to do with the four experts, who make up the Forum, those answering questions correctly, rewarded with special confections.

Matthews was another of the ever-observing theatremen to tie in his date on "Nice Girl?" with Deanna Durbin's wedding, the Warnerman setting up a giant easel carrying congratulations copy and inviting patrons to sign their names to be forwarded to Deanna on her marriage. Set of wedding silver, promoted by Hadden as a gift for the star from local jeweler was also on display.

Reaching out for summer business, David Seaman, manager of the Forum and his assistant Jackie Fields, organized a Star Baseball League among the neighborhood youngsters. Theatremen are tying this into the theatre operation, putting on a series of events to insure attendance of the juvenile ballhawks during the hot months.

At the Bromley, Joe Nevison and his assistant Jerry Wexler, keeping a weather eye on the kid trade, recently promoted an ice-cream eating contest. Youngsters holding lucky numbers formed two competing teams according to size and went to work on the ice cream with their hands behind their backs. All the cream was promoted, the theatremen giving some boxes of candy and guest tickets to the winners.

McLaglen Personal Tied to Date

Much was made over the personal appearance of Victor McLaglen in connection with opening of "Broadway Limited," with Manager Hal Seidenberg arranging with the Pennsylvania Railroad officials for the star to drive the train in the cab of the locomotive that brought him into Philadelphia. President of City Council and newspapermen greeted McLaglen on arrival, which was good for newspaper stories and art.

Round Tabler Marty Aninsman at Warners' Leader, received the cooperation of his neighborhood merchants by promoting a letter contest in local newspaper for "Come Live With Me." The idea was based on "Would you have the courage to marry a man making a salary of seventeen fifty a week and why?" Promoted gifts and ducats went to winners.

For "Man Made Monster," Elmer Hollander at the Stanton had a street bally based on the screen story, which is that of a man filled with electricity. The ballyhoo man was dressed in a rubber suit and wired with electricity so that sparks jumped each time he touched his hands together.

DEFENSE STAMP PRIZES OFFERED BY NAT WOLF

The growing tendency to offer Defense Savings Stamps instead of the usual cash prizes at kiddie shows received an added impetus when Nat Wolf, Warner Cleveland zone manager, decided upon this form of award to stimulate kiddie matinee business. Representative circuit houses in Cleveland, Mansfield and Lorain, Ohio, have been selected for a trial, with each juvenile patron given a Defense Savings Book and two ten-cent savings stamps. It is intended that the stamps will be used as prizes for the usual contests.

Noise Effects Demonstrated

THE EFFECT of noise on the human nervous system is being demonstrated at 1941 conventions by the Celotex Corporation of Chicago, using special equipment developed for the purpose. Two panels are animated with colored light; one shows how sound waves are reflected by walls and ceilings, the other indicates how this can be controlled by sound-absorbing materials. By an ingenious hook-up of light and bell circuits, the path of the noise is shown, and human masks placed against a dark background express, by their expressions, the comfort or annoyance that a person experiences under the conditions represented.

Brochure on Sound Systems

AN ELABORATE new brochure, with ornamental cover and illustrating photographically all models and parts of Photophone sound equipment, has been issued by RCA. The characteristics of each type of system are given in considerable detail, and in language sufficiently non-technical for general understanding.

Smaller Heavy-Duty Cleaner

A SMALLER vacuum cleaner, but essentially designed for the same heavy-duty applications of the larger models, has been added to the line of "Master-Vac" equipment manufactured by the General Electric Company of Bridgeport, Conn. Called the "Lightweight Master-Vac, Model 203," the new model has the same suction power and quiet operating characteristics of the largest type in this family; the smaller size, however, makes it more convenient for use between seating rows and other restricted areas.

This cleaner is equipped with ball-bearing swivel casters, and a swivel handle for easy carrying. The weight is 30 pounds, and it is 24 inches high and 13 inches in diameter. It has a rubber bumper.

Finish of the housing is royal blue crinkle with chrome trim. Standard accessories consist in 10 feet of hose with a 52-inch extension handle, a carpet and upholstery nozzles, an upholstery brush, and a blowing tool. All special tools available with the larger cleaners are adaptable.

These Smart-Looking Mats Are

STURDY AND SAFE!

THE attractive design of a Goodyear All-Weather Link Mat not only improves the appearance of an entrance, lobby or corridor—but the mat carries a definite safety advantage as well.

Because of its unique corrugated construction it has a non-skid surface that minimizes the danger of people slipping on rainy days. And because it always lies flat, it doesn't develop any hazardous ridges or bulges.

Any area may be covered by an All-Weather Link Mat, for it can be built to your specifications – either in one piece or in sections—and can have your name, address or other device woven into it.

The rugged durability of these mats is the result of their long-wearing blocks of specially-compounded rubber, which are linked together with stout steel wire that resists rust.

Their colors retain their freshness no matter how long these mats are in use. And they are easier to clean because dirt can be flushed away with a hose through drainage channels on the underside.

If you're looking for a safe and handsome mat for your building, explain your needs to Goodyear, Akron, Ohio—or Los Angeles, California.

NEW DISPLAY cases, with metal frames by the Colonial Sales Corporation, New York, and including inside frames for stills developed by the same company, were described in the May 31st issue as installed at the Liberty theatre, New York. It was stated that the installation was by Colonial Sales; however, the actual installation was made by the Stanley Frame Company, New York, using Colonial materials.

Better Theatres

ISSUE OF JUNE 28, 1941. VOLUME 143, NUMBER 13

A Short, Short History Of Sitting Down

WE ARE a sitting people—and extremely sensitive about it. With fine industrial brains laboring incessantly during our times to find better springs, smoother padding, and more luxurious covering fabrics, people of the so-called civilized nations are sitting more and prettier than ever humankind sat before, and doing so as though it were their inalienable right, all posteriors having been created equal, politically.

But sitting, particularly as we have come to know it in the American motion picture theatre, is decidedly a modern invention. In fact, as we know it today, it is rather much a development of the last few years. We observe that our cartoonist, having been told that we were going to refer in this space to sitting in ancient Rome, has equipped the famed Colosseum, now among Fascism's ruins, with streamlined, soft-cushioned chairs like those with which our motion picture theatres now coddle their patrons. The sketch, we assure you, thus presents a flagrant anchronism. In ancient Rome, all except the very rich and the very fat sat with the end of the spine immediately abutting hard stone.

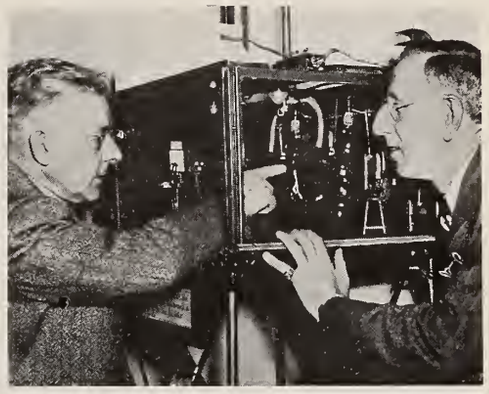
Indeed, in private or public, through ancient and medieval times (we've been reading up on this stuff) a chair was merely a symbol of authority. Sitting was the function of the god, the king, the bishop. Comfort had no more to do with sitting in those days (unless history book is cock-eyed) than it has today in the death-house at Sing Sing. The Roman dictator had his "curule chair," the bishop the chair called a "cathedra"; and of course kings, up until recently, have had their thrones. Sitting once was the business of a few; today it's everybody's pleasure.

In Shakespeare's time most of the theatregoers stood. Addressing the audience, a theatre attendant would say, "Ye nobles who sit at ease, and ye commons who stand right up." But even the nobles sat without benefit of springs, or of any upholstering besides that which some might have brought with them.

The place where the common people stood, corresponding to our main floor, was called the "pit"; later on, with the coming of opera, this became the place where the orchestra sat. Then somebody discovered that the musicians had the best seats in the house, so the orchestra was squeezed into a smaller "pit" under the stage apron and the rest of the main floor was seated for the audience, which explains (taking a great load off our mind, too) why the main floor is called the "orchestra."



And so we come to the Era of the Movies. Of course we hardly need to go here into what has happened during this period; besides, there are a goodly number of theatre chair advertisements in this issue which tell the story much better than we can. These advertisements clearly reflect the influence of the motion picture, since the chairs whose virtues they celebrate are the ultimate result of that invention. That is, they are the ultimate result to date.

What the future will bring, who can say?—well, at least we can't. For many, many centuries Man was content to sit upon earth or stone. When, two or three hundred years ago or whenever it was, he finally was privileged to sit in a theatre, he sat, unless he was king or nobleman, on a wooden chair on which we wouldn't sit through more than the first reel of "Gone With the Wind." Even when the movies made us seat-conscious, we long confined our anxiety to the gluteus maximus. But only recently we have added the popliteal (with gorgeous illustrations, too). Therefore, as to the future—well, we hope the Russians have an army.

Air System Safety

Although the necessity of it is something that needs some going over, the device reported by Earl R. Morin, theatre inspector of the Connecticut State Police, at the spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to prevent smoke from being drawn into a ventilating system is an interesting contribution to the control of hazards, a matter which always concerns the theatre vitally. Material on it has just been obtained from Mr. Morin, with the consent of the SMPE.

We have remarked in these columns before on the vigilance of the motion picture division of the Connecticut police department. It appears that the device is the outgrowth of investigations of a number of instances in which smoke, from fires in adjoining buildings or nearby yards, was drawn into a theatre auditorium. At least on one occasion there was, says Mr. Morin, "a slight panic," and of course one can readily appreciate the effect that smoke thus drawn into the theatre would have. The department did not want to use any preventive device which would depend on the "human element" or require a time-lapse. A manufacturer of mechanical implements was therefore asked to develop a smoke cut-off which would be automatic in action, and ultimately the department approved a gadget of this kind (it is available, we understand, for use anywhere, the cost running somewhere in the neighborhood of $180, including a damper release, but not including a signal light).

Earl R. Morin, theatre inspector of the Connecticut State Police Department, pointing out to William C. Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, features of smoke detecting mechanism designed to prevent smoke from entering auditorium by ventilating system or other channels.

What the device is all about is most clearly indicated by the problems encountered in its development. According to Mr. Morin, the smoke cut-off submitted by the manufacturer had a photoelectric cell with an exciter lamp and two relay switches, which was found to be practical, except that when the smoke cleared the blower started again, automatically, upon release of the relay. This was objected to on the ground that disappearance of the smoke did not necessarily mean that the cause had been eliminated; so a contact switch was added to the cut-off to require someone to start the ventilating system, and it is intended to have a signal light to give visible evidence that the system has been shut off.

This completed the device originally sought; however, it remained to include a damper. A motor-operated damper was found which would be actuated by the smoke detecting device, but the department desired one equipped with a fuse link so as to assure operation even should electric power be shut off. Moreover, the motor would not close the damper rapidly enough, and it also increased the cost of the installation. Development of desired damper was finally undertaken by the department itself, under Mr. Morin's direction, and they finally came up with a damper which employed the principle of an electric door lock operating on 12 volts, a.c. or d.c., releasing the dampers with a small amount of current. This, however, set up a buzzing noise through the system, and that might alarm theatre patrons (these Nut-Meggers are nothing if not thorough!), so a specially designed switch, using contact springs from a telephone jack switch which opens a circuit as soon as the catch is released, was added to end the buzz.

"Then," adds Mr. Morin, just when you think that they've done all right as it is, "we felt that there was still one more thing that should be done. Some of the large dampers made a considerable noise when released. We found that by using ½-inch asbestos wicking with a piece of asbestos cloth around it clamped into a metal frame, it would act as a cushion and gasket and practically eliminate the noise of the damper closing."

Choose Carpet First

The lengthy series of articles and demonstrations which Ben Schlanger, New York theatre architect, begins in this issue, will really embrace the entire basic planning of the motion picture theatre structure, from plot to roof. This is to say that the entire theatre is properly built around, and determined in its plan and dimensions by, the seating provisions. And that reminds us of a recent conversation with an executive of a large carpet manufacturing concern, who asked, "Why don't theatre men select their carpeting when planning the theatre instead of after it has been finished?" Well, first off we thought that sounded kind of silly. Choose floor coverings before you have an interior?

But the idea, it appeared, was to design the interior treatment—decoration, furnishings, color scheme, etc.—around the carpeting. And it turns out to be not such a bad idea.

In the first place, the decorative treatment in general, and the color scheme in particular, puzzle many exhibitors who, for economic reasons, are trying to get along without the services of competent professional designers in the building of small theatres, or in renovation. Even in simple repainting this problem arises, local decorators being frequently not so hot.

And by such action authorized the presentation of this certificate as an expression of appreciation by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers for his successful efforts and labors for the betterment of projection.

By action of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at its spring convention in Rochester, F. H. Richardson, writer on projection for Quigley Publications, was given the above recognition of his thirty years of work in behalf of projection and the projectionist. The scroll (greatly reduced in the above reproduction) was presented at Mr. Richardson's home in Scarsdale, N. Y., June 4th, by a committee representing the SMPE, composed of Paul Larsen, vice-president; Herbert Griffin, executive vice-president; Donald Hyndman, engineering vice-president; and Sylvan Harris, editor of the SMPE Journal.

There is also the possibility that the carpeting itself may suggest an interior treatment. "Carpeting is conspicuous," as this publication constantly points out, therefore it has tremendous bearing upon the overall effect of the interior. Wall and ceiling treatment, in both form and coloration, should be directly related to it in order to get the most out of the installation. Colors for the walls and ceiling are suggested by the colors in the carpeting—may, indeed, be taken right from it. —G. S.

VERN THEATRE
Los Angeles

INTERIOR VIEWS ON NEXT PAGE

Above: FORWARD VIEW OF AUDITORIUM.

■ The night view of the front of the Vern shows the neon marquee trim, the tower-like vertical sign, and the effect of the 23 concentric rings of neon in the integrated marquee soffit-vestibule ceiling. . . . The foyer, intimate and elegantly appointed in a kind of modernized roccoco, has walls tinted a combination of lemon and ochre yellow. Except for an ornamental mirror, walls are plain, floor and ceiling carrying the decorative figures in related patterns. The carpet is an Alexander Smith Crestwood Velvet with dark blue and tan curve figuration on a medium blue ground, while the ceiling has an overall curved-band design in rose and yellow with gold striping, rimmed by a light cove carrying white neon. Uniquely adjoining the foyer is a confectionery alcove (shown below). A plaster hood projects over the display; containing fluorescent lamps, it contains air outlets connected with the air-conditioning system, introducing cooled air on warm days.

CANDY ALCOVE OFF FOYER

■ The plot on which the Vern is built has been given over largely to the auditorium. The compact plan brings patrons from the vestibule directly into a foyer of relatively small dimensions and slightly oval in shape, which leads at either end into the auditorium. The Vern seats 900. The auditorium (except for the rear wall, which is finished in Acoustipulp in multi-directional panels) has walls of hard plaster ornamented at the rear with arched panels tinted in orchid, and at forward sections with modern allegorical figures in tones of red on a lemon yellow overall ground. The ceiling is a panel and border formation in plaster, tinted pale blue, with stencil ornamentation in yellow. The auditorium is illuminated by two strips of neon in ceiling cornice coves, one blue and one white. The Vern is one of a number of theatres designed by S. Charles Lee having auditorium neon circuits operated through dimmers. The air outlets, spaced along the coves, are painted the same color. The Vern has all-year air-conditioning. In addition to traveller screen curtain, the stage is equipped with an updrawn contour curtain in gold, with blue valance. The Vern is seated with American "Bodiform" chairs with blue mohair backs and wine-color leatherette seats.

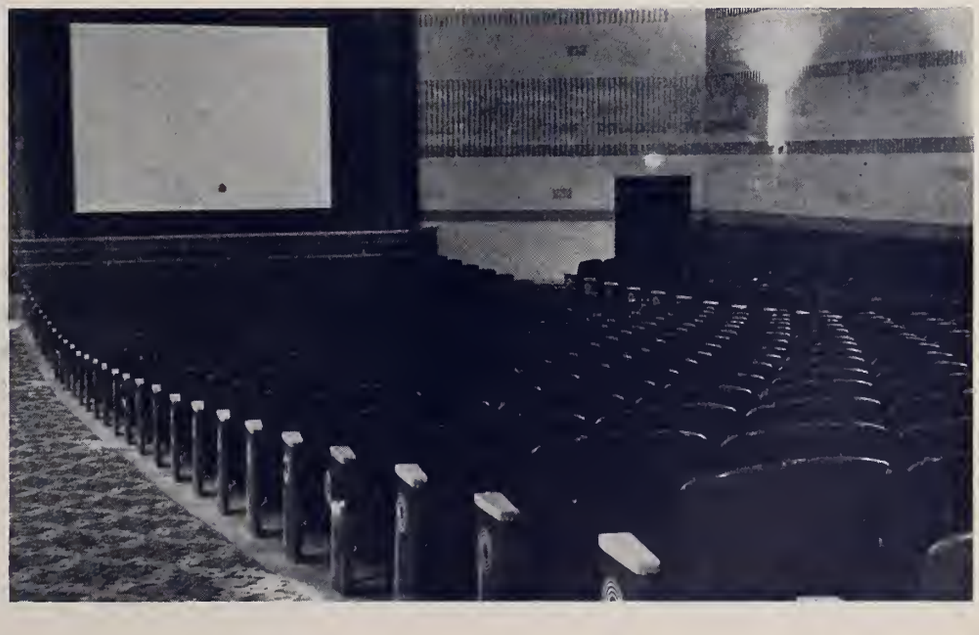
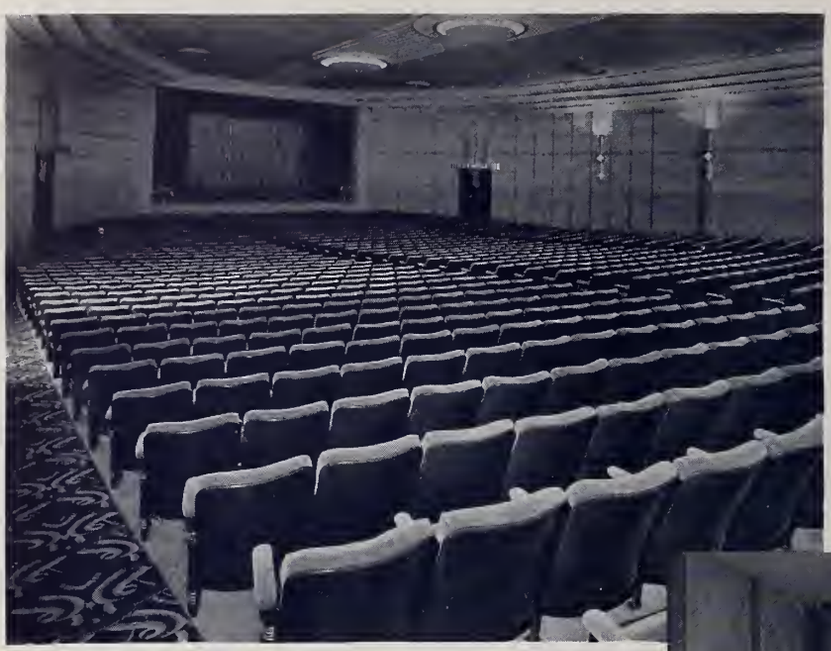
ASSEMBLY
in the Glencoe theatre,
Glencoe, Ill.

The chair shown below, which is the model installed in the Glencoe theatre (though differently covered), is from the Kroehler line of auditorium seating having retracting, or push-back, seats. Of steel construction throughout (cast-iron end standards are available if desired), with joints welded, the Kroehler chair has a flange seat pan riding on rollers which are part of a lever construction that is fully enclosed and permanently lubricated. The seat cushion is a self-contained unit which slips into the pressed steel pan, and is readily removable for reupholstering. The back cushion is similarly constructed to fit into a steel back plate, which is flanged along all edges to protect the fabric and keep out dirt. Arm rests are locked on.

THE CHAIR





THE CHAIR

The chair shown in the Shores theatre is the new Irwin "Clipper", in the "Standard" model (there is also a "Deluxe" model; both types have similar general construction, but the latter has a full-length embossed back, instead of a rolled top edge, and is available with cast-iron end standards). Back and kick plates are a unit, and upholstering, held by groove construction, in a framework, can be removed as a unit. At each side of the back, vertical metal runners fit into grooves to which the back is bolted so as to hold the back in place by friction as well as bolts. Arm rests are locked on. Fabric is attached by metal clips. Springs are flat steel bands integral with rounded seat bucket.

THE CHAIR

In both the Civic and the Pix theatre, the "Aristocrat" model of the Ideal line of auditorium seating is installed, each different, however, in upholstering as well as trim. In the Civic the chairs have spring backs and are covered throughout, including arm rests, in gold mohair, while the metal areas are dark red with gold trim on end standards. The Pix seating has padded backs of rose ribbed mohair and seat cushions covered in tan simulated leather over foamed latex, while chair finish is tan. The Ideal "Aristocrat" has self-raising seats and continuous rolled back plate edges at both sides and top. All Ideal models have die-formed steel back panels and seat pans. Hinges of the "Aristocrat" are of steel ball-bearing type, with bearings fully enclosed and packed in grease at factory.

Heywood-Wakefield "Cameo" chairs, while available in several styles of end standard design, are of the same general streamline pattern. Of steel construction throughout, this model has tubular center standards, beveled seat cushion pan, fully rolled back plate edges, modeled back plate, plastic arm rests, and wire-tied coil spring seats with padding of sisal impregnated with foamed latex, while finish of decorative metal parts is in a composition enamel containing wax and having a plastic base for durability of luster.

Modernization

—A DEMONSTRATION OF TODAY'S CHAIR VALUES

The "Bodiform" chair heads a line of American auditorium seating embracing three other models, each of which has some of the characteristics of the "Bodiform". Accenting the streamline idea of modern industrial design, the "Bodiform" closely relates end standard, back and seat in an integrated pattern, with seat pan and back panel modeled similarly to the end standard. Full fabric protection is afforded by rolled edges of both back plate and seat bucket, seats are self-raising to a three-quarter position, and hinge construction is entirely concealed. Employing arch-spring construction, with foamed latex over the springs, the seat cushion has been redesigned to eliminate all but necessary supporting resistance at the forward edge. Back and seat construction is of steel; end standards are cast-iron.

■ Strikingly convincing of the dominant part seating plays in the overall effect of the architectural-decorative scheme of the auditorium is the recent modernization of the State Roseland theatre on the South Side of Chicago, owned by L. Reinheimer. The reseating was part of a general remodeling project for which the architect was Roy Blass. . . . Although the wall, ceiling and proscenium treatments were modernized, as well as the seating, the new lines created by the modern chair assembly are largely responsible for the transformation, forming by its very mass the predominant element of the auditorium. Chairs are American "Bodiform", with beige standards, turquoise mohair back covering, and tan Cavalon simulated leather on the seats.

IT'S Smooth, Modern and Theatrically Colorful!

EASY TO CLEAN

Millions of theater patrons from coast to coast have got a thrill from the doors, lobby paneling and decorative panels of new and modernized theaters that have been brightened up by Formica. It was a thrill that brought them back and caused them to talk to their friends about the attractiveness of the decoration.

Formica designs are infinitely variable and no two theaters ever need be alike. The material is thoroughly practical, too. It does not crack and chip. It is very easily cleaned with soap and water and does not require lengthy and laborious polishing to keep it attractive. The price is moderate—more than moderate for the effects it produces.

That is why so many leading theater architects—such as John and Drew Eberson, some of whose work is illustrated—have made Formica the most prominent feature of their design of the doors and entrances to recent theaters. Let us send you literature showing color cards and explaining how simply and easily the material is installed by carpenters.

FORMICA FOR BUILDING PURPOSES

The Auditorium Seating Plan as The Basis of Theatre Structure

By BEN SCHLANGER

¶ With this article is begun a series dealing with planning of the motion picture theatre as essentially a problem of the seating arrangement. The series will demonstrate, in the clearest manner possible, in non-technical terms and with explanatory drawings, how to lay out a theatre so as to use the site most efficiently, how to calculate the floor pitches, and arrange the seating for good vision as well as economy of space. Much of the material to be presented is the result of special studies made in recent years by the author, who is well known by readers of Better Theatres for his regular contributions and as an architect specializing in the theatre. The articles will appear in successive issues, and ultimately will provide the readers of Better Theatres with methods which they can themselves apply to their planning problems.

THE APPROACH to the design of the functional form of the motion picture theatre must be considered from two aspects. One, that of attempting to determine the ideal form; and the other, the attempt to adapt a given plot of ground or existing building. Even in the first instance a form may be arrived at which is only theoretically ideal and therefore not useable under usual conditions. The theoretically ideal motion picture theatre form would be attainable only if:

A. People could be educated not to become hysterical and panicky with the least cry of smoke or some other danger signal.

B. Films were shown according to a schedule where everyone entered and left the theatre at the same time.

C. Cost of construction were not a prime consideration.

D. Laws and ordinances regarding theatre construction were more uniform and cognizant of the technical requirements of motion picture theatre design.

And so, when the ideal motion picture theatre form is spoken of, it is with the thought of approaching close to it under the conditions which actually exist. And the first requirement of the ideal form is a plot of ground which is either shaped and large enough to permit a suitable plant to be developed within its dimensions.

Seeking a Practical Plan

The problem of obtaining maximum efficiency is the keynote in seeking an ideal motion picture theatre form. The efficiency which is desirable comes under two headings.

1. To create a design which makes possible a maximum number of desirable seating locations per square foot area and cubic foot volume of structure.

2. A maximum number of seating locations per square foot of motion picture screen surface.

In the first instance, the desire is to keep construction costs, and even maintenance costs, down to a minimum. In the second instance, the attempt to use as small a screen as possible is sought in order to decrease current consumption costs, which total a worthwhile amount in the long run. A needlessly large screen requires more light energy than the smaller screen for equal results in making details sufficiently discernible to the entire audience. It is also desirable to fix as small a screen size as possible because a minimum enlargement from the standard 35-mm. film is desirable to minimize film graininess. When it is realized that the film frame is enlarged approximately 200 times in the average screen picture, it is obvious that the physical structure of the film itself will show up as graininess or a blurred effect with excessive enlargement.

Variation in Viewing

It is both theoretically and actually impossible to design a motion picture theatre form which would render all of the seating locations, or even most of the seating locations, equally desirable. In this respect, it is necessary to establish some practical standards by which certain proportions of seating position qualities could be recommended; as for example, you may arbitrarily decide that at least 80% of the total seating capacity should produce seating locations of a desirable quality, and that the tions of a desirable quality, and that the remaining percentage be distributed into one or more additional seating locations of a lesser, but practical and still tolerable quality. Such a compromise is inevitably due to the economic problem which is presented in almost all instances. (See Figure 1, which shows the basis upon which the desirable seating areas can be determined from data compiled by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers Theatre Design Committee, and research work done by the author. The Desirable Seating Areas are divided into three zones, A, B and C in the order of their desirability.)

Although all of the aforementioned factors seem to be pulling you away from the ideal form, it may be said that it is quite possible to improve considerably the quality of motion picture theatre design as it is commonly observed.

The Balcony Method

In instances where the available plot of ground, or an existing building, is to be adapted to one's needs, which in both cases are not, in their horizontal plan, well enough suited to the proper and most efficient shape of a motion picture theatre structure, it is possible, within certain limits, partially and sometimes wholly, to make adjustments for these handicaps by developing a solution in a vertical treatment, by introducing a properly designed upper seating level. These and related considerations will be developed in more detail as the analysis to be made in this series of articles proceeds.

In most instances where there are laws and ordinances governing the construction of motion picture theatres, those writing the laws were guided chiefly by data received from fires and panics occurring in theatres known to them and close to them. And it may be said that in such territories where there happened to be more damage and lives lost due to these causes, these laws are most stringent. The severity of the laws encountered vary as to the number of exits, number of aisles, number of seats in specified groupings, and the degree of fire-proofing quality. It is interesting to note that the introduction of structures with a high degree of fire-proofing has not lessened the requirements for exits, aisles and seat groupings in most instances; it therefore seems

EVERY time and everywhere that it is installed the Heywood Cameo makes money for the box-office. These swanky chairs give your patrons genuine spring edge comfort over the full area of the seat. The Cameo is distinctive in appearance . . . lends flash and sparkle to your interior. The Cameo is reasonably priced because it is produced in such tremendous volume. And . . . the Cameo is so rich in deep, luxurious comfort that it will make every show seem just so much better to your patrons. May we furnish details?

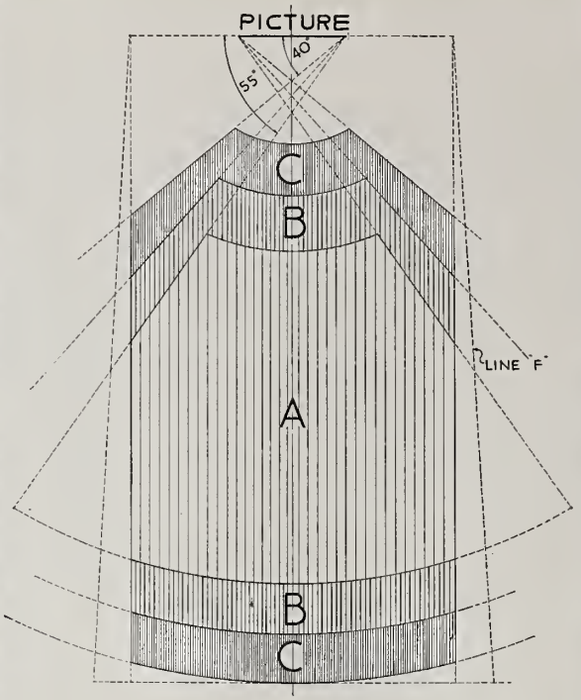

Figure 1—Location of Desirable Seating Positions: The basic proportions of the form from the picture to the last row of seats and from the extreme side seats on one side to the opposite side, is one-to-two. The total seating width is three times the picture width. The seating position area "A" offers the best seating locations. While this "A" area might be further subdivided into different qualities, this area in its entirety has seating positions that are all desirable enough to cause them to be linked into one group. Note that there is a small triangular "A" area outside of the recommended side lines. The use of these triangular areas is not recommended because including them in the basic form would create a physical shape which becomes uneconomical structurally. However, where the additional structural cost can be allotted, the extreme side lines can be flared as shown on line "F". This would result in a worthwhile increase in desirable seating positions and also create non-parallelism of the side walls of the theatre, a feature which is acoustically desirable. Seating area "B" gives seating positions which have proved to be useful, but are not choice locations. Seating area "C" gives seating positions which are not recommended, but are usually resorted to in the average commercial project. Seating area "C" begins at a point away from the picture equal in distance to the width of the picture, and is outlined by a 40° angle subtended to the picture, as shown. Seating area "A" begins at a point distant from the picture equal to a dimension two times the picture width, and is confined to an angle of 55° subtended to the picture, as shown. Seating area "A" terminates at the rear, at a point distant from the picture equal to 5.2 times the width of the picture. The rear line of seating area "C" terminates at a point distant from the picture equal to a distance six times the picture width. Note that the total seating width amounts to three times the total picture width, a figure which agrees with an average found in an extensive survey made by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers for a similar location point.

that it is the element of panic, rather than that of actual fires, which has caused our law writers to be as extreme as they are.

Number of Seats Per Row

It so happens that the limitations set up by the various laws, allowing, for example, no more than twelve or fourteen seats between two aisles, are precisely co-ordinate with the policy of the continuous show in the motion picture theatre, which creates a need of some such limitation. With people approaching seats while others are seated and viewing the picture, it is obvious that a minimum number of seats in a row from one aisle to another is desirable in order to avoid the annoyance to the seated persons as much as possible.

Now this factor, of the number of seats between aisles, has considerable effect in determining the basic plan of a motion picture theatre. It may very well be responsible for what may be termed the American plan, since there have been a great many motion picture theatres built only in Europe in which a larger number of seats appear between aisles—in many cases as many as 25 or 30 seats. Of course, where such an arrangement has been used a greater dimension has been allowed from the back of one seat to the back of the seat behind, to facilitate movement through the longer rows. Such a type of plan has been referred to as a European plan. Such plans have been used in Europe in instances where continuous showings as well as interrupted showings were the policy. We shall examine the latter as well as the other in the course of these articles.

Undesirable Seat Locations

Although as it has been stated before that the theoretically ideal motion picture structure is probably unattainable, it is important to refer back to the requirements of the ideal design because this reference acts as a guide for all compromise studies. The proper viewing of a motion picture is determined by optical, photographic and lighting factors. A strict analysis of the problem will prove that from a theoretical standpoint there is actually only one viewing point in each theatre auditorium from which the picture may be viewed perfectly. That point is at a level with the exact center of the picture, and approximately midway between the picture and the last row of seats. From this ideal viewing point the picture is seen without any distortion of the image, and in the same perspective effect as the scene was viewed from the camera position.

With the exception of the viewing positions in the older, steep balconies, there are no viewing positions in the vertical direction which deviate sufficiently from the ideal point to be considered particularly undesirable. The viewing positions which are at the same time too close and too far to one side of the picture, and the viewing positions too far from the picture, are those which are undesirable.

These undesirable seating positions occur when the width of the total seating is in excess of a width three times the width of the picture; or when the total seating depth from the picture to the last row of seats is more than, or less than, two times the total seating width. These ratios may be used as a general guide; however, further development of these factors will show more definitely the areas where different values of seating quality occur.

It is in motion picture theatre structures housing more than approximately 800 seats that great care must be taken in determining the basic form, because in these instances the ratio between total seating width and the picture width, and the ratio between seating depth and seating width becomes too large.

There are two remedies usually resorted to when these ratios go beyond the advisable limit. Either the picture itself is more greatly enlarged to make the greater seating width and depth more tolerable; or a partially overhanging balcony is introduced. Of the two remedies the latter is preferable, since enlargement of the picture width beyond 20 feet will show film graininess and cause the use of projection lighting equipment of high current consumption.

Modern methods of sightline design make it possible to construct upper levels of seating without adding excessive height to the structure. Some theatre operators object to the use of upper level seating because of the need for extra ushers and of stair climbing. But which costs more—ground rent or ushers? Moreover, stair climbing can be reduced to an unobjectionable degree if the upper level seating arrangement is properly designed.

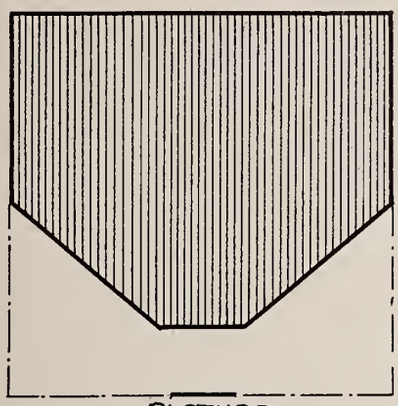

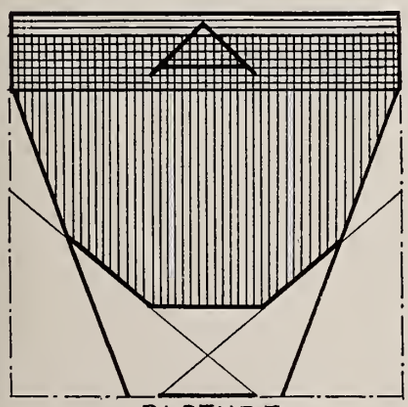

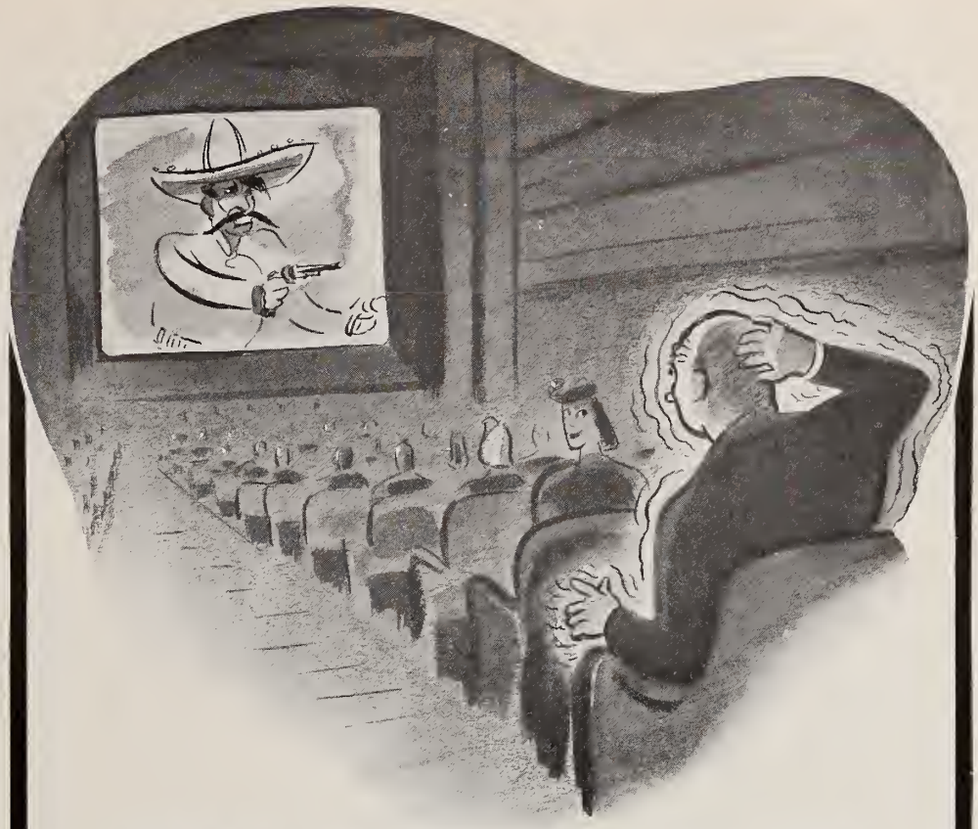

Figure 3—Use of Square Form: This form is the most difficult to adapt. In the corrected form a large triangle is shown cut away on either side of the picture to eliminate poor seating areas. The area "A" indicates the introduction of a small upper level of seating to compensate for the loss on the sides. While this corrected form produces a better proportion of good seating positions, the square shape must still be considered wasteful from a real estate standpoint. The portion of area "A" shaded darkest is the amount of overhang of the upper level of seats over the lower level of seats.

Adaptation of Plot

When it is difficult to obtain a plot of ground or an existing building having a shape similar to the proportions best suited to the requirements of the motion picture theatre, it may well be advisable to force as many seating positions as possible into the desirable seating zones even if the entire shape does not conform to recommended

Fable of the Fidgety Fan

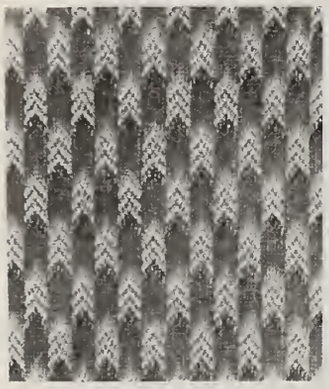
There was once a Very VERY fat man who loved to go to Wild and Wooley Westerns. He'd sit quietly through the news and the Mickey Mouse. But the minute the W. & W. Western came on he'd leap and he'd creep and he'd wriggle and he'd squiggle and he'd bounce and he'd jounce. And at the end of a two-hour show the management would invariably present him with a bill for new seat upholstery.

And he found this expensive!

One day he went to a big, beautiful theater where they showed particularly exciting Wild and Wooley Westerns. He leaped and wriggled and bounced and pounced. And at the end of the show he turned around to inspect the damage. But not one little crack did he see.

"It's magic" said he to the manager. "No", said the Manager. "It's CHASE REDO. We defy you to damage it!"

So the fat man sat through the show twice more. No cracks appeared. And this made him so happy that he moved into the theater bag and baggage and ever afterwards lived a bouncy life on a REDO upholstered seat.



For fat or thin or medium people, REDO is the perfect upholstery for deep-spring construction. And it's surprisingly easy to keep clean if you use only soap and water. Why not write for swatches today?

PATTERNS IN MOHAIR FABRICS

Printed mohair.

■ The reproductions of mohair fabrics above indicate the interesting range of patterns now available in L. C. Chase "Velmo" mohairs. There are about five different types of "Velmo" mohair. That considered most economical is a low-pile, suede-like fabric not unlike the mohair used in automobile upholstering. Another type for auditorium seating is a kid mohair (Molano or Earl quality) available in plain colors, printed, or with antique patterns cut into the pile surface. Jacquard woven patterns are also well suited to seating. Friezes, ribbed or with an all-over pattern, are other good suggestions.

Major Points in Auditorium Chair Fabric Selection

TODAY THE theatre operator has a wider choice of fine upholstering materials for auditorium seating than ever before. The simulated leathers have been greatly improved in recent years, while the soft fabrics are not only better developed for industrial and commercial aplications, but they offer a wider selection of patterns in those grades.

Altogether, the theatre business has become committed to the use of the better grades of seating coverings, as a result of experience and a more studied method of theatre operation, and also through the influence of the leading auditorium chair manufacturers, who persistently discourage the use of the cheaper grades—partly because they themselves frequently have to take the blame for the wearing out of the fabrics before the exhibitor thinks they ought to.

The practical choice of seating fabrics suited to theatres lie among the simulated leathers and the pile fabrics. So at least it is today. Of the simulated leathers, or leatherettes, we have the rubber-base type, and the pyroxylin coated type, the relative characteristics of which are by now pretty well known. The rubber-base type is commonly recommended by the chair manufacturers; however, pyroxylin leatherettes are adapted to auditorium seating, especially in theatres not operating continuously for long hours—provided, however, that they are of the better grade. A cheaper grade is suited only for wall coverings and similar applications. The rubber-base simulated leathers of reputable manufacture contain leather and rubber, and meet tests making them not less adapted, in practical durability, than genuine leather to the needs of auditorium seating, and they are available in a wide range of colors and finishes.

The pile fabrics are mohair and corduroy. Both, in their good grades, are highly durable, while they impart a sense of luxury to the seating installation that only rich, soft fabrics can give. The combination increasingly used—of a soft pile fabric on the back, and simulated leather on the seat cushion—brings elegance to the seating installation at the same time that it moderates the cost and provides the seat cushion with a surface allowing maximum ease of movement. Corduroy, a ribbed cotton fabric, is a pile fabric that is recommended for the seat cushion, being tough in its texture, and resistant to wear due to the ribs.

For the middle and higher classes of theatres, there appears to be no justification of rejection of the good grades of fabrics and selection of the poorer ones because of the difference in price. The difference in cost is not likely to exceed 5%. A saving of that amount by selecting a mediocre fabric can be quickly wiped out by rapid deterioration, requiring replacement relatively soon after installation.

The Seating Plan As the Basis of The Structure

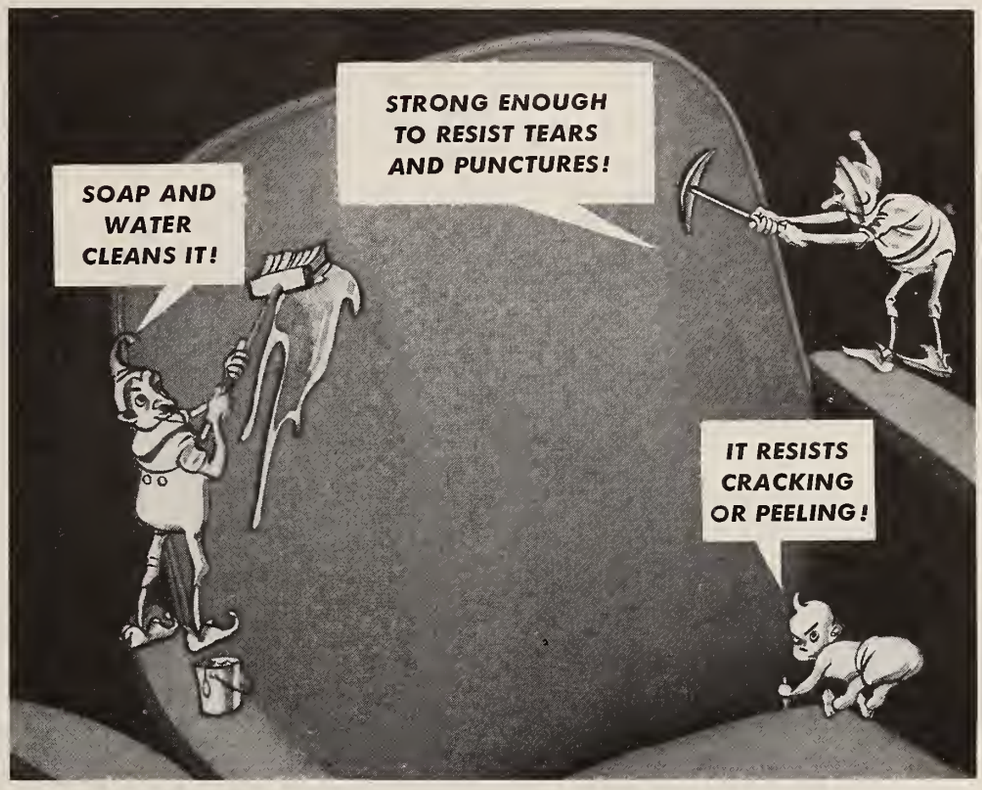
standards. Figures 2 and 3 show two methods of adapting poor shapes to the seating requirements. The extreme oblong shape is more subject to correction without waste because the area cut off from the main form to decrease the length is highly desirable at the entrance end of the structure, for important auxiliary spaces. In the case of the square shape, large areas on either side of the picture have to be wasted because such areas are in a poor position to be of much value in the planning of the theatre.

Site and Ground Conditions

It is usually advantageous for the long dimension to lay at right angles to street frontage. This disposition avoids the placing of exit doors near street noises, avoids complications as to the relative slopes of the street or road grade and the slope of the auditorium floor, and it also eliminates large expenditures on exterior wall surfaces facing a street. If only the front short end of the plot faces a street, exterior architectural development can be concentrated upon this single elevation.

The local ordinances should be consulted before any land or building is acquired for theatre use, particularly in regard to the requirements for exit door openings and interior aisle arrangements. If possible the land should be fairly level from front to rear. A difference in level of approximately 2 feet maximum, in any direction, could be used as a guide. Pitches in the ground greater than this will be more troublesome than helpful in developing the design of the auditorium floor. The reasons for this will be dealt with in a later article on auditorium floor pitches.



The motion picture theatre in the small town or suburban community can more readily be located in an ideally suited plot because a much greater choice of sites exists. The fact that the greater part of the patronage makes use of the automobile to reach the theatre enables the operator to locate the theatre away from the business center where land costs are high and parking space for automobiles is usually scarce. It is therefore the small town or outlying neighborhood theatre which can be more readily planned according to ideal structural form.

This type of theatre should be located so that it can be seen from a main highway rather than being directly on a main highway. If it is on a main highway, it is important that the parking space be accessible from a side or other nearby road less traveled than the main highway, to facilitate the convenient and safe entrance and exit of automobiles.

Planning Early for A Correct Seating Layout

IN MAKING a seating layout, especially for new theatres, there is properly a definite procedure to follow in order to have ultimately a trouble-free chair installation. In designing a theatre, the architect has only a limited amount of space in which to construct the building—space determined by the size of the lot. As a result, in most cases, the architect lays out in his plans the exact size of the theatre—specifying the stage, projection room, exit and aisle passages, etc., and even determining beforehand the correct amount of chairs that will be installed. It is difficult, however, and sometimes complicated, for him to determine exact overall dimensions of each row of chairs, and of each bank of chairs, which is governed by the aisle and exit spaces required by law, and the size and type of chair that will be finally purchased.

In most cases the chairs are purchased two or three weeks before the theatre opening, and many things can and will happen if the owner, architect, chair manufacturer and installation man do not plan and co-operate for an A-1 chair installation. Every reliable chair manufacturer, distributor and competent installation man is always willing and ready to give the benefit of his experience, and each takes pride in having a chair installation that is trouble-free, efficient and attractive.

Where the trouble usually comes in is where there is no planned co-operation and definite data are not available on the chair installation before the theatre is placed under construction. Let's say, the architect has given his final working drawings and specifications to the contractor on the job, who must complete his end of the contract in a predetermined time; this contractor must follow what is shown on the plans and interpret to the best of his ability certain things that are not shown, or merely told him by the superintendent. Now, the plans may show a standee rail on a definite radius or curve, depressed aisles for the carpet, aisle light conduit locations, hearing-aid conduits and "mushroom" vents under the seats. As can be seen, the exact location of all these items will depend entirely on the number of chairs, on their type and size, and to a certain extent on the pitch of the floor.

To determine the exact overall dimensions and locations of all these things is quite a job and requires a lot of complicated layout work before the floor is poured. However, the superintendent, or architect does not know exactly what type or size of chair will be purchased; nor can a chair man be expected to do his layout work if his particular type of chair is not purchased beforehand. As a result there is a lot of guess work and "crossed-fingers" that everything will be all right when the chairs are finally installed shortly before completion of the theatre.

WHAT CAN HAPPEN

For instance, when the standee rail is constructed, it is laid out on a radius or curve sham on the plans. This rail must have openings for the required aisle widths, and if these aisles are depressed for carpeting, each section between the depressed aisles will have a definitely limited space for the chairs to be installed in. In case this rail is laid out on a radius straighter than the radius required for the row of chairs to properly fit the conditions, the end chair will have to be "toed-in," making a somewhat deeper curve than the curve of the rail, otherwise objectional space will be shown between the backs of the chairs and the standee rail up to the center.

Another thing that can happen is extension of the rear end of the aisle standards slightly beyond the depressed aisle, or so close to the edge that when a hole is drilled for fastening the chair a "chunk" of concrete will break away. This bad condition can result along all the edge of the depressed aisles, because once the radius and width of the standee rail is laid out wrong, it will continue to be wrong down to the front row of chairs.

Another objectionable result of laying out a radius of the standee rail without knowing the exact requirements of the chairs, is to be observed where the radius of the depressed area at the front row is not right in relation to the chairs. There may be about 6 inches of concrete in front at the one end of chairs, and about 18 inches of concrete at the other end. This means that some people must rest their feet on the carpet, while others scrape their feet on the concrete. The appearance alone of such a job is very unsatisfactory, to say nothing of the annoyance.

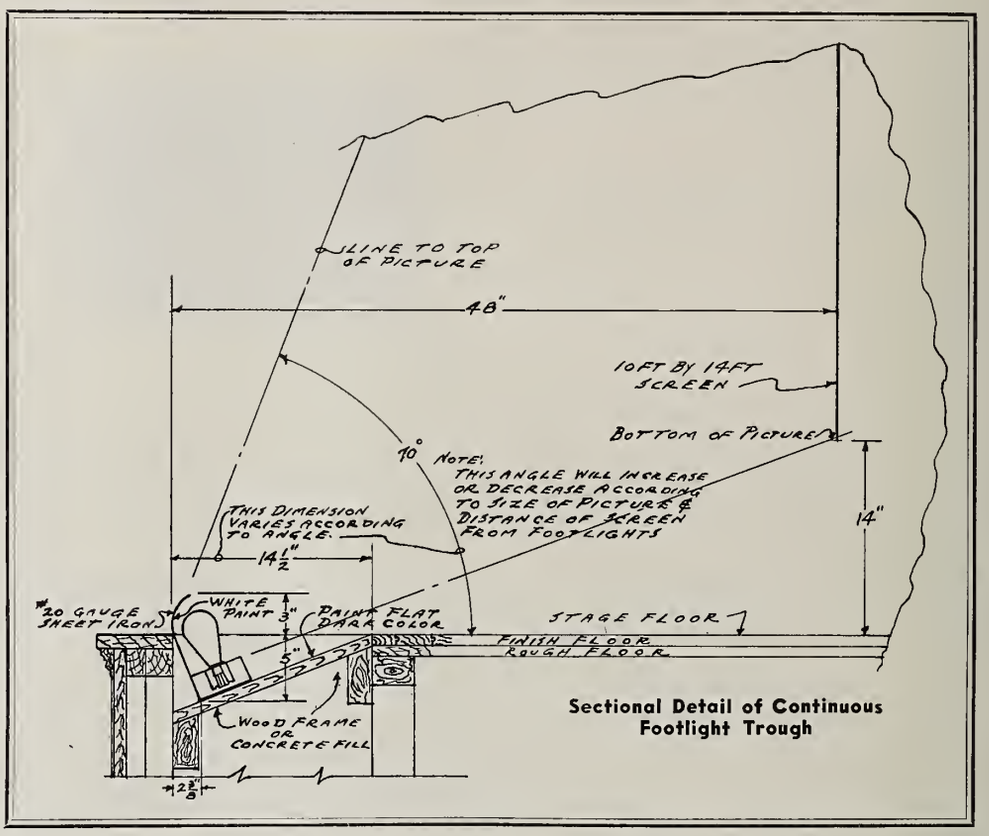
AISLE LIGHT CONDUIT

In locating the aisle light conduits extreme care must be taken in the layout work, since each conduit outlet must fit just right when the chair standards are installed. Each conduit outlet should be figured to come up from the floor an inch inside of the aisle light chair standard, and 2 inches in from the rear end. This will permit the BX attachment to come up straight along the inside of the standard, clearing the rear of the hinge bracket with only a small bend as it enters the aisle light box. When these aisle light conduit outlets are located haphazardly, they may come out directly below the hinge bracket, necessitating a very sharp bend around it with the BX connection and causing interference with the patron where it loops around to the box. In other cases the conduit might come up directly under the center of the seat and near the front, where a patron will tear his clothes every time he stands up to permit passage, or kick into it when he moves in or out of his seat. It's very hard to remedy this condition once the floor is laid, even by bending the conduit or going to the trouble of chipping away the concrete.

HEARING AID CONDUIT



These precautions should also be taken in laying out conduits for hearing aids. When it comes to determine the exact location of the "mushroom" floor vents particular care must be paid that they run on the same radius as the row of chairs, otherwise they will come up in the passage space between the rows of chairs. The exact size of each chair in the particular row where the vents are to be installed, must be known, as they might come up directly where the standards are to be fastened. In some installations the chair men try to correct this by shifting the chairs backward or forward, leaving a ragged, bulging line in the row of backs, also a narrow passage space at that point. However, when the floor vents come up from the floor where the center standards are to fastened, the only thing left is to chip out the vent pipe sleeve, or to cut away part of the standard, and either of these methods would be extremely bad.

It thus can be readily seen that a chair layout, to be 100% workable from all angles, must be carefully planned, laid out and minutely followed through on the job. It is not just a question of purchasing chairs and "throwing" them into the theatre, but one of correct preliminary planning—and most of all, co-operation between all parties concerned before and during the construction of the theatre.

Simple Footlight System

TO THIS department was recently referred an inquiry from an exhibitor seeking a practical plan for footlights in a small theatre presenting motion pictures only. The footlights were desired as means of enlivening the stage, or screen end of the auditorium during non-projection periods.

A simple footlight system for such a purpose may be of quite general interest, so a suitable scheme is presented in these columns, indicated in a schematic diagram, and described as follows:

Sectional Detail of Continuous Footlight Trough

For this system the lamps are placed in one continuous strip, using colored lamps, without roundels or color hoods. The lamps are spaced on 4-inch centers, with twelve lamps per circuit, making a total of 36 lamps installed alternately as to color. This type of footlight can be made of about 20-gauge sheet iron with No. 12 slow-burning asbestos-covered wire having a junction, or splice, box on one end of the trough. The metal directly behind the lamps should have proper shape, or contour, for desired direction of light, and be painted gloss white. The sloping area directly in front of the trough should be painted a flat dark color to avoid any reflections of light to the audience. The 4-inch spacing of outlets in the trough will permit the use of lamps from 40 to about 75 watts each. The length of the footlight trough, using 3 circuits for a total of 36 lamps on 4-inch centers, will be 12 feet, 8 inches. The proper shape and angle of the trough is shown on the sketch in order to meet normal requirements.

Installing Wall Fabrics

WHEN CONTEMPLATING the redecorating of the theatre auditorium, the theatre owner should bear in mind many things besides just purchasing the material and having it applied to the walls. One of the most important of these things is the dependability of the contractor. A company that is thoroughly reliable is likely to be just a little bit higher in its bid than a competitor who does business "at a price." It can be readily seen from whom the theatre owner can expect a good job for his money, and from whom he will get the reply, "Sorry, you got just what you paid for," after the job is completed.

There are always ways and means of doing the same job differently. One is to have the job done in a substantial, per-mament way that will add to the decorative value of the theatre; the other is to have it done in a slipshod, scrambled manner that will be a constant eye-sore to the owner and the theatre patronage as long as it lasts.

As an example, let's take a job where drapery material of damask or other fabric is to be applied on wall panels, perhaps with acoustical material behind. A first-class contractor will start his work in a clean-cut systematic manner with the proper amount and kind of lumber and drapery material delivered to the site, and arrangements made for clear working and walking space, instead of having the place littered with material. Also, at the end of his working day all scattered rubbish, lumber, etc., will be properly cleaned up and the floor left "broom clean" for the next day's work.

FITTING WOOD STRIPS

Before installing the wood nailing strips for tacking the drape material into, care should be taken that only first grade kiln-dried wood is used, having reasonably straight edges, otherwise an uneven line will result, especially at the corners of pilasters, which will be plainly noticed after the drapery material is in place.

At the corners of pilasters or piers, a carpenter's level should be used for "plumbing" the strips up and down, since the pilasters and walls are not always absolutely straight in a vertical direction. These nailing strips should be roughly 1x3 inches in order to give ample and perfectly level tacking space for the material. Odd-sized strips—say ½ x 2 inches—and very short lengths should never be used in conjunction with the 1x3-inch strips, as uneven lines will surely show, making it very difficult to finish the material in a first-class manner. Also, at the corners are continuous 1x3-inch strips with short blocks fastened to the side of the pilasters; here two 1x3-inch strips, nailed together, should be used so as to make a corner 3 inches on each side. This will mean using an extra strip of wood the entire height of each corner of the pilaster, but it will be easier to fasten, to plumb for straightness up and down, and to effect a rigid base for tacking the material on either side of the corner.

Making the corner wood strips in this manner will also prevent them from warping later on, as would be the case if short strips of wood are fastened for plumbing up and down, say, every 4 or 5 feet, to the pilaster and to the continuous 1x3-inch strip.

FASTENING WOOD STRIPS

The space between the short "blocks" are bound to "belly" in or out, as the case may be, after the installation. In nailing these wood strips to hard masonry walls only steel-cut nails should be used, making sure that enough are used on each strip for a rigid fastening. Do not use ordinary wire-cut nails since in most cases they bend easily when driven into a hard wall and only give a temporary, weak fastening of

PLANNING SERVICE

¶ Better Theatres is glad to answer the questions of exhibitors theatre planning.

¶ Better Theatres' Service Department annually deals with hundreds of inquiries from readers regarding planning problems, equipment and furnishings, operating methods and finance, maintenance, etc.

¶ This is strictly a service to readers for which there is no charge. Architects, however, sometimes make inquiry, or submit plans for criticism, without naming the client; and, when the architect is not a subscriber, it is requested that his client be named.

¶ In order that questions may be dealt with effectively, they should be specific, and all conditions bearing upon them should be clearly given. Often a rough sketch, with dimensions plainly indicated, is of help.

¶ It is of course to be understood that this service is in no way intended to supplant that of a theatre architect. Better Theatres cannot supply working plans, design sketches, etc., which must be procured from a licensed architect.

¶ Although Better Theatres' Service Department has leading specialists regularly available for consultation when and as an inquiry may advise this, all inquiries are answered by this department and should be addressed to it, as follows:

the wood strips, which then work loose after the fabric is stretched upon them and some times after the job is completed.

When hollow tile or block walls are encountered, toggle-bolts should be used; or when only a 2-inch wire lath and solid cement plaster wall is found, through-bolts with nuts and washers on the other side should be installed for fastening these strips.

To say that these strips carry no load and can be fastened "any old way" is foolish; they do bear a strain when the drape material is stretched upon them, especially when heavy acoustical material is also used. All wood strips, regardless where they are applied on the walls, should be installed in a safe and permanent manner and should always be "plumb" in, up and down, and level horizontally, even if they cannot be seen after the material is tacked over them.

LAYING ACOUSTIC MATS

Particular care must be taken in installing wood strips where acoustic material is to be fastened to them. With acoustic material made up in mats, each 2x8 feet, the 1x3-inch wood strips must be fastened to the wall on exactly 2-foot centers in order to have each mat butt evenly and reasonably tight to each other. When the strips are not carefully spaced or "plumbed" up and down, the mats will work out, overlapping one another in many places and completely missing the strip underneath.

In such cases, a careless workman, to correct this evil, will try to push the acoustic material in the mat from the edge toward the middle in order to have an even nailing line at the joint. What he does not know is that the material thus pushed away from the edge will "belly" up in another place and will be seen. Careless installation of strips and mats will also leave large spaces at the joints, which is bound to cut down considerably the absorption efficiency of the acoustic material.

Quite often the exhibitor does not find out the types of acoustical material that are permitted by the local fire and building code authorities. Most cities require "chicken-wire" on one side and heavy gauge wire lath on the other side of such materials as rock wool.

The assembling, nailing together, or splicing of the wood strips on top of the backs of the auditorium chairs should neved be permitted, since the chair backs can be marred. It is surprising how many times carless workmen will attempt to do just this thing, thinking that because the strips are light no harm can result.

Another precaution to be taken is to see that the acoustic mats are not stored or laid in place where moisture can reach them. When these mats are installed on walls with some dampness in them, they will act as a sponge in sucking fine particles of dust and dirt on the drape material after it is installed. Also, drape material installed over any damp area will have an abnormal stretch or will wrinkle later on.

In tacking the drape material on the wood strips, care should be taken that the design on the drapes runs level horizontally, and "plumb" up and down in each panel, also where it joins abruptly the rear wall panel. Sometimes the workmen judge the run of the pattern with their eye and find, after the material is cut and tacked on the panel, that it runs off in many places. A lot of trouble can be avoided by using a plumb-line for straight up-and-down checking, and a horizontal level line, at the start of each panel installation—this will take more time, but it will give assurance that the cloth in each panel and the run of the design will be correct after installation.

SOIL AND HAZARD GUARDS

In installing wall fabric extreme care must be taken that the cloth does not touch —even just miss—any steam, water or electric wiring pipe. As is well known, these pipes will condense moisture on the outside, and after the material is applied over them, a heavy dark streak will be noticed after the installation because the moisture will tend to draw dust to it and leave a deposit on the surface. In case where pipes must remain, due to structural limitations, insulating material should be applied over them to prevent "sweating," and the drape material be extended a little from the wall to clear them. However, before doing this, a check should be made with local code regulations, as in some cities just so many inches are permitted between the wall and the cloth. Also, it is standard practice now that all draperies be flame-proofed, and a certificate must be obtained from the local authorities that the material being used has their approval and that the flame-proofing is on their record.

Incidentally, don't allow the workmen to stretch and tack the cloth only about half-way on the panel, then leave it that way over night or for several days. The material will absorb moisture, especially if it is damp outside, and when the unfinished portion is stretched and tacked on to the nailing strips, abnormal stretching and wrinkling will result all over the panel. This condition will persist in spite of occasional re-tacking and re-stretching where needed, until the cloth reaches its normal stretching point. In a case like this, the best thing to do is to start "from scratch," as it were, and to take off the entire cloth and tack and stretch it carefully over the panel. Half-measures will only result in a job half-done.

CURTAIN CONTROL PROVISIONS

In the next issue John J. Sefing will deal comprehensively with the requirements, structurally and mechanically, for efficient and assured operation of curtain control equipment, in a discussion suggested by troubles actually encountered.

FRONT WALL STRUCTURE

TO CONSIDER further the acoustical design and treatment of the front portion of the motion picture theatre: It is possible, through proper shaping of surfaces and control of structural height, to avoid troublesome reverberations within area. The factors of design which are helpful are: (1) limitation of ceiling height at the front of the auditorium; (2) proper shaping of the ceiling areas directly forward of the screen; and (3) correct forming of the front wall surfaces on each side.

Fixing Ceiling Height

In connection with ceiling height, it is very desirable to establish the architectural line at a point not greater than 4 feet above the upper fringe of the light beam projected to the screen. Naturally, the ceiling should not be brought down too low, since it could become a source of disturbing light reflections and possibly interfere with projection of the picture. It might also be too low from an acoustical standpoint, causing first reflections of sound to be directed too quickly into audience area at front.

On the basis of past experience, the suggested maximum height of 4 feet above the upper fringe of the light beam appears adequate from the design viewpoint in most cases. Heights greater than this seem to increase structural volume unnecessarily and certainly contribute to longer periods of reverberation.

When limiting ceiling height at the front, it is very advantageous, acoustically, to splay the ceiling within this section, or to break it up with some other desirable form of irregularity. This can be done in a number of ways, depending upon the architectural effect desired.

Splayed Wall Design

The writer has found that a series of gradually rising splays, with a series of small irregularities imposed upon them, are very efficient as an acoustical feature of design. These surfaces can, at the same time, be developed to give a pleasing architectural effect. The fundamental splays are tilted in such a way that major reflections are directed toward the rear, to points where the path difference between these reflections and the direct sound will be neither too short nor too long. The smaller irregularities imposed on the main splays are designed in such a way as to disperse the high frequency reflections quickly, so that these reflections cannot become objectionable in any part of the auditorium.

Selling the Show At Point of Sale— The Theatre Itself

By A-MIKE VOGEL
Chairman Managers' Round Table
MOTION PICTURE HERALD

PHOTOS OF three different marquee copy displays at the New York Roxy were reproduced recently in Managers Round Table section of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The layouts were especially significant in that they were changed three times in two days. The first copy, on a Wednesday morning, called attention to the preview showing that night. The second display, made the same night, advertised the next day's opening, while the third, put up Friday morning, quoted the newspaper critics.

Thus, and in other ways, our leading theatres throughout the land are increasingly availing themselves of the new attraction display equipment to transform what has previously been static and monotonous announcements into dynamic sales promotion at point-of-sale.

Smart theatremen build where foot traffic is thickest. Say what you will about the steady clientele trade, to which all exhibitors aspire, nevertheless there is usually a need of either outright transient trade or at least "drop-in" business. The theatreman's job is an easier one if first the attraction strikes the attention of the drop-in before he arrives at the theatre. This obviously is to be done by the appeal of genuine marquee selling copy readably and fetchingly arranged with the same ingenuity exercised by the manager when he devotes himself to his other forms of advertising.

There is a distinct purpose in making frequent changes of marquee copy, even for the same program. Flexibility of space and lettering now provided allows the theatreman plenty of room to spread himself. Thus, his whooping up of "preview" or "advance" intrigues the eye of the passerby, either as a follow-up of the newspaper advertising, with real advertising sock to burn the message into the boxoffice consciousness of the observer.

When the first layout has exhausted its ticket-selling possibilities, the next change can strike a new note for further selling, as can following changes of copy and layout. And the passerby who is not reached by one change of copy, may well succumb to another—and the cumulative force of the series is to be reckoned with as well.

A LINE O' LAW OR TWO

What Equipment Is a Fixture?

By RUDOLPH ALLEN
Member New York Bar

THE lawbooks are filled with cases involving fixtures. The courts have enacted numerous laws pertaining to the rights on this subject. Yet, notwithstanding the attempt to clarify the issues, there still remains constant litigation because of the technical questions which arise out of this most difficult problem.

A fixture is an article which started out as a chattel —that is to say, it belonged to the class termed by law as personal property, but which by being fixed to the realty, became accessory to, and parcel of it.

Under our original basic law, known as "Common Law," it was a simple matter to determine whether or not a piece of personal property became a fixture. There were hundreds of cases to choose from, and from this multitudinous array of legal dogma, there was evolved a simple and definite measuring gauge.

The rule is now definitely established that fixtures cease to be personal property when they are firmly attached to the real estate in such a way that they cannot be removed without destroying or causing material injury to the realty, and in addition thereto, when they are adapted to the use of the realty.

Supplementing this general rule, there of course always remains an important question: "What is the intention of the parties?" It must be obvious that two parties may contract with each other in any way they see fit, and designate any particular piece of personal property in any manner they so desire. Thus, even though what may appear to be a fixture and be annexed to the realty, definitely and immeasurably may still be designated in the contract as personal property, and therefore removable at any time.

Although it was the tendency of the courts in the early cases to designate a fixture as any article of personal property which had the slightest semblance of permanency, the rule now has been established that the basic method and test in determining the rights of the parties must be reached by inquiring as to what was the mature intention of the parties.

The early cases involving fixtures arose as between landlord and tenant. Thus when a tenant would take a five-year lease, he would improve the property by annexing a considerable number of personal articles. When his lease expired, he naturally desired to remove these items; then difficulties arose, since both parties would claim ownership—the landlord, by reason of annexation; the tenant, contending that the articles continued to remain personal property.

Within the last 15 years, with the advent of installment buying, there arose the additional problem as between the mortgagor (say, a store), the mortgagee and the landlord. So, for example, a tenant would buy certain articles of personal property subject to a mortgage. The tenant would break his lease, and the landlord, in an effort to moderate his loss, would seize the articles left by the tenant, and there usually ensued a bitter battle between the mortgagor, or dealer, and the landlord.

One of the interesting questions involving fixtures arose in connection with the installation of theatre chairs. Thus, in the case of Gould vs. Springer, 206 N. Y. 641, it was held that theatre chairs conforming to the shape and plan of a theatre, fastened to the floor, and used only for the purpose of seating an audience, constituted fixtures and therefore were not removable.

In a recent case, it was held that pews and benches were personal property, not fixtures (Diamond vs. Art Contracting Co., 262 Supp. 471).

There is in existence today a Uniform Conditional Sales Law which provides that a mortgagee may protect himself, as against the owner of the property, by filing his conditional sales contract. By doing so, he serves notice upon the world that the property covered by the mortgage constitutes personal property and not fixtures. Should he fail, however, to record such mortgage, he loses the right to remove the personal property in the event of default by the mortgagor.

It was so held in the case of Albanese, 44 Fed. 2nd 602, in which case the mortgagee did not record his mortgage, and when he attempted to remove his theatre chairs, he was unable to do so, the court holding that theatre chairs are fixtures and part of the real property.

While Better Theatres cannot perform the service of legal counsel, inquiries from readers are invited and will be answered as fully as permissible.

. . . A DEPARTMENT DEVOTED TO CANDY AND POPCORN SALES AND VENDING OF ALL KINDS FOR EXTRA THEATRE INCOME

There's More Than One Way To Make Refreshments Pay

HAVING ACCEPTED the idea of providing patrons refreshments, the motion picture theatre business is heartily embracing it, as both a service and a source of extra income, and resulting means of making refreshments conveniently and appropriately available are accordingly growing in variety. Pictured in these columns are a number of such services observed recently among theatres.

Candy and popcorn, of course, predominate among the kinds of refreshments offered, but an interesting addition to the list is the so-called "Nab Diner" installed by Wilbur M. Peterson in his Orpheum theatre at Somerville, Mass. This equipment is a vending machine which dispenses 5c packs of cookie and cracker confections —the widely advertised "Nabs" manufactured by the National Biscuit Company. A machine for vending "Nabs" automatically is of recent development by the Trimount Coin Machine Company of Boston.

Decoratively modeled in modern design, the "Nab Diner" displays five varieties of the confections, which include many of the kinds of regularly packaged National confections long sold in food stores and therefore well known to the American public. The machine, which holds a total of 115 packs, accommodates two columns of each type, with dispensing from one to the other column alternately so that the packs put in first are sold first. The pack drops into a tray that is closed for cleanliness, the tray being pulled out to effect delivery. The display and vending unit sets on a pedestal of matching design for floor installation, or it may be placed on a candy counter. The vending unit itself is approximately 28 inches high, 20 inches wide, and 9 inches deep. Both units are finished in baked enamel in two colors.

New vender for dispensing cracker packs, as recently installed in the Orpheum theatre, Somerville, Mass., operated by Wilbur M. Peterson.

Attendant opening console-type candy display developed for Fox West Coast Theatres.

For handling candy sales by the counter-and-attendant method, perhaps the most elaborate type of special display equipment, as distinguished from display cases available from regular lines, is that designed for Fox West Coast Theatres, the vending department of which is headed by William Lyris. Done in richly grained cabinet woods, it may be said to be of console design, and it is air-conditioned.

tion, it reveals chromium finish and mirrors reflecting its contents. It is brilliantly illuminated by flourescent lamps. It has capacity for 42 boxes of candy bars, and twenty boxes of chewing gum, mints and life-savers, plus racks for packaged peanuts or other confections.

In the lower portion of the case is a Westinghouse refrigerating system. It consists of a ½-h.p. hermetically sealed compressor, synchronized with condenser, cooling coils and blower fans. The conditioned air is directed through a series of ducts synchronized with each display compartment and fanned to flow constantly over each row of candy. The compressor housing is baffled and insulated for quiet operation.

Twenty compartments are provided in the uppermost part of the case are reserved for small merchandise not requiring refrigeration. A roll top automatically locks the top section.

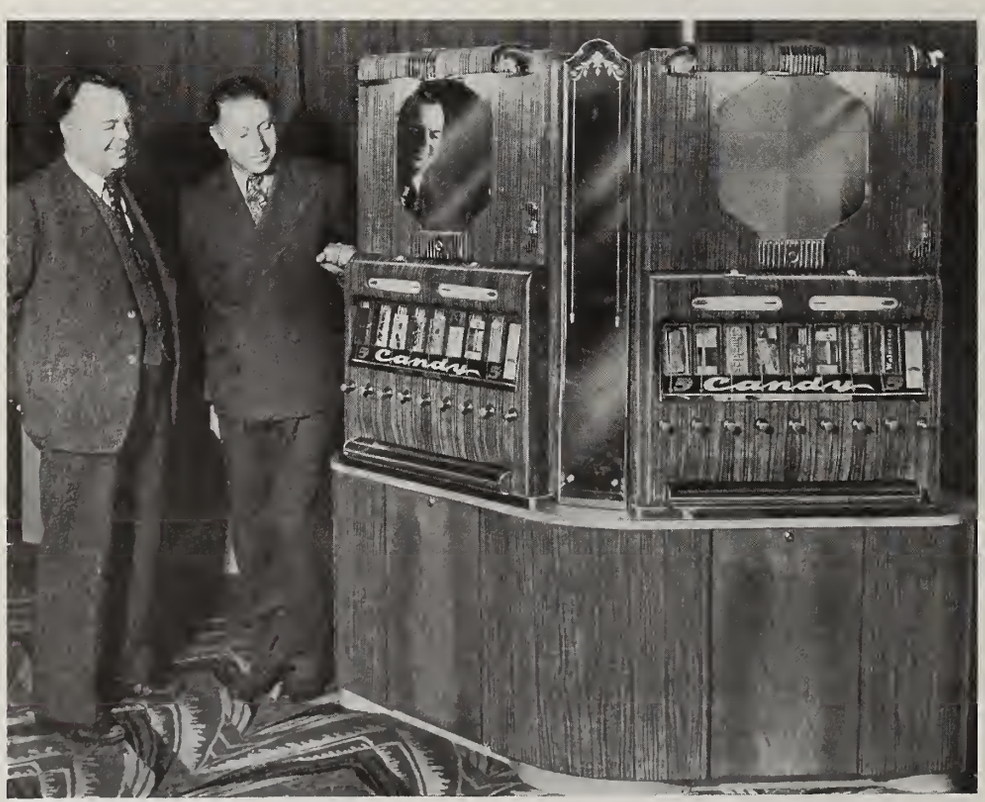
cash drawer that automatically locks and unlocks during operations, and it may be positively locked while not in use.

The center section is fitted with three shelf compartments. It rolls outward to a position when in use, extending beyond the extremities of the structure. The wing units swing to any outward position, and are also fitted with three shelf compartments, as is the center section. The lights of the mirror-lined center and wing sections are automatically lighted when the case is opened. This unique cabinet, manufactured by the Klassen Company of Los Angeles, is mounted on ball-bearing, rubber-tired casters for easy mobility.

An interesting built-in refreshment booth recently installed is that in the Rivoli theatre, Muncie, Ind., which is operated by Leonard Sowar and was designed by the F & Y Building Service of Columbus, Ohio, located just inside the entrance, in the lobby, the booth combines a counter with a built-in display case in the base, and there is also a small display case at one side above the counter. Inside the booth is space for a popcorn machine, which may be seen through a plate glass window immediately upon entering. The booth is constructed of walnut and birch veneers, and can be closed up by a roll shutter.

A booth effect is obtained in Frisina Amusement Company's new Varsity theatre in Decatur, Ill., by placing an L-shaped specially built wood-veneer counter and candy display case between the lobby doors to the foyer, with a Manley popcorn machine incorporated in the layout.



For automatic candy vending the double- and triple-unit vender manufactured by the Stoner Corporation of Chicago, has been designed to give an especially wide selection of brands for installations where sales are of good volume, by providing large capacity in a single piece of equipment of attractive design, thus eliminating the crude effect of an assortment of small venders. An accompanying picture of the St. Johns theatre in Portland, Ore., shows a two-unit "Univendor" in a prominent foyer location, for handling all candy sales in this house.

Built-in candy and popcorn booth in the lobby of the Rivoli, Muncie, Ind.

An interesting variation of the arrangement for selling refreshments by the attendant method was recently devised in the remodeling of the RKO Trent theatre in Trenton, N. J. Open shelves have been built into the wall of the foyer, near the entrance doors, and sales can be handled conveniently by doorman or an usher as well as by a sales girl.

For small confectionery rooms, or shops, off a lobby, offering a relatively complete refreshment service (appealing to pedestrian trade as well as that of theatre patrons), a fountain-candy unit like the "Konfecto" equipment illustrated provides a variety of refreshments with minimum sales personnel and floor space. Manufactured by the Felgreen Company of St. Louis, the fountain has mechanical refrigeration, and the general construction of the entire unit is steel.

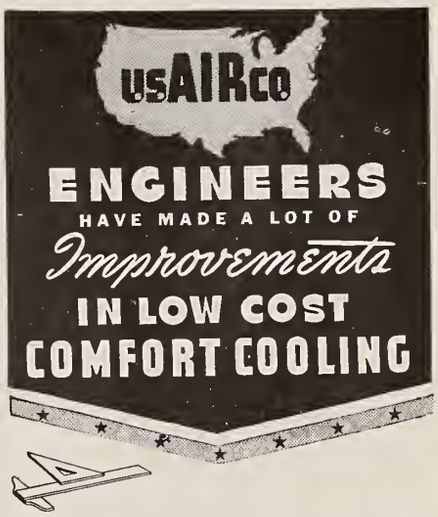
An Ice-Actuated Cooling System Suited to Theatres

• The second of two articles on the possibility of air-conditioning some theatres in summer with ice, using the same coils for the winter heating period

By CARL F. BOESTER

CARL F. BOESTER

MANY THEATRE men have expressed a desire for a simple means of determining how much ice they might be expected to use during a cooling season in the cooling of their theatres, and we are therefore suggesting the following means.



Let's take, for example, a six hundred seat theatre. As we have advised in previous articles, the refrigeration capacity should be based, for purposes of practical calculation, on fifteen persons per ton of refrigeration required. If this is the case, then the cooling load for our example is 40 tons. Now if our theatre were to be cooled for 24 hours at a maximum load, we would require 40 tons of ice; but such is not the case if our theatre operates, say, from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 11 o'clock at night, which is nine hours, or nine-twenty-fourths of forty, so that the ice consumption would be 15 tons.

That, however, is still under maximum conditions of full occupancy of the theatre and very high outside temperature conditions. There is, therefore, a usage or qualifying load factor, which experience proves to be, on the average, about 60%. So it would require nine tons of ice per day, or roughly one ton per hour to keep a theatre of this size cool.

A properly designed ice-actuated cooling system, however, with ice as the source of refrigeration, can, as we explained last month, take advantage of the temperature rise in the melting ice water before it is wasted, which means that a ton of ice will give 1¼ tons of refrigerating effect; therefore, for our example, we would need to buy from the local ice company only about 7 tons of ice.

Now, as we have just illustrated, there are a number of qualifying factors. It has been assumed here that the theatre operates for a matinee and evening performance which is continuous from 2 until 11 o'clock. This same sized theatre, for example, if operating from 7 to 11 (night only) would have roughly an ice consumption of half this amount, or at most about 4 tons—a few pounds of ice would be required to offset the stored heat in the walls and furnishings of the auditorium.

If you can buy ice for from three to four dollars a ton—and there is no reason why you shouldn't get it for this figure if your ice company has a halfway efficient manufacturing plant or is willing to furnish you white ice or marginal ice—low-cost cooling can be accomplished. You are probably now wondering how this stacks up in operating cost with mechanical refrigeration. It has been the author's personal experience that when gross operating costs of a mechanical refrigeration plant for air-condi-

To date there are over 8,000 USAirCo theatre installations. Such a record brings justifiable pride in having attained the industry's No. 1 position in theatre cooling. But its real significance lies in the benefits to be derived by the exhibitor from the wide and varied experience it represents.

Many of these thousands of installations presented new and unusual problems to challenge the skill and ingenuity of USAirCo engineers. Their solution upset many an apple-cart of old-time air conditioning theory. New, more practical, more economical methods had to be devised. As a result, scores of improvements have been perfected by USAirCo engineers which have brought Kooler-aire to new peaks of efficiency and costs down to the lowest level in years.

You, like every other smart operator, no longer question the need for comfort-providing, business-building theatre cooling. But you are concerned over what type of system will do the job best at the least cost. Equally important: Who makes it? Who installs it? Who stands back of it?

So, before you invest in comfort cooling equipment, get the answers to these important questions. Learn what is new in theatre air conditioning. Get all the facts about the different types of cooling—blower, evaporative, cold water, refrigerative—all of which are made by USAirCo.

Find out how little Kooler-aire costs—how easy it is to buy—why the theatre industry has for 17 years made USAirCo its first choice.

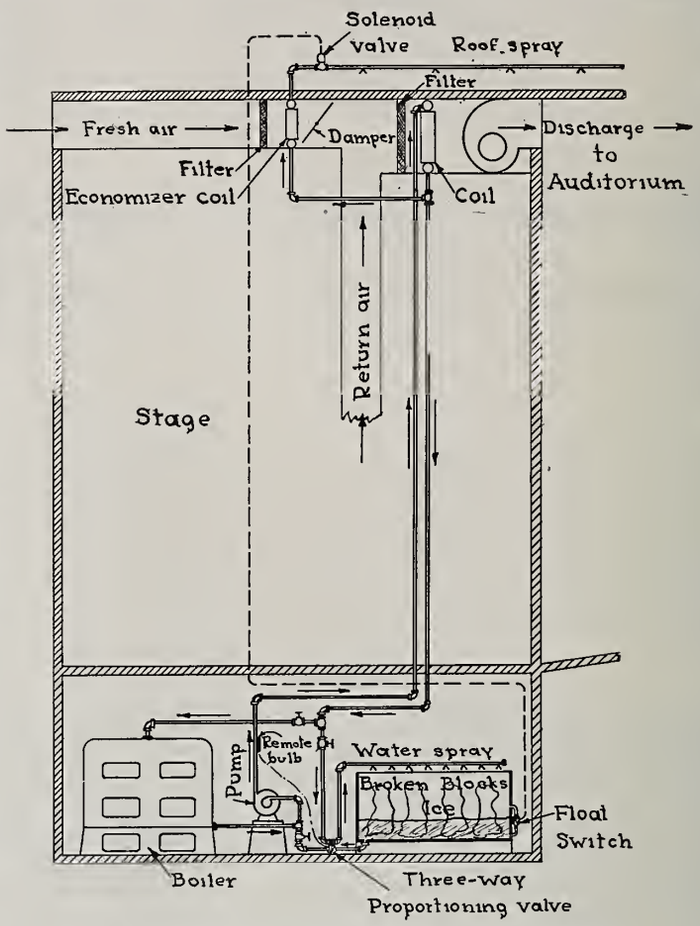
tioning are properly checked, you cannot produce the equivalent of refrigeration effect for anything less than the above cost per ton, and not infrequently the cost per ton of refrigerating effect is much higher



Figuring the Cost

A ton of refrigeration is the heat absorbed in the melting of one ton of ice, on an average, 120 days per season. So in arriving at your cost, take your lowest bid for a mechanical refrigeration system and then ask for estimates for power consumed in kilowatt hours and gallons of water per 120-day season. Add to this cost 20% of the initial cost as an annual cost, and you will get your total summer cooling bill.

In the case of ice consumption you can use the above method of computing the amount of ice you would consume. To this would have to be added the fixed charges on the first cost for your ice system, which is somewhat lower than the mechanical refrigeration system, so that there is a substantial saving on this one annual cost item. Your ice cost added to this will give you your total cost for the season, then the only thing left to do is to compare the two and make your decision as to which is the best for your particular application.

The ice tank is charged with broken blocks of ice, and approximately 1 foot of water is carried in the bottom of the ice tank. The chilled ice water is withdrawn from the bottom of the tank through a three-way proportioning valve, which takes a certain quantity of the 32° water being withdrawn from the bottom of the ice tank, and mixes it with a quantity of the 55° water returning from the cooling coils, to give a constant temperature water of 45° supplied to the pump, which in turn supplies it to the cooling coil of the air-conditioning unit. . . . The three-way proportioning valve is of the self-contained type, and the remote bulb of the valve is placed in the discharge line of the pump to make sure that 45° water—or, for that matter, whatever degree water is required—is supplied to the conditioning unit. The balance of the return water from the cooling coils is delivered through a bank of sprays, so that the water flows over the broken ice. Naturally, as ice is melted, there is an increasing quantity of water that must be wasted in order that low-temperature ice water be maintained in the bottom of the ice bunker. . . . As the water level rises in the ice tank as a result of the melting of the ice, a float switch is actuated, which controls a solenoid, or magnet, valve. This permits the diversion of some of the water leaving the coils in the air-conditioning unit to and through an economizer coil in the fresh-air inlet of the air-conditioning unit. Since the water leaves the coil of the conditioning unit at about 55° in temperature, it is warmed up from this temperature some twenty to twenty-five degrees in the economizer coil, and is then wasted to the roof of the theatre. In this process, the hot outside air is reduced in temperature and thereby reduces the load on the cooling coil, which in turn reduces the amount of ice consumed. . . . In winter, by closing the valve to the ice tank, the rest of the equipment can provide winter air-conditioning by circulating water through a heating boiler, and hot water is circulated to the coil in the conditioning unit. Water doesn't circulate through the economizer coil in winter operation.

ICE ACTUATED COOLING SYSTEM FOR THEATRES

which is the refrigeration effect of the absorbing of 288,000 Btu's (heat units) of heat from the space which is being conditioned. In figuring the cost of a mechanical refrigeration system you must have fixed charges of 15% as a very minimum on your initial investment. This includes depreciation and the setting aside of funds with which to replace this equipment when it is worn out. Then you have insurance and taxes, maintenance costs and repairs, which will average an additional 5% on the initial investment; and to this must be added your costs for electric power and for water. These four items should then give you the gross cost per ton, and this is determined by dividing the total cost by the number of cooling days, which is usually,

The Cooling Plant

Illustrated in Figure 1, is a schematic drawing of a typical hook-up of ice tank, circulating pump, hot water heating boiler, cabinet type conditioning unit (which contains fan, coils and filters), and the economizing coil in the fresh air inlet to the conditioning unit. As you will note, the excess water as the result of melting ice is passed into the fresh air coil and then wasted on the roof of the theatre. This gives you the last word in economy and utilization of refrigeration energy available

As you will further note, the same fan, coil, and filter assembly serves to provide winter heating and the same pump circulates water through the heating boiler to this unit, so that you can have complete year around conditioning.

The following suggestion is made to those who like to build home-made equipment or provide at least partial relief. This is accomplished by building the apparatus as shown in Fig. 2, which consists of an odd-shaped tank as shown with a group of several automobile radiators placed as illustrated, air being pulled in through these coils by a fan, which discharges air to the theatre. This particular type of unit requires no pump, for cold water settles down to the bottom of the tank. This cold water then moves along the pipe marked to the bottom of the radiator sections, and as air passes over the radiator sections the water is warmed by the air, and the air in turn is cooled by the radiator sections. Since warm water rises and cold water settles, the warm water in the coil moves upward into the tank and is replaced by cooling water (this is known as gravity circulation, or thermo-syphon circulation).

By building a unit like this and insulating it well, placing it backstage or somewhere where it can be easily iced, low-cost cooling can be accomplished. We would suggest that you avail yourself of the help of a local contractor in sizing such an arrangement, for the capacity of various used radiator sections vary, and he can probably get the dope for you. Under this particular arrangement no pump is required and all you have to do is to fill the tank and start your fan. When the tank is recharged with ice you simply have to open a valve and drain the water out of it to make room for the ice.

There is one thing that we very definitely want to caution the readers about and that is that the very best this department can do is to suggest ways that will contribute to lower costs in theatre air-conditioning. We cannot undertake to design specific applications, for to do so would be violating the laws of quite a number of states in which BETTER THEATRES is mailed. There are laws requiring that mechanical equipment, at least the design and application of mechanical equipment to air-conditioning, be handled by licensed engineers approved by those particular states. Therefore, we are definitely limited to expressing the fundamentals of good practice, and the fine points of what sizes of coils, how many cubic feet of air, how many gallons of water, what speed a compressor should run, etc., will have to be obtained locally.

Through our research facilities we have opportunity to learn of and develop the very latest in application and operating techniques, and through these columns we can convey to theatre owners what is the latest, so that they may in turn know about them, and when necessary call attention to such methods if the local engineer does not happen to have had experi-

PROJECTION SOUND REPRODUCTION THE SCREEN

FLUCTUATION OF DEFINITION

THE sensitivity of the so-called "one-kilowatt" arc appears not to be fully appreciated. Projectionists have been describing their puzzlement over fluctuations of definition too frequently of late for the problem to be one merely of isolated instances. The latest inquiry on the matter is a fair example. It comes from Greer, S. C.

"My trouble is that I must refocus for each picture—when I go from feature to shorts, or newsreel to feature. The lenses and lamps were bought at the same time. I have been told that my lenses and reflectors are of the same speed and that this is what causes the trouble; then again I have been told that it is because each picture is made on a different camera.

The suggestions concerning lens-reflector speed and each picture being made with a different camera may, of course, be ignored. Loose lens holders are an unlikely cause of such situations; nor is it probable that a screen could "waver" sufficiently out of plane to disturb the focus.

In the first place, the sensitivity of both the regular "suprex" carbon arc, and of the "one-kilowatt" arc is so acute that even a minute variation in the distance between the aperture plate and the reflector, or otherwise in the focus of the reflector noticeably creates light coloration, giving somewhat the effect of image distortion. The reflector focus and the distance between the aperture and the reflector must be maintained exactly as stipulated by the manufacturer of the lamp, and the arc crater must be held correctly at all times on the lines shown on the arc image finder.

Additionally, the lens adaptors must assure absolute rigidity of the lenses in focus, and some old-type adaptors fail to do this.

Equipment Requirements for A Modern Projection System

[Motion picture presentation in accordance with today's standards and audience demands obviously imposes certain definite requirements in the way of choice of projection room equipment and details of projection room layout. Outstanding requirements were outlined by John J. Sefing at the spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Approved by the Projection Practice Sub-committee, the recommendations cover types of apparatus for various classes of operation. The following is a summary.—THE EDITOR.]

THE STRUCTURAL location of the projection room is important to distortionless screen reproduction. A straight line drawn from the center of the screen to the projection room—that is, the center line of the auditorium—should terminate exactly midway between the two projector lenses. If the projection room, or the projectors within the room, are located an appreciable distance to right or left of this center line, distinctly noticeable keystone will be visible on the screen. The screen picture will not be rectangular.

Keystone will also be visible and noticeable if the projection room is located too high above the screen level, making for a steep projection angle. Again, the image will not be rectangular.

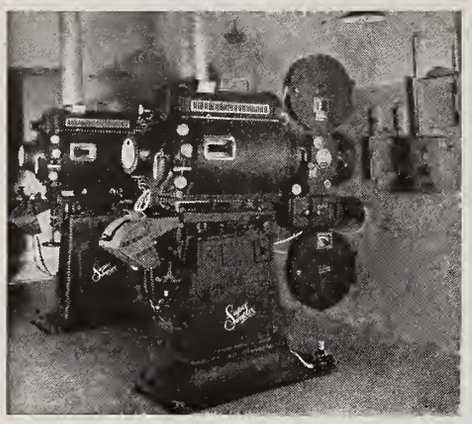
Rectangularity can be restored to the picture by carefully masking the screen with heavy, dark velour, or by fitting the projectors with aperture plates specially filed to produce a rectangular screen image under the given circumstances. Correction, however, will never be complete since, while the outline of the picture can be made rectangular, distortion of objects in the picture cannot be corrected.

The Projection Suite

The projection itself is, or should be, four separate rooms, constituting a small suite. First and most obvious of these is the projection room proper, containing the two projectors, spotlight, effects machine, emergency third projector, sound equipment and—in some theatres—the dimmer bank. A second room contains rewinding equipment, patching facilities, etc. The third houses the d.c. generating (or converting) equipment. Fourth is a toilet and wash room, which in some states is required by law as a matter of safety.

Dimensions of these rooms, it should particularly be noted, must be large enough not only for the equipment to be installed in them, but for adequate working space around the equipment. Architects, engineers and theatre owners can obtain authentic, up-to-date information on projection room planning, with all important or desirable dimensions, from the Projection Practice Sub-Committee of the SMPE. In general, at least 30 inches of clear space should be provided at the sides and rear of each piece of apparatus.

The walls of these rooms must be fireproof. Access doors are of metal. The projection room proper should be fitted with two main metal doors located at opposite sides of the room.



Two portholes are provided for each projector, spot machine or effect machine. One is the projection port, the other a viewing or observation port through which the projectionist at the machine can observe the theatre screen. Some types of effect and spot machines need large projection ports. An observation port may also be provided in the front wall of the rewind room.

Approved types of metal fire-shutters are installed over all these various ports, and controlled by a master trip system. The master system causes or permits the shutters to drop over the ports, covering them, in case of fire. The system may be controlled automatically, by inclusion of fusible links, or manually, by the projectionist.

Portholes opening into the projection may be soundproofed by either of two methods. Acoustical baffles can be installed inside the openings; or glass may be mounted in a separate track over the shutters. If glass is used, it should be only special "optical" glass.

Further desirable sound-proofing of the projection involves, as good practice, the use of cement plaster for the walls up to a height of 5 feet, and above that Acoustone-D or other sound-absorbing material of equivalent efficiency.

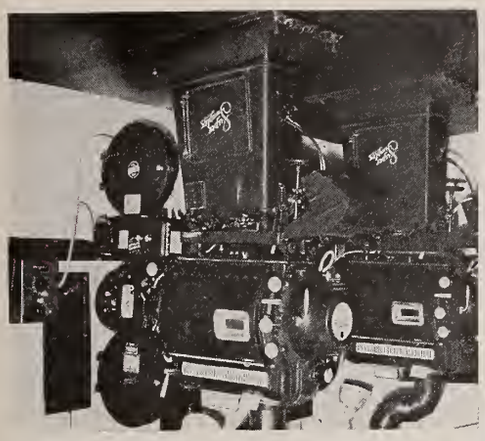
The projection room floor should be covered with either a good grade of paint, capable of withstanding not only wear and tear, but drippings of oil; or, preferably, with a good grade of battleship linoleum.

A color scheme recommended for the projection room proper (one that favors accurate viewing of the screen by the projectionists) is olive-green on floor and plaster walls, and either buff or grey on the upper walls and the ceiling. For the fire shutter apparatus, a flat green is recommended instead of the black conventionally used.

An exhaust system is recommended (removing gases and arc ash not only to protect the personnel, but also to prolong the life of the equipment). This consists preferably in a mechanical blower with metal ducts and taps into the arc lamphouses. It should be of such capacity as to exhaust the lamphouse properly without affecting the burning of the arc.

A second blower and duct system, with tap-grilles opening into the various rooms of the suite, should be installed and connected with the shutter trip system in such a way as to start the blower automatically whenever the shutters are tripped because of a fire. A separate snap-switch should be provided to permit the same blower and duct system to be used for exhausting hot, stale air and gases under ordinary operating conditions.

Projection Equipment



Selection of equipment for use in these rooms is not a matter to be treated haphazardly. Projection room apparatus is now not only highly refined, but considerably specialized. Specialization means that there are "right" and "wrong" types for given working requirements. In addition, there are "wrong"—that is, obsolete and inefficient—types for any modern requirement.

The projector base should always be sufficiently strong and steady properly to support the load of the modern lamphouse, magazines and mechanism. If the support is not perfectly steady, the picture on the screen cannot possibly be steady; moreover, the apparatus will be subjected to harmful strain through excessive vibration. An obsolete-type pedestal, even with makeshift braces, is not as steady and reliable as a modern base specifically designed to carry the load of modern lamphouses, large diameter reels, projector and soundhead.

The lamp should be chosen according to the size of the screen, which in turn is governed by the size of the auditorium. Theatres having an average-sized screen image, up to 18 feet wide, should have at least a "one-kilowatt" type arc, providing a minimum screen brightness of 9 foot-lamberts; with a picture up to 22 or 24 feet wide, the "suprex" carbon arc lamp will provide the necessary minimum screen brightness. For pictures wider than 24 feet, high-amperage condenser type arcs are required.

The extraordinarily spacious and well appointed projection room of the Vogue theatre, new house of the recently organized Odeon Theatres of Canada. It is approximately 60 feet wide and nearly 20 feet deep, with decorative pendent bowl luminaires and pattern flooring of rubber composition. The equipment includes Brenkert projectors and magazines and Brenkert bases, and RCA sound system.

Projector area of the large projection room of the Mayfair theatre, a relatively new house in Ventura, Calif. Floyd McPherson, Mayfair projectionist and a charter member of Local 709, took this picture himself. The room is 25 feet wide, 12½ feet deep, and 9 feet high. The concrete floor is covered in battleship linoleum. The equipment consists in Super-Simplex mechanisms with dual shutters and 18-inch magazines mounted on Super-Simplex bases. The lamps are Peerless Magnarcs using 6½x8-mm. trim, drawing about 55 amperes with 34-38 volt at the arc, with a screen (Walker plastic) 23½ feet wide. Arc supply is by a Hertner 65-130 motor-generator, while lenses are Bausch & Lomb Super-Cinephors, coated type, with f/2 spread and focal length of 3.75 inches. Projection distance is 104 feet.

The extreme importance of the projector mechanism can hardly be overemphasized. A frame area about ½-inch square is projected to a screen area of perhaps 350 square feet. Since there are 576 half-inch squares in one square foot, the magnification is equal to 576 times 350, or about 200,000. Every imperfection or unsteadiness in the projector's operation is magnified 200,000 times for presentation to the audience. The requisite steadiness of performance must be maintained under the strain of intermittent mechanical action lasting many hours each day through the many years that constitute the working life of a projector.

The changeover device requires a good type of electrical mechanism. The projectionist cannot deliver a smooth presentation with home-made gadgets. Everything in the projection room is now timed so precisely that the slightest disruption or hindrance makes itself evident.

Choice of several excellent sound systems is available today. The vital parts of the sound equipment should be installed in the projection room proper, as near to the projectors as is practicable without cutting down needed working space. This is desirable for convenience in manipulation and control. The monitor, sound changeover, volume controls and amplifier should be so located.

TECHNICOLOR as it should be seen

. . . and now that they have an appreciation of how really beautiful color pictures can be if properly presented, they will not readily accept a substitute. The intermediate high intensity lamp with its snow-white light, has made this improved projection possible. Satisfactory presentation of Technicolor pictures has been proven out of the question with the muddy yellow light of the low intensity.

The Strong Utility One-Kilowatt Projection Arc has put high intensity lighting within the reach of even moderate sized theatres. It projects twice the volume of light of the low intensity arc with an increased combined current and carbon cost of less than 2¢ an hour.

F. H. Richardson's COMMENT

Recalling the Old Days Reveals Our Progress

At this time, in a year in which the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is celebrating its Silver anniversary, it is with deep pleasure that I can survey the progress made in projection. Considering the extremely crude equipment with which we had to work and produce results in the early days, we have now reached undreamed of heights of perfection — and still we go on, improving the improvements.

F. H. R.

Well I remember the conditions of a quarter of a century ago. Around about that time we felt we had progressed to a point where few things were left to do except to educate our "operators," and many felt this was not worth the effort involved since they were certain that any one who could turn on a switch was perfectly capable of working in a "booth." Even so, we had advanced a long, long way from those beginnings when film was run through a crude machine and was allowed to fall upon the floor or run off into a gunny-sack, then painstakingly rewound by hand; and when screens were bed sheets purloined from the good wife, or strips of canvas sewn together and whitewashed, and tacked to the most convenient wall.

Twenty-five years ago we had gone a long way from that; we had started to "go modern." Many theatres actually had two projectors, and the well remembered slide of "One minute, please," projected while changing reels, already pretty much a thing of the past.

As late as 1916 some remote sections were still getting light from ocohydrogen (lime light), which was produced for one, by the Enterprise Optical Company, now Motiograph, Inc. This lime light was generated by combining hydrogen and oxygen, then blowing the combination against a stick of lime. First a tank of hydrogen was turned on, giving a small gas flame and then gradually the oxygen was turned on, the two combining and producing intense heat that rendered the stick of lime incandescent. One can well imagine the relief of "operators" as this inefficient and somewhat dangerous procedure was done away with and the use of the straight vertical carbon arc, which burned (roughly) 45 amperes, came into use.

Even with this new and then wonderful improvement, the light procured was exceedingly poor and tended to fluctuate and flare into sudden bursts of color. It is estimated by some of the old-timers that the maximum intensity of light on the screen may have been 5 foot-candles, but of course in those days no one bothered to measure it, partly because they knew of nothing they could do about it.

And the projectors, though considered marvels of their day, were crude in the extreme when viewed from the high standards of today. There were the Powers 5 and 6, with open heads, and the early Simplex with closed heads. Another make was the Motiograph of which company, incidentally, Mr. Roebuck of Sears & Roebuck, was President. This projector boasted of two shutters inside the mechanism, revolving in opposite directions.

The arc power for these ancient machines was usually through an a.c. transformer known as an "economizer." The few theatres having d.c. used it through rheostats, and a very few had advanced far enough to put in a brand new Wagner rotary converter.

Shortly before this many theatres had no such thing as a "booth" or "coop," which were two of the favorite names for what we call projection rooms; however, a fire in the Iriquoi theatre, Chicago stage house, in which hundreds of lives were lost, made the industry extremely fire conscious and fireproof walls began to appear around all projection equipment. The term "booth" or "coop" was quite appropriate for these rooms, since they were no more than the names imply.

Few of these coops had any such thing as a "booth shutter," but some of the "operators" took enough interest in their work to evolve crude shutters of sheet asbestos which ran in home-made slides and were held in place with a piece of string.

The "operators" were gradually learning that they must pull together if they ever wished to have their craft recognized, and were forming unions. It is interesting to note that although Local 306, New York City, was chartered in 1913 and was having hard sledding, many "operators" elsewhere were still members of "auxiliaries" of regular theatrical unions.

Many were the problems to contend with in those old days, but the greatest drawback of them all was the complete lack of standardization of anything pertaining to the motion picture theatre. It was essential that something be done and quickly, and to this end a small group of men, all deeply interested, not only in their own particular job, but the motion picture industry as a whole, banded together and after much discussion the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was founded. From that time on, projection methods and standards steadily advanced, to an important degree through the stimulus and leadership of the SMPE.

Projectionists Keep Kicking About Those Cue Marks

THERE ARE so many letters coming in concerning proper cue marks that it seems there soon should be nothing but perfection along this line; however, in spite of the many objections to the "operator" who figures anything he can get away with is good enough, there are still hundreds of men who pay no attention and go on their merry way, slashing, cutting and marking film so they can easily tell what is what, but heaven help the next man who handles it—not to mention the audience. From Herschel Yantis, projectionist down in Stanford, Kentucky, comes this letter on the matter:

"I am what you fellows up north probably call a 'hick', for this town is small, having a population of only 1,600. There are advantages to a place like this, however, for every one knows what the other fellow does and it tends to make one mind his p's and q's, both in his work and in his private life.

"My projection room is small, being only 12x8x9 feet. In this small space we have Century Model C heads with Cen

Sand—Symbol of Optical Independence

BY itself, only a handful of sand—fine, pure, white crystals of quartz from a Pennsylvania hillside. But, blended with boron, sodium, barium, lead, phosphorus and other elements—fused and fined at white heat—cooled, sorted, annealed and selected—it becomes optical glass, one of the basic indispensable materials of national defense—and of modern civilization.

Thirty years ago America was wholly dependent on Europe for a supply of glass for optical instruments. But before the first World War had cut off that source, Bausch & Lomb scientists, at Rochester, New York, were at work on the development of a glass-making technique. By 1918, glass to fill the vital needs of optical manufacturing in the United States was pouring from the B&L glass plant.

Today, for binoculars and fire control equipment that are the eyes of the Army and Navy —for metallographic and spectrographic equipment that are the eyes of industrial research— for microscopes that are the eyes of all science —for spectacle lenses that are the eyes of the nation's citizens—America is completely independent of foreign supply.

"I have very often been asked by one of the audience, 'What are those white circles appearing on the screen every now and then?' Never yet has anyone asked concerning the black dots which appear. I may be a hick, but I do try to do things right and I have no use for a man who, for his own convenience, takes a pencil and puts a large 'X' at the changeover cues, running it from one corner of the frame to the other. I have been projecting pictures here for six years and I have made many mistakes, but I have yet to blame my mistake on the cue marks. They are there for us to see, so why not look for them? If we can't see them, let's try wearing glasses—and if that doesn't work it is time to give another a chance.

"As for scratched film itself, it can be avoided if one will take a clean rag and pull it between the rollers in the magazine, clean the film gate and aperture plate between each reel, take the magazine off once a week and take the rollers out and clean them. Some, of course, will say they don't get paid for such work and it takes a lot of time. That is true, but let us consider the projectionist who is to run the print after we are through with it.

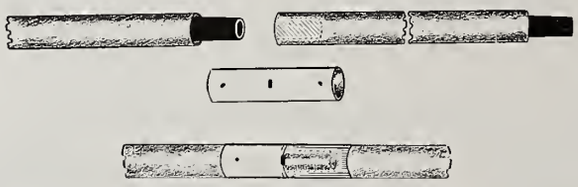
"Yes, I am a 'Hick operator' and I still have a lot to learn, but if such magazines as the BETTER THEATRES give us information as they have in the past, and if you continue to keep writing such books as the Bluebook of Projection, I hope in time I will have all the answers. If I don't it will not be because I don't try, and if the time ever comes when I lose interest in trying to learn and in doing my best, I will step out in favor of some other man who is better than I."

A toast to "Better Projection": A bit of lifting-of-the-glass that followed the presentation to F. H. Richardson, June 4th, of a scroll (reproduced elsewhere in this issue) by a committee representing the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. That's "Pop" at the left, of course; the other "jolly good fellows" are the committee—Paul Larsen of the Baird Television Corporation; Sylvan Harris, editor of the SMPE Journal; Herbert Griffin, vice president of the International Projector Corporation; and Donald Hyndman of the Eastman Kodak Company. All this took place at the home of F. H. and Friend Daughter Nellie in Scarsdale, N. Y.—G. S.

Atta, boy! is my hearty comment on this expression. Brother Yantis sent a photograph of his projection room, but it is not quite clear enough to reproduce.

AND ONE FROM A SUPERVISOR

Yet another letter has just arrived on this matter of film mutilation. It comes from Frank R. McLean, supervisor of projection for Sparta Theatres, Inc., Coulterville, Ill., who writes:



"After reading much argument pro and con in BETTER THEATRES on the matter of cue-marking, I feel the urge to speak.

"I agree with you entirely in the attitude you take. Any unnecessary marking of the film should be avoided, but when absolutely necessary to provide a cue, it should be made properly. One projectionist (not quoted in your column) recommends a grease pencil mark 'as big as the picture itself' and assures us that it should be visible to anybody. Boy, and how! My objection to the grease pencil is that marks made with it are smeared along the film during rewinding and projection, and are difficult to see on dark scenes and practically invisible on colored film. Punching holes is inexcusable.

"What is wrong with the S. R. P. cue? Absolutely nothing! I have never found a single instance where the S. R. P. cue was inadequate, if it exists at all. A certain manufacturer of a cue-marking device states that S. R. P. cues are unreliable because they are not standard as to shape or position and says that this is proved by the fact that projectionists (?) still place their own marks on the film. Nuts! There are definite standards established for size, shape, position, etc., of these marks, and there is no reason why they are not entirely adequate. And since when do the actions of 'machine operators' offer conclusive proof of anything? I have known such operators to scratch cues where the original mark was a solid black dot on a clear background!

"If all exchanges will only see that every print is properly cued, and then bill the theatre for damage if it is mutilated or removed, I believe the practice will be done away with. Of course any damaged film should be replaced, the charge to the theatre being sufficient to cover the replacement.

"If it should be necessary to mark a cue on the film, it should be made to conform in every way with the standard cue. Personally, I never mark more than one frame. I use a template in combination with my splicer (which I made myself). Accurately positioned register pins and guides for cutting and scraping make it possible to produce accurate splices and properly positioned cue marks.

"I believe the reasons why the S. R. P. cues may be considered by some inadequate, are, first, plain carelessness on the part of the 'operator' who reads detective stories while the end of the film runs through the machine and then wonders why they don't make cues plain enough to see without watching the screen; second, the screen illumination is so low (especially in corners where the cue appears) that it may be difficult to see a mark that would be quite visible if a decent level of screen illumination were maintained. General inefficiency of light source and optical train is a common cause, but just as often the trouble lies with indifferent adjustment of the lamp. In any event, the fault is definitely not with the S. R. P. cue.

"Some kind of reel end alarm should be considered indispensable. With a device of this kind properly timed, there should be little trouble with eye strain caused by watching too long for the cue.

"Ends of single reel subjects are often broken and spliced so many times that the standard cues have been cut out. When projectionists get up enough ambition to stop projecting such prints from the 1,000-foot reels on which they are shipped, this condition will be at least partly corrected. With tension on the upper magazine spindle properly adjusted for the 2,000-foot reel, a terrific strain is placed on the last 100 feet or so of a print mounted on a reel with a 2-inch hub.

"Not all the men I work with agree with me in these matters, of course, but wherever I have the authority I enforce the use of proper projection practice for I know from a good many years experience that Better Projection does pay."

An instructive discussion, Brother McLean—and justifiably indignant. In general, my own observations agree with yours. There is nothing wrong with the S. R. P. that conscientious, systematic projection practice can't cure.

earphone outfit that we are using on an RCA sound system at the Strand theatre. An RCA universal output transformer couples the low impedance output of power amplifier to the earphones. R-1 is designed to prevent unbalancing of the amplifier speaker line and at the same time to reduce the overall volume to earphones to the minimum requirements of the three earphone stations.

"R-2 is a limiting resistor designed to prevent loss of sound or distortion in the event of a short-circuit in the earphone cords or feeder line.

"R-3 is an individual volume control at each earphone station whereby each hard-of-hearing patron can regulate volume to suit his own requirements. Earphones are plugged into a midget jack with a standard plug.

"Type S. J. hard-service rubber-covered cord or armored cable can be used for the transmission line. An interesting thing about the transformer is that the secondary, or 15-ohm side, is used as the primary to the 15-ohm amplifier speaker output line.

"The earphones are of the type used on regular radio work and may vary in impedance from 1,500 to 3,000 ohms. The earphone boxes are standard 4-inch square boxes used in electrical wiring. The cover can be of insulating material, such as wood or Bakelite, through which the potentiometer shaft projects. The jack is installed through a knockout hole on the side of the box and insulated therefrom. As many as twelve seats, or earphone stations, can be used with this outfit.

"The volume controls are of 500,000 ohms resistance with or without a tapered resistance wire.

"A line can be run into the projection room for the boys to detect ground noise or troubles that cannot be heard from the monitor horn. Believe it or not, you can hear them breathe with this outfit.

"Earphone stations in my case are mounted on the side wall halfway down the auditorium."

Technically, Brother LaPoint's scheme seems entirely workable. Whether it would be as efficient for a much larger number of seats as he says it is for three, I cannot say. It is an interesting method, however, of providing hearing aids in a small theatre —and hearing aids should be a standard service in motion picture theatres.

An Opinion on Control Tracks and Added Volume

AN INTERESTING letter has come from Jack Prater, Palouse, Wash., projectionist and exhibitor. Says Jack, referring to the recent editorial on improving sound with present equipment:

"I see you are up and at 'em regarding the new developments in sound reproduction. I believe you have expressed some very just criticism. 'Fantasia' is of course a marvelous piece of work, but regular productions would not be nearly so spectacular if they were recorded and reproduced on similar equipment.

"As to the need for special control track equipment solely to expand the volume range, why should theatres as a whole become enthusiastic when the present recorded volume range is already too great for the small theatre, and is plenty for the medium-sized houses. For the last few years it has been necessary for us to reduce the volume of loud parts of features to keep from driving patrons from the theatre. We have plenty of amplifier and speaker capacity to handle high volume at good quality, but the point can be reached where no matter how good the sound is, it can be too darned loud! Patrons can be convinced that an explosion has gone off, or that a building has caved in, or that an earthquake is happening, on the screen without actually being knocked out of their seats.

"A fact which is usually given too little consideration is that in theatre practice whispers and ordinary dialogue are reproduced with sufficient volume to be heard easily at distances of 150 feet or more. With the weak sounds thus boosted in volume, the recording need not have anywhere near the full natural volume range to be able to deliver loud sounds at volume equal to their original.

"We have already run a few features having control tracks, and although we have only standard equipment, I made particular note of the fact that in most of the places where the control track changed to increase the volume, it was necessary for us to reduce the volume. The only way we could use such a control track would be in reverse. From this it is obvious that control tracks used solely to expand the volume range have a place in only the very large theatres, of which there are relatively few."

Varying Effects of The Business Boom

FROM OUR old friend H. I. Phillips, secretary of Local 414, IATSE & MPMO, comes a newsy letter which says:

"It has been about eleven years since you visited us down here, but we all hope we treated you nice enough so you have not forgotten us during the interim. Wichita has just about doubled in size since you were down this way, due to airplane building, and I doubt if you would find anything familiar. Four new 'Rhubarb' theatres were built last year, and three more are scheduled for this year. This, of course, means more work for the boys, but we are unable to get the downtown scale, and that does not tend to make us too happy. However, we might as well get used to it because the downtown theatre is a thing of the past, I am afraid.

"Our good friend and president, Alden Fidler, died about 18 months ago and we all feel our loss more each meeting. He was a grand fellow and well liked by all the members."

The only "squawk" Brother Phillips voiced was one about the double feature, which is used but quite heartily disliked, and Phillips ends up with a fervent hope, which I second, that something will soon be done about it.

Last week Projectionist Harry Brewer, member of Local 199, dropped in to say hello. To show the difference in effect of business on various locations, Mr. Brewer says as soon as business picked up in Detroit the show business dropped off so much that many projectionists had to be laid off. He lays this to the fact that when men are not working they still have a few nickles and dimes and can be found either in a motion picture theatre or pool room, but when they start working they are tired out at night, go home and to bed, and the theatre gets 'em only week ends. May be something to it at that!

Constructive Unionism In the Projection Field

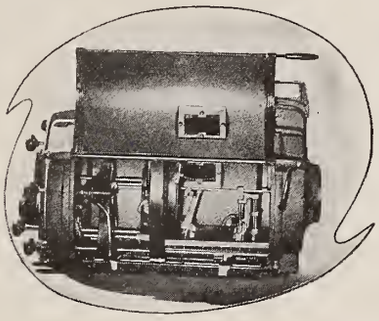
MANY LETTERS have come in during the past months with words of encouragement and best wishes. When the one quoted below arrived from Local 224, Washington, D. C., I felt like "Little Annie Roonie" of comic strip fame; it made me "glad all over." Perhaps I may be permitted to let you read it without seeming too immodest. Here it is:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: This organization learned only recently of your illness and it immediately became the desire of each member to have you know of his sincere wish for your speedy recovery.

"Our membership has virtually grown up, as projectionists, under your tutelage and it is with this thought that I have been asked to tell you of our school.

"It consists of three parts: First, Richardson's Bluebook of Projection for our classes; second, complete modern equipment in our Union Hall that has enabled us to simulate projection room conditions; and third, a very able and industrious committee of instructors chosen from our ranks.

"We have always been aware of your feelings toward such a movement as this and we are deeply grateful for your inspiration. We acknowledge also, the very necessary material aid rendered us by two of your very close friends, Mr. Herbert Griffin and Mr. P. A. McGuire of International Projector Corporation.



"Let me express the confidence of our entire membership that there will be many more Bluebooks and that you will soon return to that work which has made you truly, 'the philosopher, friend and guide of projectionists.' "

Letters of this nature make me feel that possibly I have helped a bit in the years past and gone as well as in the present. I am proud to be connected in any way with such a fine body of men. I have advocated for years, the procedure which Local Union 224 is now following. It is my firm belief that practical experience is not enough to make a first-class man in any field. One must study; and how much easier this is to do when the study is supervised instead of being hit-and-miss? My highest compliments to this local. It is moved by the genuine spirit of responsible, constructive unionism. In the hands of men like those of Local 224, unions demonstrate to all honest minds the value of such organizations to business and to society.

Communications for F. H. Richardson will reach him if addressed to him either at BETTER THEATRES, Rockefeller Center, New York . . . or 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF A MEMORABLE EVENT

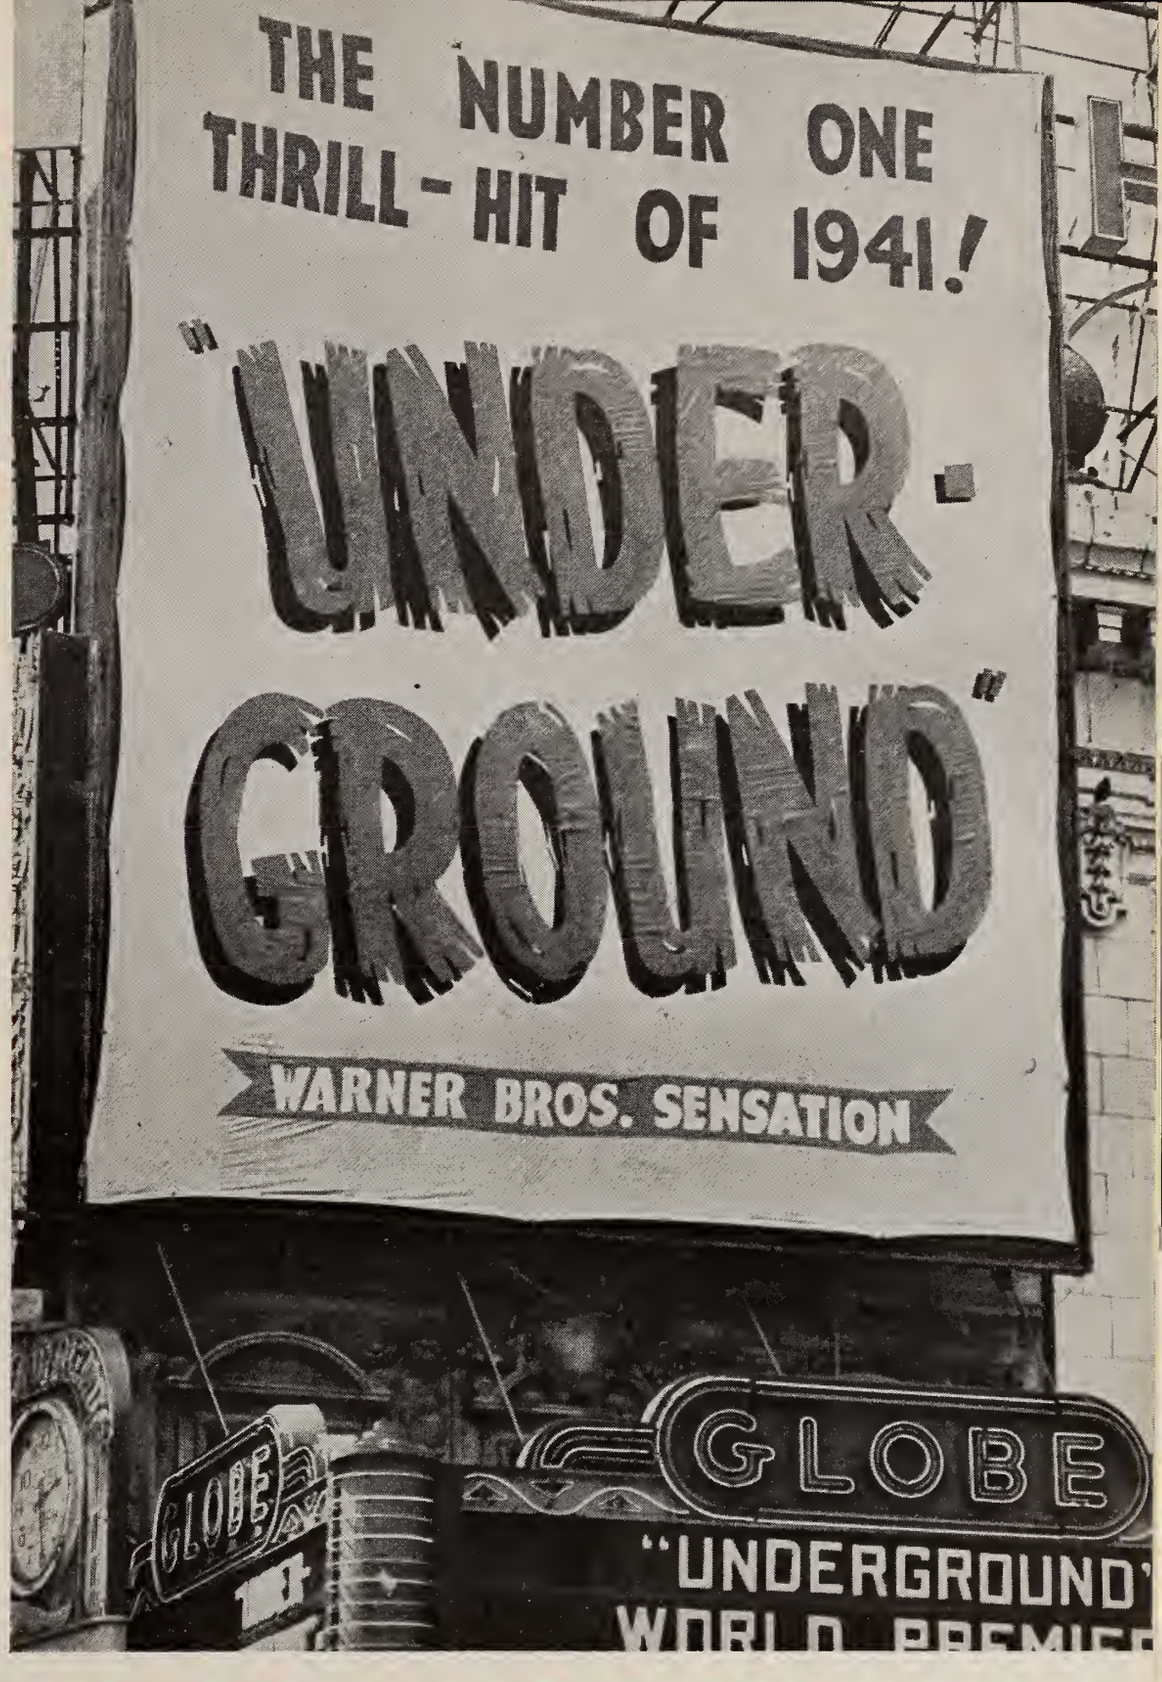
(COPY OF AN ADVERTISEMENT WHICH APPEARED THIS WEEK IN NEW YORK NEWSPAPERS FOR M-G-M's "BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST.")

A YEAR AGO, Radio City Music Hall presented a picture which received instantaneous and unanimous acclaim from critics and public alike. It was "Pride and Prejudice" and ran for four weeks. Its leading player was lovely Greer Garson. It was produced by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

On Thursday, Radio City Music Hall will celebrate the anniversary of "Pride and Prejudice" by a most unusual event, the World Premiere of an equally outstanding motion picture.

Fittingly the film chosen to signalize this occasion is M-G-M's magnificent Technicolor production BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST. Miss Garson again heads a cast of distinguished players, which also includes Walter Pidgeon, whose performance in "Man Hunt" is receiving high critical praise. Supporting roles are portrayed by such favorites as Felix Bressart, remembered by Music Hall audiences for his part in "Ninotchka", Marsha Hunt, Fay Holden and others of equally high caliber.

But beyond the excellence of its cast, BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST rises to rare heights of screen entertainment by virtue of its deeply moving and inspiring story that has in it the simple, human truthfulness of which great drama is made . . . by its brilliant scenic effects, magically reproduced in beautiful Technicolor . . . and by the sympathetic direction of Mervyn LeRoy.



We of Radio City Music Hall are indeed happy that we have been able to prevail upon Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to permit us to play BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST at this time, many weeks before its national release date, so that we might thus fittingly and auspiciously open our Summer Season.

MONOTONOUSLY COLOSSAL

BUDDINGS of experiment in re-packaging the motion picture appear. The routines of program concept denoted by the terms, "feature" and "short", so long controlling all alike—Production, Distribution, and Exhibition—are apparently on the verge of being recognized as without meaning to the consumers of screen entertainment.

This, you gentlemen of the cinema, is the inkling promise of evolution which may, perhaps, as evolutions in our show world so often do, arrive looking very much like revolution.

Specifically, and so far none too well noted, these preoccupied and perplexed days, the hint of a new order in product arises in two recent announcements, both from able showmen. Mr. Hal Roach is engaged in the making of "shorter features", something in, say, about four reels, rather candidly addressed at the second position on the double bill. Second, about a week ago Mr. David Oliver Selznick, in a probable trial balloon approach, gave announcement to a project to make "something new" in entertainment—"a series of short stories told within the framework of a single feature picture, with a running time of about two hours".

Here we have two competent producers, both abundantly, and certainly most divergently, of experience, and with many successes behind them, long and short. The careers of both of them, in their separate ways, have in more recent years been such as to give them interludes available for reflection. It has been not conference but coincidence which has brought them into somewhat parallel lines of diagnosis.

Probably neither would admit it, directly, but it is apparent that Mr. Roach, of fame for his "Lonesome Luke" and "Our Gang", got the notion that shorts were too short, and that Mr. Selznick, builder of "Gone With the Wind", has now decided that longs are too long. Both are adventurers, experimenters.

Some observers, including your editor, have long been of the opinion that the endeavour of the motion picture to be great has tended to undermine its importance.

IT is now nearly three decades since Mr. Adolph Zukor set about making himself a place in the lights by addressing himself directly at making the motion picture "a whole evening's entertainment". It would seem that now, what with double and triple bills, it has become not an evening but a week-end. The commercial consequences appear not to be entirely satisfactory.

The plain fact is that the motion picture, always headlong, pursues every line of development to the reductio ad absurdum, which is merely a Latin cliche for running anything into the ground. Every departure of production and distribution and exhibition which has been greeted with marked success has immediately been made a commonplace, and worn threadbare.

That is because merchandising always runs in grooves.

The established practises of the motion picture are all really trade practises; quite as much trade practises in the creative departments of Hollywood as the sales offices of Times Square and Rockefeller Center.

Let us say, again, as must so often be set down: this is not a peculiarity of the motion picture industry. It is just a habit of industry, because the controlling forces, or inertias, are common to humanity. That does not excuse or dismiss the obligations of leadership or the necessity for genuinely creative contribution—especially in this business of showmanship purveying to the multitudes. Maybe one of the difficulties is that a little leadership has been too leading.

Manyfold more intensities of attention have been given to the business of cashing the status quo than have been given to the making of product to meet the markets of the morrow.

"Selling handles" have been made destructively important. It was selling expediency, not art, that took Mr. Charles Chaplin out of the two-reel product, in which he could deliver his genius, into "feature length". That was repeated again in the case of Mr. Harold Lloyd. When these capable persons appeared in their proper media, they got the public; but, with buying and selling mechanisms, being what they were, it seemed expedient at the time to wrap up longer packages to get the money—which they did—for a while. Relatively, both of these performers are today unknown.

THAT process has been going on and on. Mr. Walt Disney, starting in all humility with "Steamboat Willie", gave us Mickey Mouse in short takes. The results were vastly more important than the stupendous "Fantasia", which in its ultra-magnificence is rather too colossal to be a sequel in production to "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs", which was as special and peculiar, as shows now and then can be, as Mr. Selznick's "Gone With the Wind".

For a long time now the motion picture has been monotonously colossal.

The process of making big ones out of the little is general. We have tons of books that ought to have been magazine articles. We have low priced automobiles that ought to be four feet shorter. We have double ice cream cones, giant ginger ales and super hot dogs, none improved. Nothing remains "as was" except the Grand Canyon and Niagara Falls.

Many devices of entertainment and impingement on the senses and emotions gain by their compression and brevity. The perfect novel is one evening's reading; the short story, all but lost to the world, is really short; the demi-tasse is not for a pot of coffee. The cocktail is not a continuing drink—and if it is used that way the party gets cock-eyed.

IT all—if it must be said again—relates to the matter of emotional intensities for the customer. He knows nothing really about features and shorts, about A, B and C pictures, except as he is dosed by a fan press. He goes to the theatre and pays his quarter for a show. He does not read the screen

'A Nail in the Coffin . . .'

BLASTING the motion picture arbitration system provided by the consent decree, Allied States Association from its home office in Washington, on Tuesday, scored the first decision of the Appeals Board, reported June 14th in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The board ruling in the Ken theatre clearance complaint at Chicago has "driven a nail in the coffin which the distributors are making for the final interment of a noble experiment," charged Allied, declaring that the Chicago ruling in effect established "clearance in all contracts in terms of weekly release."

The contention of distributors before the arbitrator and appeals board that the Ken complaint sought to better its run rather than alter clearance "was based on a technical point," Allied asserted. The decision of the three-man appeal board upholds the technical point in "language even more technical than that contained in the decree itself," Allied continued.

Allied charges that the appeals board emasculates Section VIII of the decree and in Chicago "makes it impossible to . . . fix maximum clearance without changing a run . . . which is forbidden." This, Allied says, freezes existing clearance and zoning in Chicago and will form a precedent for other areas.

Blocks-of-5 Issue

NORTHWEST Allied, at a district meeting, reaffirmed, late last week in Minneapolis, its backing for the state's anti-blocks-of-five law and voted to defend it in the courts. Minneapolis and St. Paul exhibitors present asserted they did not fear a product shortage as a result, until later in the year. Meanwhile, legal action by the majors, to test the law's constitutionality, was still awaited, as their spokesmen indicated in New York they would not sell new season product in Minnesota until the test action was made.

The predicted product shortage, New York observers said, may occur despite Northwest Allied's deprecations, because attorneys predict trial of the majors' court action will not occur before September. Northwest Allied officials have said their members would close theatres in event of a product dearth, rather than weaken.

Farmer Hays

WILL H. HAYS of Sullivan, Ind., Hollywood, Calif., and New York, N. Y., was in his Forty-fourth Street office this week again after an absence of two months of which he had spent five weeks taking a rest cure in a Chicago hospital. Next week he is scheduled to go to Hollywood, again.

Mr. Hays went from Chicago to spend a week at his home in Indiana, looking over his lands in the region. He found the Wabash county corn especially promising, and discovered that he was the owner of a total of six hundred sheep.

Robert G. Tucker of the Indianapolis Star went down to interview Mr. Hays and reported: ". . . . Mr. Hays frankly averred the so-called escapist fare, designed for amusement, is of tremendous worth at this time. . . ."

Sparks Deal Set

E. J. SPARKS' 40 per cent interest in the All-Florida Circuit, of approximately 100 houses, will be purchased by Paramount for $1,350,000—$500,000 to be paid at once; $85,000 annually, thereafter, for 10 years, culminating negotiations running over weeks. Paramount thus would possess a 90 per cent interest in the chain.

Frank Rogers, general manager of the circuit, is expected to become operating head for Paramount. He and Fred Kent, circuit attorney, were in New York headquarters of Paramount this week, conferring with Leonard Goldenson, executive head of Paramount's theatre interests, on final phases

Mr. Rogers, Mr. Kent, and a few others will continue to hold their 10 per cent stock interests in the Sparks circuit.

Truce for Showmanship

THE well-known community rivalries between the salt-water and sporting places of Miami and Miami Beach last week were abandoned in a truce on behalf of showmanship for a picture opening, when the Mayors of both towns combined to proclaim the premiere of "Moon Over Miami" at Wometco's Lincoln, on the Beach, and the Miami, in Miami. Built around the fact that many of the picture's backgrounds were filmed locally, the campaign, under the supervision of Sonny Shephard, tapped many sources of favorable attention, as noted in the reports set down in this week's Managers' Round Table which starts on page 73.

credits. He does not know who made what, nor does he care a merry whoop in the Super-heated Hence. His magnificent capacity for being bored by having to think of any one thing for more than a few minutes set the time for a vaudeville act at fifteen minutes, the length of a reel of film at a thousand feet, the unit of time for a radio skit at a quarter of an hour, and starts him reading magazines from the back to pick up the one-paragraph items. The long pictures he likes are laden with changes of tempo and content, up and down, at a rapid pace. How do you suppose Gene Autry became a leading star without a Broadway run? He did it a-horseback going from here to there, rapidly.

Production is conducted entirely without programming attention. So is Distribution. The inevitable consequence is that there has been less and less constructive programming of the show in the theatre. The exhibitor is more concerned with buying, availabilities, zoning and protection than he is with the immediate business of putting together a show. He can hardly escape that. That is why newsreels are bought as fillers and why sports have been sold and bought by the arm load.

When the post mortem reports are all in, it will be found that the double bill, the triple bill, and the accompanying perversions of the box office with lotteries and giveaways, are to be traced to trade practises and competitive policies within the industry rather than among the retail customers.

In an ideal state the showman would select and buy and present his own idea of a show for his customers. Probably that will never be as nearly approximated as it was when the motion picture was on its way up. But it is still something to reach for.

Processes calculated to short circuit the exhibitor, to make him a landlord or a box office manager, have been dominant in the years of the industry's larger problems and travails.

THIS troubled week in a troubled and imperfect world has revealed two unapproachable perfections: a scarlet tanager flashing in the sun and posing against the frosty verdure of a blue spruce, and the soft gleaming of pale lilies in the dusk, a chorus in white against the green-black mystery of a woodland at evening, star dusted with fireflies.

—Terry Ramsaye

Realty Department

THE MOUNTAIN View Golf and Country Club, which is Adolph Zukor's New City, N. Y., estate, now converted into a commercial institution, is to officially and gayly open the club house July 4th. There's a dining terrace, a cocktail bar, dancing and entertainment under the supervision of Siggy Lane, "personal host," and of prior fame on programs of the Paramount Theatre in Broadway and on the Pontiac radio program.

A fortnight ago Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, purchased the Anchorage, a waterfront showplace in Brevoort Lane in Greenhaven at Rye, New York. The main house contains twenty rooms.

It is announced that Harry M. Warner, who now makes his home in the west, will convert his 20-acre Mount Vernon, N. Y., estate into a garden home development, with houses of the Williamsburg pattern.

Guild Politics

"WITH the full approval of the entire Guild, measures have been taken which, it is believed, will fully prevent any possible occurrence of similar incidents." Thus Kenneth Hallam, of RKO's home office press department, speaking Wednesday in New York as a member of the Screen Publicists Guild, described a "new order" in the Guild to prevent repetition of expressions on outside political matters through the Guild's organization publication, the Guild News.

For months arguments have been heard among Guild members, and protestations have been made by members over official Guild declarations attacking or criticizing certain Government or war-and-defense emergency measures—the Selective Service Act and the Lease-Lend Bill, for example.

Such extraneous activities by the Guild brought both defections in the ranks and the refusal elsewhere of home office publicity and advertising workers to enter Guild membership. Some workers at Paramount, MGM, 20th Century-Fox and elsewhere publicly challenged the political editorializations in the Guild journal.

It appears now that a conservative element has moved in,—on election by the Guild membership—to oversee "every line" intended for publication in the union's paper. This supervisory board consists of Earl Wingart, 20th Century-Fox; Leonard Daly, United Artists; Kenneth Hallam, RKO; Henry (Hank) Linet, Universal and Larry Lipskin, Columbia.

Meanwhile paving the way for a settlement of the long controversy over the bargaining agent to represent advertising and publicity employees in the New York offices of the major companies, the National Labor Relations Board last week ordered elections, to be held within 30 days, to determine whether the Screen Publicists Guild shall be their voice.

The elections will be held among the employees of 20th Century-Fox, Paramount, Columbia, United Artists, RKO, Universal, Warner Brothers, and Loew's, Inc., and votes will be taken from advertising copywriters, press book editors and writers, publicity and feature writers, planters and contact men, production men, salaried artists and exploitation men. The NRLB, however, rejected the guild's contention that their unit also should include free-lance writers and artists, foreign publicity men and clerical employees.

Sound Improvements

METHODS of improving sound reproduction in theatres and minimizing or eliminating costly alterations for obtaining improvements, were recommended, in a report by the theatre sound standardization committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, last Saturday, in Hollywood. The recommendations were made after months of study, and are intended to keep theatres abreast of advances in sound recordings.

Among recommendations by the Academy were: Maintenance of minimum volume consistent with required seating capacity; proper auditorium proportions, auditorium width of from 50 to 70 per cent of length and auditorium ceiling of not more than 40 per cent of the length; use of non-parallel surfaces (walls); use of convex rather than concave surfaces; auditorium absorption characteristics to provide the same rate of sound decay in vertical as in horizontal direction from side to side or from back to front wall, etc., etc.

(The Research Council acoustic recommendations were presented and analyzed in the March issue of Better Theatres.)

The FCC moved speedily so that the transcontinental cable might be completed at the earliest possible date, to meet national defense needs and mounting business requirements.

HOLLYWOOD VIEWS NEW DECREE ORDER AS A HOME-OFFICE WORRY

by MARTIN QUIGLEY, JR.
in Hollywood

WITH the 'new order' of consent decree operations only weeks away, Hollywood, generally, still regards the whole subject as a home-office and distribution problem. That is almost as would be expected.

Consideration of any possible changes in the operations of the studios required by the new system has been postponed until after the decree block selling has been tried for several months.

Hollywood realizes that the unseasonal rush of production at the present time is related to the blocks-of-five and trade-show provisions of the decree, but further than that, it believes, once a sufficient 'backlog' of pictures is built up, production can continue in the old pattern.

Only a few Hollywood executives and observers seem to recognize that selling pictures in small blocks, after they have been completed, instead of selling a season's supply in advance, may result in basic changes in production methods and procedure.

Some hold the opinion that it may be necessary to plan each block of pictures systematically to make the package attractive to the exhibitors. It is considered possible that Hollywood, instead of being called upon to turn out a steady flow of miscellaneous pictures which have already been sold, will be required, under decree operations, to build blocks, each containing certain types of pictures and a certain combination of high- and-low budget productions.

But, for the present, Hollywood production executives claim to have made no new plans for the new order but have adopted a policy of 'watchful waiting.' The studios will face a situation requiring changes in production methods, when, as and if it should arise.

See Delay in Data

Several months of decree selling must elapse, it is expected, before data on what the exhibitor wants—and will pay most for—can be assembled by the distribution staff, collated, and passed on to production executives.

If exhibitors are reluctant to buy blocks containing the so-called low-budget program picture, or if important exhibition interests prefer to buy films singly or several at a time, it is believed, Hollywood might be asked to produce a smaller number of better pictures. Such an eventuality would also have its effect on the practice of double billing. Any general curtailment of the number of films made would increase the product problem for theatres showing double features, it was reported.

Unless results of the decree selling demand changes, the studios of the five companies which signed the consent decree may be expected to continue making pictures in the same way as in the past. Since small block selling on a wide scale has never been tried before, there is no information available to make any other policy advisable.

Another factor is that the general opinion in Hollywood is that the blocks of five and trade show sections of the consent decree will be in effect for only one year. It is felt that the decree system is probably only temporary and should be endured with the least alteration possible in the tried procedure.

The chief effect of the consent decree on studio operations thus far has been a drive to build up a large reserve of finished pictures for trade showing in July and August. These would be available for subsequent blocks. It is felt that the more completed films on hand the better the new system can be met.

It is also recognized that, in the rush to build up a product backlog, quality cannot be sacrificed. For, if anything, pictures will have to be better than before, to have real success under the decree selling and distribution system. Poor pictures may enjoy less playing time than ever before, Hollywood believes.

Paramount, Warner Brothers and RKO appear to be in the best position so far as a backlog of finished pictures is concerned. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox are working furiously to build up a supply of pictures. But all the companies bound by the decree will have finished, by the middle of the summer, enough pictures to comprise two or more blocks.

Production Rush Seen

The current rush of production reflects the desire to complete a large number of pictures in the shortest possible time. For example, MGM now has nine films before the cameras.

Paramount plans to have 15 pictures in the can by August 1st and 20 by September 1st. This would give that company ample material for juggling of the blocks in various areas, or for different deals in the same territory, if the distribution executives decide on such a policy. Paramount's blocks will be selected by the distribution heads and the studio sees as its function under the decree a need to get production ahead as far as possible. Outside the drive for a product backlog, Paramount plans to produce pictures as before.

MGM studio officials, according to present plans, will determine whether the 'new order' of consent decree operations requires any changes in production methods after the first three blocks-of-five have been sold and reports have been received from distribution executives. It is thought that not enough information will be available to determine future policy until the decree selling system has been operating three months.

Warners have a large supply of pictures for the new season finished and a number in production. According to plans, the company may have a dual selling policy of blocks for smaller situations and single sales for more important situations. This being the most

MGM FIXES FLEXIBLE POLICY ON RENTALS

MGM, in publishing the first calendar of trade screenings (see opposite page), also announced a new rental formula and a policy of strictly localized selling, without national picture classification, under which it will distribute its new season product. Although local selling will start immediately after each picture has been shown, none will be released until September 1st, when the consent decree's mandatory changes in Big Five selling methods become effective.

William F. Rodgers, MGM sales manager, said the company would sell each picture individually as soon as it has been trade shown in the exchange area. Blocks-of-five, or other package arrangements, within the limits of the consent decree, have not entered into the company's plans as yet, he said. It is indicated that the company expects to be able to sell most pictures on an individual basis, at least for all early runs. The 1941-42 product may be grouped in blocks of three, four or five, however, for sale to subsequent run situations.

Rental terms, under MGM's consent decree selling plan, will be based on a gross receipts formula, according to Mr. Rodgers. Denying rumors that the company would sell only on a percentage basis, he said the new terms would include both percentage and flat rental plans.

The policy marks a departure from the traditional system of classifying pictures on a national designation. Henceforth, MGM rentals will be based only on the performance of pictures in the territory in which the theatre is located. The company believes that the varying scales will particularly benefit the small town first-run exhibitor.

flexible system possible, it is thought, it will be the most satisfactory during the first experimental months of decree selling. The studio, under the plan, will have wide latitude while company executives are learning what's what in the new system. At present it is the opinion that the decree will have little effect on Warners' production.

Although Twentieth Century-Fox was a bit slower than some of the other companies in starting production of a number of pictures for the new season, several films are now before the cameras and the studio is working at a fast pace to build up a reserve of finished pictures for decree selling. The company has spent some time in making changes in its production set-up and arranging for more independence for producers, a plan designed to improve the quality of the pictures.

RKO Block Announced

RKO was the first company to announce its first block of five and scheduled trade shows for July 7th. The company is also reported to have a number of other pictures completed for inclusion in subsequent blocks. No changes have been made recently in production policies. Joseph I. Breen, new production head, assumed his duties at the studio this week. Mr. Breen, on Tuesday, talked to the press in Hollywood about plans and product. See page 30.

Even though several of the companies have a number of pictures already finished and stored in the vaults for the new season, or will have by the middle of the summer, there are no indications in Hollywood that any company will put on the market two or three different blocks at any one time. No studio would allow, except over a vigorous protest, what it might interpret as a dissipation of product, it was reported.

Though the studios plan to continue making pictures in the same way as before the decree was signed, studio executives, in some cases, will have indirect control of the composition of the blocks for decree selling. Even though, officially, distribution will have the duty of selecting pictures for each block, some control will be exercised by Hollywood executives, in that the blocks can be built only out of the films which have been already finished at that particular time.

Others May Trade Show

The "Little Three" which did not sign the decree—Columbia, United Artists and Universal—have also been affected by the decree operations in an indirect way. Columbia and Universal may also be expected to have on hand next season at all times a number of finished pictures. This would make it possible for those companies to have an occasional trade show, for publicity and exploitation purposes, if for no other reason. Universal already has in work a number of pictures for next season. Also some of the United Artists producers are considering plans to trade show their pictures before selling.

At the current rate of film production all the pictures required for a whole year could be made in several months less than that period. But there are no indications in Hollywood that a seasonal shut-down is planned by any of the companies, even if the labor unions permitted such action. According to present plans the companies will space production normally throughout the year, once the backlog felt necessary for block selling is built up to the size needed.

MGM Sets Decree Trade Showings For Three Pictures in 62 Cities

The first complete trade show announcement, revealing to exhibitors the where, when and what of pre-sales screenings of 1941-42 product as required under the consent decree, came Wednesday from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, announced trade showings in 62 cities for three pictures, starting July 14th.

UNIONS GIVE PRODUCERS, EXHIBITORS ANOTHER $3,000,000 BILL FOR LABOR

Demands for Increased Wages Improved Conditions Made in New Contract Negotiations; Actors, Writers Win Points

Three million dollars in added production costs, which would be passed on to distributors' sales quotas for collection from exhibitors, is the stake in current negotiations being conducted by employer and employee groups in Hollywood. The unions and guilds are making 16 different demands covering increased wages and improved working conditions.

Already producers have agreed to the demands made by the Screen Actors' Guild and to a minimum salary of $125 a week for writers. Creation of a minimum salary for directors, sought by the Svcreen Directors Guild; demands for wage adjustments and new working conditions by the ten IATSE locals, and requests of other guilds and unions, if all are granted 100 percent, may bring the total added production cost to $3,000,000 for the next year, it is estimated.

This is exclusive, of course, of the estimated $3,000,000 in retroactive salaries and overtime now in the process of being paid to workers under the Wages and Hours Act.

Six-Hour Day Sought

Following rejection by the 10 International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees Hollywood unions, of the eight-hour-five-day week proposed by the producers, conferees for both sides met Monday in that production capital to continue negotiations on readjustments of wages and working hours, on the basis of a six-hour day for workers on daily call.

Immediately after the Monday meeting, "progress" was reported on the unions' 16 point demands, proferred several months ago, and only lately being acted upon. The producers were represented at the meeting by their regular labor agents, Pat Casey and Fred Pelton.

The conferees had met last Tuesday, and again on Thursday, June 19th, at which latter meeting the 40-hour week was rejected by the unions.

Believed the aim of the studios in putting forth the rejected proposal was standardization of all contracts with workers not exempt from the provisions of the Wages and Hours Act. The contract work week now varies, for various classifications, from 36 hours to 54. The producers were also understood to have advanced the argument that the unions should have acceded because of the asserted labor shortage.

The unions were said to be insisting not only on maintenance of the present six-hour day, but also on a minimum six-hour call, instead of the present three-hour call.

Meanwhile, while 10,000 members of the studio unions were awaiting back pay due them under the provisions of the Wages and Hours Act, and by the concession of the producers several weeks ago, the extra members of the Screen Actors Guild appear certain of a general wage boost of $309,000 annually, according to a revision of the basic agreement with the producers, scheduled to take effect August 1st, if ratified by the membership.

Members this week were balloting on the revisions, which eliminates the $8.25 and $11 day checks, substituting a new pay bracket of $10.50; which restrict $5.50 calls to sets on which at least 30 extras are called; and which set up a minimum weekly salary for free lance players, of $100, instead of the previous $66.

The revisions also provide pay increases for extras specializing as singers, dancers, skaters, and stand-ins.

In addition, stunt men, who have never had a weekly minimum contract, are to receive $200. On long term contracts, they will receive $100.

Several "Unfair" Charges Against Disney Studio

On Monday, the Screen Cartoonists Guild, Local 852, which has been striking and picketing the Disney Hollywood studio for several weeks, filed more company union charges against the studio, with the National Labor Relations Board local office. Named this time was the Animated Cartoon Associates, formed over the weekend.

At the same time, George Bodle, attorney for the Guild, conferred in Los Angeles with the local office of the Wages and Hours Administration, and immediately thereafter asserted he would charge the Disney studio with violation of the 42-hour week, failure to maintain a record of employee home-work, and of overtime work.

Guild officials said between $50,000 and $100,000 was due their members for overtime. On Tuesday, Ed Dunn, striking animator, filed suit for $230 overtime pay, and charged other violations of the Wages and Hours Act. The Guild said the suit is the first of 400 expected.

Last week, the Guild signed a closed shop contract with Screen Gems, Inc., which releases through Columbia. The contract also gives an average $5 per week raise, a 40-hour week, vacations with pay.

Browne Endorsed by New England IATSE

George E. Browne, president of the IATSE, now under indictment for, and facing trial August 18th on, extortion of $550,000 from four major film companies—Twentieth Century-Fox, Warners, Paramount, and Loew's—this week received endorsement from the New England District convention of the IATSE, at Springfield, Massachusetts.

It was said the vote of confidence in Mr. Browne's regime was unanimous, and that the 69 delegates assailed newspaper attacks which have not only been visited upon Mr. Browne but also upon his personal West Coast representative, Willie Bioff, also named in the indictment, and also to be tried with Mr. Browne in New York Federal Court on August 18th.

Speakers at the convention, business sessions of which were closed to the press, were Lou Krouse, international general secretary and treasurer, who presided; Richard Walsh and James Brennan, vice-president of the international; Kenneth I. Taylor, secretary of the Massachusetts Federation of Labor; and Charles Caffrey, president of the Springfield Central Labor Union.

It was understood subjects discussed included the following: the state legislative committee's report; the Westboro town hall bill; the showing of films in cafes; the 16mm. "menace." Apropos of the latter, it was confirmed Mr. Krouse told delegates the New York office had dispensed bulletins on 16mm. films, warning against them, and charging each local with proper tactics.

OHIO SHOW BOAT VIES WITH FILMS

Providing appreciable competition again this season, Bryant's Show Boat, which has been playing summer seasons in Cincinnati for the past 15 years, has again anchored at the Lawrence Street wharf of the Ohio River. As in previous years, old-time melodramas and burlesques on current productions will be presented.

Massey Fills Equity Council Post Refused

Raymond Massey, actor of stage and screen, over the weekend accepted a post on the council of Actors Equity previously refused by Robert Ross. Mr. Ross had been one of eight members appointed to fill the places of those who resigned from the council after a recent election which they charged would place council control in the hands of "Reds."

Mr. Ross had said, refusing the appointment, that he approved the resignation of the others and therefore would not undo their protest.

Ethel Wilson on Saturday accepted a seat on the council, and with Mr. Massey, represented a filling of all vacancies except those left by Florence Reed and Peggy Wood, vice-presidents, upon whose resignations no action was being taken this week. Miss Wilson said:

"I personally have never seen any of the subversiveness they have been talking about. I don't know that there is any danger; but, if there is, then the old-timers should stand by—and I do feel that I must stand by."

Meanwhile, Bert Lytell, Equity president, is still attempting to have the Dies Congressional Committee on un-Americanism investigate Equity for the alleged Communist influences, and thereby rid it of the taint assertedly given it by frequently publicized charges.

The Mutual Broadcasting System was on Monday threatened with a network-wide strike by the American Federation of Radio Artists, as the result of the union's dispute Friday, June 20th, with an affiliate, station WKRC, Cincinnati. The strike was to have occurred at 12 P.M. E.D.S.T., Tuesday, but was halted after Mutual agreed to conferences which were to occur Wednesday in Chicago.

The strike threat was voiced by Lawrence Tibbett, president of the AFRA, and would have involved not only actors, but also announcers and news commentators, it was said.

George Heller, AFRA secretary, said it demanded Mutual cease servicing its Cincinnati outlet, or face loss of AFRA members' services on all stations.

The Cincinnati dispute was over a contract, for wages and hours. The walkout Friday was the first in the union's history.

Fred Weber, general manager of Mutual, pointed out the difficulty of the network's position: it is bound to AFRA, and also to the Cincinnati station, by separate contracts.

The Screen Actors Guild on Monday night announced it would fully support a strike against Mutual by AFRA, which is one of its sister unions in the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, parent actors' union.

In Philadelphia last week, the Stanley Warner circuit signed a contract with the theatre employees' union, Local B-100, of the IATSE. It extends for two years and nine months, and provides pay increases, on sliding scales, from assistant managers down to theatre porters.

New Fox Story Editor

Henry Klinger has been named associate story editor by Bertram Bloch, newly appointed story editor of Twentieth Century-Fox in New York.

Warners to Make "Life of Churchill"

"The Life of Winston Churchill" will be filmed in England by Warner Brothers, Max Milder, in charge of Warner operations in the United Kingdom, said when he arrived in New York via clipper on Wednesday. The biography of the Prime Minister will be produced at the Teddington studios near London in time for next season. Neither Mr. Milder nor Harry Warner, with whom he went into conference immediately upon arrival, would discuss the topic.

Meanwhile cables from London reported that negotiations for the sale to Warners of the holdings of the late John Maxwell in Associated British Picture Corporation had reached an advanced stage despite objections by British exhibitors. Latest advices say that the deal now is reported to contemplate transfer to Warners of 2,000,000 of the 5,000,000 shares owned by Mrs. Maxwell. Warners would have representation on the board and the right to appoint management.

If half of the Maxwell shares are purchased by WB and an option is retained to purchase the remainder there is some doubt as to what will happen to the five-year Maxwell option on a majority interest in the A shares of Gaumont British.

Exhibitor opposition in England to the sale of Associated to American interests was not appeased by word that Warners might get only half the Maxwell stock. The Cinematograph Exhibitors Association has asked the Board of Trade to stop the deal. Provincial CEA chapters also have registered protest and the subject is slated for general discussion at the July meeting of the General Council.

Budget Set for Good-will Films

A $900,000 U. S. motion picture program, $600,000 to be immediately appropriated and $300,000 covered by contracts to be paid out of future appropriations, is planned by Nelson A. Rockefeller, Coordinator of Commercial and Cultural Relations Between the American Republics, it was disclosed Wednesday in Washington with submission to the House of Representatives of a $900,000,000 deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. Rockefeller, testifying on the activities of his office before the House appropriations Committee at hearings on the bill, explained that the program calls for $250,000 to help American producers finance the making of films on Latin-American themes, including 12 shorts on which the Walt Disney studio is negotiating; $45,000 for aiding the U. S. film industry to produce films for Latin American distribution under contract with the Motion Picture Society for the Americas, a liason agency between the Rockefeller committee and the film industry; $125,000 for the collection and distribution of non-theatricals.

Horne, Condon Leave Disney

Hal Horne, eastern representative and distribution director for Walt Disney Productions, and Richard Condon, his aide, resigned Wednesday, effective July 15th. Toni Spitzer, for several years associated with Disney in special promotional work, will assume Mr. Condon's publicity work.

Film Delegation Sees Hull on Reciprocity

Seeking a clause for motion pictures in reciprocal trade treaties between the American republics a delegation representing the industry journeyed to Washington on Monday to answer questions before the State Department's Committee for Reciprocity Information. Taxation, quotas, import permits, and exchange curbs were among topics which the film delegation was reportedly prepared to discuss.

Carl E. Milliken, foreign affairs expert for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, led the delegation. With him were John Nathan, Paramount supervisor in Argentina, Franklin S. Irby, 20th Century-Fox tax expert, and Eugene F. Walsh, comptroller and assistant treasurer of Universal.

The delegation stressed the importance of motion pictures in developing hemisphere solidarity in the face of impressive foreign propaganda and urged that attention be given relief from present taxes in the making of the proposed agreement with Argentina. Conditions in that country were outlined by Mr. Nathan who told how Nazi newsreels and pictures were dumped in that market. The taxes complained of by the industry were explained by Mr. Walsh.

Paramount no longer holds an interest in the company.

STUDIOS SET STRONGER SPOT FOR SERIES FILMS IN NEW PROGRAMS

Seven of Ten Major Studios Continue Policy; "Hardys", "Charlie Chans", "Blondies", Other Favorites Scheduled

Series pictures, for long highly favored film fare in many a situation, bid fair to continue in their accustomed place, percentage wise, on new season schedules.

As recorded in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of May 11, 1940, a pre-selling season survey showed that more than 10 per cent of the 1940-41 product would fall in the "series" category, exclusive of westerns. As of this week, when some companies are still in doubt whether a particular picture will fall within the 1940-41 or the 1941-42 seasons, best indications are that there will have been some 60 series film delivered by the end of the current season, with seven of the 10 principal studios represented, only Warners, United Artists and Monogram not joining in the trend.

Number Unchanged

And for the new season, despite the partial product announcements from Universal, Republic, UA and Monogram, Columbia and RKO (see page 15), and despite the fact that no announcements at all have come from the other companies, indications are that the studios will supply their accounts with about the same number of series pictures as they did during 1940-41.

If anything, the series idea seems more strongly planted than ever, with individual series being dropped, perhaps, but almost invariably being preplaced with other films of a like nature.

Numerically, Columbia led the list for the current season, on the basis of returns available this week. While dropping the "Five Little Peppers" series after making three in 1939-40, the studio continued with its "Blondie" and other groups, making three "Blondies" in 1940-41, with Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake and Larry Simms in the leading roles of the series inspired by Chic Young's comic strip.

The company is holding an executive meeting in Chicago June 7th and 8th and a general sales convention later, at which time the number of films in their various series may be detemined, but present studio opinion is that all those represented on the current schedule will also appear next season.

Larry Darmour's "Ellery Queen" mysteries, a new series for 1940-41, will probably be presented to the number of four in 1941-42, as they were this season. Another series of detective stories, based on Louis Joseph Vance's books, is the "Lone Wolf" group, of which two have been completed this season, with another three in preparation. Of these, an unknown number will be set for new season release.

With Chester Morris in the title role, there has been one of the "Boston Blackie" series made this year, and another is now in preparation. Whether this will be for 1940-41 or for 1941-42 release has not been decided.

Completed but not yet released is the first of the "Tillie the Toiler" series, with Kay Harris as the title character. Another is being prepared, with two probably set for the new season.

Following closely on the heels of Columbia in number of series films made during 1940-41 was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which has already released or is currently making 12 pictures in that category.

The most successful of any series pictures made, in all probability, the "Hardy" group, with Mickey Rooney in the title role, will account for two before the season ends, and an equal number for next year according to present information. Two "Dr. Kildare" films have been made and another is slated for this year, with another three for the new film year, when there will also be a "Tarzan" picture, with Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan.

MGM this season started a new series, of which the first was "Keeping Company," with John Shelton and Ann Rutherford. Another of the group is slated for the current season, tentatively titled "Keeping Married," and there will be two for 1941-42, as well.

One of the "Nick Carter" pictures has been made and another is set to go for this year, starring Walter Pidgeon, and there will also be two for 1941-42. The same number of "Maisie" pictures, with Ann Sothern as the title character, are ready for both this season and next, while there was one "Thin Man" film, with Myrna Loy and William Powell, this year, and will be another next season.

Twentieth Century-Fox has its convention set for July 9th-11th in Los Angeles. At that time, some action is to be expected on the place of series films in the studio's new season schedule. This season, which ends August 1st for Twentieth-Fox, saw 10 series picture made at the Westwood lot.

"Charlie Chan" Continues

One of the oldest series is Twentieth-Fox's "Charlie Chan" group, which had Warner Oland in the title role until his death, and now features Sidney Toler. Twenty-five of these were made before January 1st, 1941; three are on the current season's program, and another three will be seen in 1941-42. Also accounting for three pictures this season and next is the "Michael Shayne" group, with Lloyd Nolan as the detective.

Because Cesar Romero is needed in major productions, there will only be one made in 1941-42, in all likelihood, with four having been released before the end of this season.

A new series is on the agenda, as well. "Private Nurse" is the first, and the group will feature Brenda Joyce and Jane Darwell. There will probably be two of these this year and next.

For the new season, RKO will not release any more of the Stephens-Lang produced "Dr. Christian" pictures, starring Jean Hersholt. Three were on the 1940-41 schedule. Of the "Scattergood Baines" series made by Pyramid Productions, three will have appeared by the end of this season, and there will probably be another three next year.

The RKO convention is slated for June 16th-19th in New York, at which time it may be decided whether any of the series films are to be included in the first blocks of five offered by the company, and also what the status of the "Lum 'n' Abner" series is to be for the 1941-42 season. It is now definite that there are to be no more of the "Anne" pictures which starred Anne Shirley.

Following the first two "Mexican Spitfire" films with Lupe Velez and Leon Erroll, RKO decided to change the titles to include the name "Lord Epping," and added Zazu Pitts to the cast. This series is to be continued.

Now being made in England, the "Saint" series is being replaced here by a group based on Michael Arlen's story, "The Gay Falcon." As he did in the "Saint" group made in Hollywood, George Sanders will have the title role.

Universal followed closely on the heels of RKO in terms of number of series pictures delivered during 1940-41, with seven of the Arlen-Devine outdoor action films. For 1941-42, these will be replaced by a series of seven pictures with similar background, with Dick Foran, Leo Carillo and Andy Devine heading the cast. These, of course, are in addition to the Johnny Mack Brown westerns also made to the number of seven annually.

Aviation at Paramount

The date of Paramount's convention has not yet been set, but it is known that the studio will have the same series as this year during next season, though not how many will be made in each group. For 1940-41, there have been three of the aviation action films announced, made by Picture Corporation of America. There will probably be the same number next year.

There will be at least two of the "Henry Aldrich" group next season, featuring Jimmy Lydon and Charlie Smith instead of Jackie Cooper and Eddie Bracken, who had the two leading roles at first. The latest of the series, "Henry Aldrich for President," has been completed but is slated for the new season release.

Republic has made none of its "Higgins Family" films for about a year, and has started a new group, known as the "Mr. District Attorney" series, the first of which had Dennis O'Keefe in the leading role. Two or three of these are scheduled for 1941-42, with the next to be "Mr. District Attorney Almost Gets Married."

Hal Roach is the latest to join the series-film makers in Hollywood. His first ten are to be distributed between April and August, 1942. The series are in these categories: the Army, college life, romance, musical, and "Miss Polly." Titles of the first five are: "Niagara Falls," "Tanks a Million," "All American Girl," "Miss Polly," "Fiesta." The latter will be in color. In the second group are: "Brooklyn Orchid," "Hayfoot," "College Nights," "Please Miss Polly" and "Cubana." The latter will be in color.

FILM COURSES SET BY U. OF ALABAMA

Motion pictures will play a big part in classroom work at the University of Alabama this summer, Dr. John R. McLure, dean of the University Summer School, said. Through cooperation of the National Youth Administration, which will furnish projection machines, films and operators for the classes, a library of the latest "audio-visual" education equipment is being assembled.

General Donovan, U.S.A.

Col. William J. Donovan, chief outside counsel for RKO, and one of the senior lawyers in the basic consent decree negotiations between the motion picture industry and the Government, on Monday became a major general in the U. S. Army in charge of military intelligence, by special appointment of President Roosevelt. His agency will coordinate the Government's efforts to control propaganda activities of Axis agents.

70% OF EXHIBITOR ARBITRATION COMPLAINTS ARE ON CLEARANCE

New Cases in Los Angeles and Chicago Bring Total to 82 in Quiet Week After Decision of Appeals Board

The motion picture field office files of the American Arbitration Association reached a total of 82 cases this week as two new cases were entered at Chicago and Los Angeles. Fifty-eight of the cases were on clearance, about 70%. No decisions were forthcoming during the week, unusually quiet, and without the wave of new complaints which some observers thought might follow the first decision of the Appeals Board on June 12th.

Los Angeles, capital of motion picture production, received its fourth case on Saturday when the partners of an independent theatre enterprise filed a clerance complaint in behalf of two theatres. D. Lemucchi and James J. Vanducci, operators of the Vanducci and Lemucchi Theatre Co., at Bakersfield, entered a complaint in behalf of their River theatre at Oildale, Calif., and the Arvin theatre at Arvin, Calif. Both theatres are in small central California communities.

The partners name Paramount, Warner Brothers, Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plus the United West Coast Theatres and first-run houses in neighboring towns. They charge that a 56 day clearance enjoyed by them over the Oildale and 28 days over the River are unreasonable.

Chicago

A demand for arbitration on clearance was filed June 18th with John F. Sullivan, clerk of the Motion Picture Arbitration Tribunal in the Chicago territory, by James Steininger, operator of Lawn Theatre, Chicago. This is the third case filed with the local board since its inception and the first entered since February.

Mr. Steininger claims that the clearance granted the Marquette, Colony and Highway theatres, all operated by Joseph Stern, over the Lawn, by Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, RKO-Radio, Loew's, Inc., and Warner Brothers, is unreasonable. The three theatres now precede the Lawn by two to five weeks.

The prevailing motion picture trade practice in the Chicago releasing territory permits the distributors to rent pictures in the second week of city release to any theatre charging a 20-cent adult evening admission price. Steininger claims the named distributors have repeatedly refused to sell the Lawn theatre in any week previous to the 4th and/or 7th week of city release. He said that while the Lawn charges the required admission it is obliged to run pictures later, due to the excessive and unreasonable clearance granted by the distributors to the Marquette, Colony and Highway. The arbitration demand asks an award reducing the clearance of the theatres involved.

New York

At New York the conscription of an attorney for military service prompted the withdrawal of the tribunal's 11th case, the clearance complaint of the Ramsey Theatre, Ramsey, N. J., against the Big Five. The settlement of the case and its withdrawal was announced by the Arnold Amusement Corporation, operator of the theatre after its attorney, Marcus Werther, a brother of Lester Werther, secretary of the Arnold Corporation, had been drafted. The action, reported May 10th, asked a reduction of the seven-day clearance held by the Lafayette, Suffern and Warner theatres in Ridgewood, N. J. No arbitrator or hearing date had been selected.

ARBITRATION CASES FILED TO DATE

The following is a summary of the arbitration cases filed to date:

Filed This Week:

Los Angeles—One on Clearance
Chicago—One on Clearance

Previously Reported:

Clearance	58
Some Run	21
Withholding Prints	1
Total to June 25th	82

Hearings Held This Week:

New Haven—Case No. 1
New York—Case No. 5

Settled This Week:

Denver—Case No. 3

Denver

The Denver arbitration office has a clean docket with the settlement, as reported last week, of the McDonald brothers' demand for better clearance for their Nile Theatre at Mitchell, Neb., over several theatres operated by the Gibralter Enterprises in nearby towns. The hearing had been postponed twice, finally to June 23, in the hope of encouraging a settlement.

New Haven

The first arbitration hearing in New Haven on the complaint of the Forest Theatre Corporation, operator of the Forest, West Haven, against all five consenting distributors, on reduction of clearance between the Rivoli and the Forest, was continued until Wednesday, after a full day of testimony on Monday, June 23rd, before Frederick H. Wiggin, arbitrator. Complainant, by its attorney, T. Holmes Bracken, asked for "reduction" of clearance, rather than "elimination," as the written complaint stated, under Section VIII of the consent decree. It was asserted that the present 14-day margin was unreasonable, that it worked hardship and that it caused loss of business at the Forest, because the Rivoli was slow in booking pictures, sometimes delaying the Forest playdate 60 or 90 days after first run.

E. Michael Casioli, president of the Forest Corporation, testified that the 937-seat Forest, opened in December, 1939, was constructed at a cost of $105,000, that it was 1.6 miles from the Rivoli in the separate fire district of Allingtown, and that admission was 28 cents, compared with the Rivoli's 30 cents. The White Way, which follows the Howard by 14 days, was also discussed, and Mr. Cascioli said that since the Howard dates its pictures promptly on availability, the White Way, an older, less modern competitor, charging 20 cents top, often played pictures on the same date or before the Forest.

In a written statement, Mr. Mahan submitted that the arbitrator has no power to grant the complainant change of run, that the existing clearance is reasonable.

Whelan, arbitrator, has granted the defendants an additional week to reply.

BREEN TALKS ABOUT POLICY AND ENTERTAINMENT PRODUCT FOR RKO

New Production Head Scores "Controversial" Films; Welles To Make Three for Company; New Talent To Be Acquired

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

Stocky, staccato Joseph I. Breen, entering production at a vigorous 50 years of age as chief executive of RKO-Radio studio, pledged that company to a policy of "pictures for entertainment only," in a 90-minute interview with the trade and news press last Tuesday.

"Escapist pictures?" one interviewer inquired.

"Escapist pictures—yes," he shot back; "that's what the public wants, isn't it?" Nobody gave him an argument.

Pressed for his opinion on pictures with a message, the man who served the industry as Production Code Administrator from December, 1933, to last week, told his listeners: "In my considered judgment, when you put preachment, religion or politics on the screen you get into controversy with your audience."

Welles to Make Three

Orson Welles, whose "Citizen Kane" has been variously catalogued but never ignored, will produce a minimum of three pictures annually, possibly four, for RKO-Radio, Mr. Breen disclosed. A contract is in the making, not yet signed, he said, describing the status as "an amicable understanding."

Mr. Welles will produce, direct, write and act, although not necessarily performing all of these functions in all cases. He will be given free rein, however, and three of the productions over which he will preside are known quantities. These are "The Smiler with a Knife," "Heart of Darkness," both mentioned as Welles projects prior to production of "Citizen Kane," and an untitled story with a Mexican setting, now in script form. On account of some expressions of opinion on the suitability and timeliness of this story as planned, said Mr. Breen, the locale will be changed, possibly to Dakar.

"Citizen Kane" will be made available to exhibitors in one of the company's blocks of five, probably the second, Mr. Breen said, declaring that this inclusion of a publicly exhibited picture is permissible under consent decree procedure because exhibitions have been given at advanced admission prices.

"RKO-Radio needs some new talent," Mr. Breen said, "and we will be acquiring top-flight producers, directors, writers and players." Acquisition of players has commenced, he said, naming Dorothy Comingore and other players from the cast of "Citizen Kane."

No names of producers, directors or writers scheduled to join the studio were revealed, although the new chieftain of the Gower Street plant left no doubt that he considered the writing branch of production fundamental in importance.

Drawing upon his eight years of experience as production Code Administrator during which he said he had examined an average of three and five-eighths script treatments of every picture produced by all studios, Mr. Breen cited cases to establish his point that good stories make stars and bad stories break them.

Discussing Orson Welles as indicative of the type of writing talent he seeks and remarking that his acquaintance with Mr. Welles antedates the producer's entry into film affairs, Mr. Breen said: "Why, you can't go for a ride in an automobile with him without his concocting plots for you out of everything you pass on the way—he'll dash you off a screen play without a minute's warning."

Company policy on production of pictures with a South American setting and theme is not a fixed one, according to Mr. Breen, who said: "We are committed, of course, to the good neighbor policy," but added that no picture definitely of the class indicated is in preparation at this time. A recent RKO picture of that nature which met with some reported resentment has been in process of revision for South American exhibition and it is expected that objections will have been overcome, it was disclosed.

Responding alertly to a question as to whether his resignation as Production Code Administrator had been in any degree associated with public protests received "since the recent loosening of code interpretations," the executive challenged the use of the word "looseness" and declared that there had been no upswing in the number of protests received. "We received 75,000 protests in the first year of our operations—1934," he said, "and we have had less than one thousand, total, in the last two years."

"No," he reiterated, "there has been no loosening. But something else has happened. Producers have read and learned the code. They have learned how to tell their stories in conformity with its provisions. The code is an affirmative—not a negative—document, a great document."

Reports that the company would move to larger quarters were denied. Although need of more space was affirmed, difficulty of obtaining steel, glass and other materials required for studio building, and now on national defense priorities lists, was given as the reason for postponing removal from Gower Street at this time. Overflow activity expected to develop as the new production plans take shape is to be handled at the company's studio in Culver City, now operated in part as a rental lot.

FREE CITY MOVIES SET IN READING

In addition to two drive-in theatres, Reading, Pa., exhibitors face a new competitive factor in the announcement that free movies will be presented Tuesdays and Thursdays throughout the summer at Bengor's Municipal Park in the suburban area. The new park was dedicated May 30th. Outdoor drive-in theatres, Shankweiler's theatre near Allentown and the Shimerville theatre at Emaus, opened for the season earlier this month.

Nicholas Webber Dead

Nicholas Webber, former circuit operator of Waterloo, Iowa, died in that town last week, after a month's illness. A widow survives. Mr. Webber operated his theatres from 1910 through 1917.

Court Term Extended In Schenck Case

Federal Judge Edward A. Conger on Tuesday extended the term of the Federal Court in the Joseph M. Schenck-Joseph H. Moscowitz income tax fraud case, until August, 1942. The extension was made at the request of Mr. Schenck and Mr. Moskowtiz, and with the assent of Mathias F. Correa, United States Attorney. The latter's office later refused explanation of the extension, but it was understood it would allow the trial judge, Grover M. Moscowitz, extension of power to chance sentences of the defendants, who were convicted in April of defrauding the Government in Mr. Schenck's income tax returns for 1935-37.

Under ordinary court rules, the trial judge retains power to modify sentences for only three months after imposition.

The case is now under appeal. Attorneys for both men filed a record on appeal Monday and briefs will be drawn up this summer. There may be an October hearing, and so the defendants, it is said, wish to avoid difficulties of jurisdiction and the re-study of the case which would be necessitated by a shift in judges.

The two defendants are seeking a reversal of conviction, alleging errors in Judge Moscowitz's charge to the jury.

Robbins Scores Points

Herman Robbins, president of National Screen Service, and his company, made two points Tuesday, in current litigation with Charles Casanave, formerly high executive of the company. The New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, dismissed a Casanave motion asking that his methods of obtaining money while an NSS officer, were valid; and it also reversed a Westchester County Court decision, which had consolidated the Robbins' suit against Mr. Casanave, and the latter's counter suit. The latter reversal means Mr. Robbin's suit is returned to New York County.

Loew's Division Managers

Division managers of the Loew circuit met in New York, Tuesday, at the home office, to discuss Summer operations. Joseph R. Vogel, in charge of theatres outside New York City, presided. Among attenders were Carter Barron, Washington; W. A. Finney, Atlanta; Charles Raymond, Cleveland; Charles Kurtzman, Boston; Mike Cullen, Columbus, Ohio; Harry Shaw, New Haven.

Sherman Succeeds Bell

Irwin Sherman of the Columbia exchange operations department has been named to succeed Si Bell of that department in New York, who was assigned recently to the Philadelphia exchange as a salesman.

Pickford Ill

Mary Pickford, United Artists' partner-producer, who recently formed a new producing combination with Maurice Silverstone, former chief of the distributing company, this week lay ill in Cleveland Clinic.

UA'S ELASTIC PROGRAM; FOX SET FOR CONVENTION; OTHERS MAKE PLANS

Salesmen To Be Told of Films for Release at Periodic Meetings; Warners To Convene in July; MGM Has 45-50

Marked up for new season's product progress this week was the seventh pre-seasonal sales convention by United Artists of the 11 distributor meetings to be held.

Marked up, too, were Warners' preparations for a convention at an undetermined date late in July, and the decision of that company to hold a Canadian convention earlier; and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's disclosure of no national convention and a continuance of a 45-to-50 feature commitment; of Paramount's streamlining of its distribution setup in the East for the decree and the assembling of top home office and company officials in Hollywood on plans for 1941-42; and Universal's revamping of short subject plans.

RKO finished its convention late last week, likewise National Screen Service. Republic Pictures continued to report circuit deals for the new selling season.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, on Wednesday, became the first of the "Big Five" actually to specify blocks-of-five selling plans and advance trade showing dates as required under the decree (see page 12), the while the company proceeded with other items in the formulation of its product and policy setup for 1941-42.

U. A. Announces an "Elastic" Policy

United Artists will no longer inform the trade of a minimum or maximum number of pictures forthcoming; its new product will be announced at periodic sales meetings throughout the year, it was announced by Arthur W. Kelly, the company's temporary acting chief, and vice-president in charge of sales, at the two-day regional sales convention in New York City's Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, Monday and Tuesday.

"Quality, rather than quantity, will be the keynote of both production and distribution, in 1941-42," Mr. Kelly said, emphasizing that that had been the company's policy through its 23 years of business.

It was further announced that the regional meetings—New York's being the first of the season—would be held periodically through the season; and that the sales personnel, at these meetings, would be presented with films to be offered "more or less immediately" to exhibitors.

The new policy, of periodic announcements rather than promises of an approximate number of pictures, is not only a change in UA policy; it is also a departure from usual practice by the majors.

Mr. Kelly said films would be available within the next three months from independent producers Alexander Korda, Walter Wanger, Edward Small, Gabriel Pascal, Hal Roach, Arnold Pressburger, and William Sekely.

Among some of the authors who are expected to contribute screen material are the following: George Bernard Shaw, Alexander Dumas, Rudyard Kipling, John Colton, E. Lloyd Sheldon, Richard Washburn Child, Barre Lyndon, Franken Meloney, Margaret Mayo, Salisbury Field, R. C. Sheriff, Walter Reisch, Donald Henderson Clarke, Jane Murfin, Howard Estabrook, Jules Furthman, Patterson McNutt, Jack DeWitt, Rian James, Jeff Moffitt and Paul Gallico.

Among the directors engaged for a number of releases are Ernst Lubitsch, Josef von Sternberg, Henry Hathaway, Julien Duvivier, Zoltan Korda, Tim Whelan and Reinhold Schunzel. Mr. Korda and Mr. Pasca. will be the producer-directors on one or more of their productions.

UA releases to be available shortly, Mr. Kelly said, are: "Lydia," starring Merle Oberon, from Mr. Korda; "Sundown," starring Gene Tierney, from Mr. Wanger; "International Lady," with George Brent, from Edward Small; "Major Barbara," with Wendy Hiller and Rex Harrison, from Mr. Shaw and Mr. Pascal; Arnold Pressburger's "The Shanghai Gesture," with Victor Mature, to be directed by Josef von Sternberg; William Sekely's "New Wine," with Ilona Massey, Binnie Barnes and Alan Curtis; Hal Roach's two new featurettes, "Niagara Falls" and "Tanks a Million," and Michael Balcon's "Three Cockeyed Sailors."

Mr. Kelly also noted that Mr. Balcon plans to produce three additional new season releases for United Artists under the company's deal with the Ealing Studios in England.

Roosevelt Is Visitor

Captain James Roosevelt was a visitor at Monday's sessoins. He is head of Globe productions; but his military duties (he has returned from the Near and Far East, where he was official observer for the Government) are expected to make contributions to the company's new schedule from his studio improbable.

After the announcement by Mr. Kelly, spokesmen for the company said that the fact that nine pictures were ready for release was not to be construed as a notice the company would attempt to sell them in a block. The company will adhere to its policy of marketing pictures individually, it was indicated.

Mr. Kelly said the next series of regional meetings would be held September 15th, again beginning in New York, and followed by similar meetings in New Orleans, Chicago, Cincinnati and San Francisco.

In attendance were home office executives, Eastern representatives of UA producers, and the sales staffs of six Eastern exchanges. From the home office were:

Harry L. Gold, vice-president and Eastern general salesmanager; Haskell M. Masters, Western general sales manager; Harry D. Buckley, vice-president in charge of corporate affairs; Paul N. Lazarus, contract manager; Walter Gould, foreign sales chief; Monroe W. Greenthal, director of advertising and publicity; David E. Weshner, director of exploitation; Albert Margolies, publicity director; Phil Dow, assistant to Gold; Seymour Poe, assistant to Masters; Samuel Cohen, foreign publicity director; Len Daly, Charles Steele and N. A. Thompson.

The selling staff at the meeting was headed by Arthur Silverstone and John J. Dervin, district managers, and Moe Streimer, special home office representative.

The producers' representatives included: Steven Pallos, Morris Helprin and Emanuel Silverstone of the Alexander Korda organization; Lowell V. Calvert, representing David O. Selznick; Harry Kosiner, representing Walter Wanger; J. J. Milstein, representing Edward Small; Richard Rowland and the Loew-Lewin organization; Louis Hyman and Fred McConnell, representing Sol Lesser; Edward Peskay for

United Artists Buys Fairbanks Stock, For Re-Sale to Capra, Selznick

Frank Capra and David O. Selznick, independent producers, may soon be partner-producers for United Artists, succeeding the late Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., and the insurgent Samuel Goldwyn, in rounding out the U. A. partner-owner roster, which now comprises Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, and Alexander Korda. The Los Angeles County Superior Court on Monday confirmed the sale to U. A. of the Fairbanks estate's $400,000 of shares in the company. The company is to resell these to Mr. Capra and Mr. Selznick. Previous objections to the deal were withdrawn Monday by Mr. Fairbanks' widow, Sylvia, the former Lady Ashley.

She had contended the stock was worth more than the $400,000—$100 per share; and had hired attorneys to prevent the liquidation, pending a valuation.

The court gave its favorable ruling on the understanding the price of $100 per share would apply in sales to Mr. Capra and Mr. Selznick, and that they would each purchase 2,000 shares.

The Bank of America was executor of the Fairbanks estate.

In court, Monday, N. J. Ross and Isaac Pacht represented Mrs. Fairbanks; Sidney Westzler, of Preston & Files, appeared for the bank; Maynard J. Toll, of Omelveny & Myers, appeared for other Fairbanks heirs; and no one represented U. A.

Mr. Selznick said in New York Tuesday the court decision removed final obstacles to the assumption by him and Mr. Capra of U. A. partnerships. It was hinted on that day, too, that he would make two pictures, and Mr. Capra one, for U. A.'s new season. Observers in New York also reported the two men not only would buy the Fairbanks stock, but also the Goldwyn shares, again equally. The assumption of shares of the Fairbanks and Goldwyn stock would give each as much interest in the company as each of the other partners.

Mr. Selznick refused to indicate whether he would accept the reportedly proffered U. A. presidency and board chairmanship.

Fox Will Have 20 Films Completed by Convention

When delegates from the home office, the branches, and other sectors of Twentieth Century-Fox, and of National Theatres arrive in Los Angeles for the annual Fox sales convention, July 16th through 18th, the studio will have completed approximately 20 films for the new season, it was reported from the production capital on Monday. In addition, it was said, the studio has guaranteed delivery to the distribution department of five pictures within one week after the meeting.

The anticipated schedule would also have another five given over by August 10th, and by September 1st, some 15 pictures would be offered by the company, under the decree.

It is said the convention gathering will see incompletely edited versions of at least nine films, some of which are of high budgets.

Pictures in work, or soon to be started, include "A Yank in the R. A. F.," "How Green Was My Valley," "Belle Starr," "Wild Geese Calling," "Charley's Aunt," "Sun Valley Serenade," "Week-end in Havana," "Riders of the Purple Sage," "Man at Large," "Marry the Boss' Daughter," "Confirm or Deny," "Small Town Deb," "Swamp Water," "Dressed to Kill," "Charlie Chan in Rio," and "Private Nurse."

Warners' Canada, Chicago Meetings

Warners will hold its annual sales convention in Chicago, probably beginning July 28th, it is reported. In addition, like Paramount two weeks ago, it will hold a separate Canadian sales convention before its American convention, it was said in Toronto, over the weekend, following the return there from New York of the company's Canadian sales manager, Wolfe Cohen.

Mr. Cohen spent last week in New York conferring at the home office with top sales executives, on the company's expected first Canadian sales convention. Whether the company will sell in Canada as it will sell here, under the consent decree, or sell in season blocks as has been the practice, was an announcement expected shortly. It was intimated the company will probably sell season's product en masse, in Canada. Dates for the Canadian sales convention, which may be held in Montreal rather than Toronto, were to be disclosed before the week's end.

Jesse Lasky, producer of "Sergeant York" for the company, said on his arrival in New York Tuesday morning, in order to attend the film's premiere at the Astor in that city July 2nd, that he would continue releasing through the company.

MGM Instructing Field Staffs on New Policy

Not holding a sales convention this year, MGM, through its sales executives, is instructing field sales staffs on selling of new product under the consent decree, and imparting other information usually given the salesmen at a convention. The executives are visiting the exchanges.

Expressing optimism for the future of the picture business, Mr. Rodgers announced Tuesday the pictures scheduled for release by his company during the summer season.

The schedule was as follows: "The Big Store," with the Marx Bros., June 20; "They Met in Bombay," with Clark Gable and Rosalind Russell, June 27; "Barnacle Bill," with Wallace Beery and Virginia Weidler, July 4; "Navy Blue and Gold," starring James Stewart (re-issue), July 11; A. J. Conin's "The Stars Look Down," July 18; "Ringside Maisie," with Ann Sothern, July 25; "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," with Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone and the screen Hardy family, August 1; "Mary Names the Day," the new Dr. Kildare picture, August 8; "Blossoms in the Dust," with Greer Garson and Walter Pidgeon, August 16: "Whistling in the Dark," with Red Skelton, Ann Rutherford, Virginia Grey, Rags Ragland and Conrad Veidt, August 22, and "When Ladies Meet," with Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, Greer Garson and Herbert Marshall, August 29.

Paramount Merges Its Three New York Exchanges

Streamlining its selling units for operations under the consent decree, as have the other companies, Paramount last week consolidated its three New York Metropolitan exchanges, the New York, Brooklyn, and New Jersey. Milton Kusell is district manager of the combination, and Henry Randel, former manager for Brooklyn, the manager. Myron Sattler, former New York branch manager, is now sales manager for the consolidated branches; E. H. Bell, former New Jersey branch manager, will be in a sales capacity in the new exchange.

The annual meeting of the directors' board will occur July 10th. It was postponed from Thursday, June 19th.

Universal's Shorts Policy Is Revised

Universal's feature production policy will be applied to its short subjects, William Scully, distribution chief, said in New York Wednesday. The shorts will be more sharply studded with star names, star bands, and unique ideas rating marquee mention, he said.

Mr. Scully's disclosure came after a report given by short subjects sales manager Bernard Kreisler, following a tour of 31 branch offices and a conference at the studio.

Top name-bands and screen, stage and radio stars will be seen in a new series to be called "Personality and Name-band musicals." Generous budgets have been allotted to these and four will be released this summer replacing the present two-reel novelty musicals. In these will be seen Jan Garber, Henry King, Skinnay Ennis, Russ Morgan and their orchestras along with other screen and radio personalities. The Jan Garber picture is called "Shadows in Swing"; Henry King's, "Music a la King"; Russ Morgan's "Music in the Morgan Manner"; and Skinnay Ennis', "Once Upon a Summertime."

In the new line-up, 15 one-reel subjects, each with a separate title and known as "Variety Views," will replace the present series known as "Going Places." Five of these will be in color. The Variety reels will include sports, politics, international relations, comedy and other interesting highlights of life.

The first subject features the Dionne Quintuplets and Dr. Dafoe.

The "Stranger Than Fiction" series is to be released by separate title for each reel. Sequences in this line-up of 15 subjects will emphasize locations for possible local publicity.

Completing the subjects are 13 Andy Panda shorts in technicolor of which 6 are based on Andy Panda and 7 on Panda's Pals.

Universal is also now compiling a special two-reel featurette in which the outstanding thrill events of the past decade will appear.

Four Disney Features To Be Released by RKO

Four Walt Disney features and 18 short subjects—the Disney studio's entire new season output—will be distributed by RKO, George J. Schaefer, president of the distributing company said at the company's annual sales convention, Monday through Wednesday of last week. At the convention also the company disclosed it would produce 40 to 45 features for the new season, a drop from the committment of 49 to 53 for the current season.

The four Disney features are "Fantasia," on a roadshow basis now; "Dumbo of the Circus," "Bambi," and an untitled Mickey Mouse feature. "The Reluctant Dragon," being released this month, belongs to the current season.

At the close of the RKO convention, it was reported that productions from Samuel Goldwyn, Orson Welles, and Mr. Dinsey would not be included in the blocks of five films offered in consent decree selling. These productions will be sold individually, probably on percentage. Observers, considering percentage pictures contemplated, reported the company might have one in each block of five.

The convention attendees saw eight RKO releases: "The Reluctant Dragon," "Jungle Cavalcade," "Tom, Dick, and Harry," "My Life With Caroline," "Parachute Battalion," "Before the Fact," "The Devil and Daniel Webster," and "Father Takes a Wife."

Republic Closes More 1941-42 Deals

Its 1941-42 product has been sold by Republic Pictures to the Griffith circuit of 138 theatres in Oklahoma and Texas; and to the Essaness circuit of Chicago and the S. J. Gregory circuit of Indiana and Illinois.

The first annual national sales convention of National Screen Service was concluded Thursday, June 19th, after four days, during which George Dembow, vice-president in charge of sales, had presided.

M. H. Hoffman, picture pioneer, now in New York arranging the production schedule of his newly formed Liberty National Pictures Corporation, said in that city Tuesday that pictures would issue from the unit at the rate of one every two weeks, when the work begins at the Hollywood studio.

TRIPLES AND DOUBLES AGAIN HIT BY INDEPENDENTS AND LEGISLATORS

Chicago Exhibitors Ban Dual Features, Plan Institutional Selling Campaigns; Illinois Senate Kills Limiting Bill

Double and triple bills, summer slump and other irksome exhibition matters were again brought up this week for concerted exhibitor action, with the net result that independents in Chicago finally and actually banned some triple feature shows and at the same time decided to protect their box offices against seasonal depression by extra institutional selling effort. Action on these and related matters was taken also in Columbus, Ohio, St. Louis, and elsewhere.

One of the potential threats to dual shows vanished Wednesday afternoon when the Illinois Senate killed the Sandquist anti-duals bill, limiting film showings to 135 minutes, unless there is an intermission of 15 minutes per hour. The House had passed the bill, which is similar to one passed by the legislature two years ago and vetoed by the Governor.

Call for Summer Support

National Allied States Association in an official bulletin this week lists some of the factors which, in the opinion of those directing the organization, are responsible for lowered theatre attendance. The factors are a dearth of important pictures during the Summer months; 16 mm film competition; and competition from other entertainment mediums.

Apropos of the asserted dearth of big pictures, the bulletin remarks:

"The distributors appear to think that it is good business to carry over all strong pictures until the next season, rather than to release any of them while business is so bad.

"This means surrendering the field for the time being to rival forms of entertainment, with the accompanying risk that the public may get entirely out of the movie-going habit."

New York's Independent Theatre Owners Association, representing about 300 theatres, voted to revert to single features late Wednesday, if the major circuits will do the same. A committee is to be formed.

Meanwhile, attempting to stimulate business and check boxoffice decreases, Allied of Illinois met last Wednesday at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, with local exchange men. No definite plans were laid.

Allied members again favored, officially, single features. Jack Kirsch, president, said: "For three years, I have listened to various motion picture studio executives say they are opposed to double features; yet they do nothing to remedy the situation. Let's have some action from them, not just conversation. . . . I'm sure that if the large circuits would take the lead in eliminating double features, every independent exhibitor in Chicago will gladly follow and give them the doubt on any clearance."

Present were: Clyde Eckhardt, 20th Century-Fox branch manager; Rud Lohrenz, Warner district manager, and Sidney Rose, Warner branch manager; M. M. Gottlieb, Universal district manager; James Donahue, Paramount branch manager; Frank Flaherty, Columbia sales manager; Ben E. Eisenberg, United Artists branch manager; W. E. Banford, MGM branch manager. Exploitation men present were: W. G. Bishop and Gene Rich, MGM; Fred Bartow, Paramount; Jack Thoma, Columbia, and Monroe Rubinger, Warners.

GRIFFITH SELLS DEFENSE STAMPS

To further the sale of United States Defense Saving Bonds the Griffith theatre circuit of Dallas, Tex., has distributed albums with one ten cent, one 25 cent and one 50 cent saving stamp to each of its employees.

The employees are urged to buy additional stamps each week to aid the Government's defense program. R. E. Griffith, president, in announcing his plans at a meeting pledged 100 per cent cooperation on the part of his company and personnel.

Through the efforts of Mr. Kirsch a triple feature situation that infested a certain section of Chicago and promised to spread to others has been adjusted.

Two weeks ago independent exhibitors on the northwest side of the city started a triple feature policy against each other. Mr. Kirsch brought the participating managers together this week, with the result the practice will be discontinued.

The Irving, an Essaness circuit house; the Drake and Portage thetares, operated by the GCS circuit, and the Commodore, run by Nat Gumbiner, will eliminate triples on June 29th. The Milford and Rivoli, Meltzer Bros.' houses, and the Admiral, Revue and Fox, GCS theatres, stop triples on July 6th.

Mr. Kirsch was also successful in getting the agreement of the managers to eliminate all 10 cent days, being firmly against any further admission cuts by his members.

Recent tests conducted in Columbus, Ohio, to determine public preference between single and double features shows an overwhelming majority for single bills. Columbus, the capital of Ohio, with a population of roughly 300,000, is considered the worst overseated situation in the country, according to a recent poll by P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of America, showing a total of 53 theatres, with a combined seating capacity of 46,000, and more large and pretentious theatres continuing to be built, particularly in neighborhood and suburban locations.

Theatre Tests Reaction

The latest test to "feel the pulse of the public" on the double feature question, which has and is perplexing the various departments of the industry, was conducted last week, ending June 20, by the 3,016-seat RKO Palace, located in the heart of the downtown business sector, directly across from Loew's Broad, and within two squares of Loew's Ohio and the RKO Grand, comprising the four first runs in Columbus. The Palace played "In the Navy" dualed with "For Beauty's Sake" as a matinee program, and continued with "In the Navy" as a single feature in the evening, with the same price scale prevailing throughout the day.

"Our experiment was highly successful, and, after we dispose of our present double feature booking commitments, I am heartily in favor of adopting a single feature policy," commented C. Harry Schreiber, city manager, and manager of the Palace.

A poll was taken in the lobby and the result showed approximately 73 per cent of the patrons favoring single bills, about 19 per cent with a leaning toward double features, and approximately eight per cent with a negative or indifferent attitude, expressing themselves as "not caring which policy was adopted."

"The most surprising angle of the experiment," Mr. Schreiber continued, "was the large number of key executives in local business and industry who went out of their way to stop and express their approval of single features, adding that they were voicing the sentiments of the majority of their employees."

As a result of last week's survey, the Palace, beginning in the middle of July, will play single bills in the afternoon, double bills at night.

Prospects for the adoption of a bill limiting the length of theatrical performances in Missouri this year are dim in view of an announcement from Jefferson City, Mo., that the Missouri legislature probably will adjourn within two weeks.

Milton F. Napier, counsel for the Better Film Council of Greater St. Louis, sponsors of the bill, said it seemed apparent the bill would not be voted on this session. The measure, aimed at eliminating multiple feature programs, would limit the length of a show to two and a half hours without an intermission.

The score of persons who testified at hearings conducted by the Senate Municipal Corporations Committee spoke in favor of the measure; no one attacked it. However, scores of other bills will likely suffer the same fate as this as the legislature winds up a hectic session. As the others, the film council's bill was not even voted out of the committee.

Meanwhile, H. C. Reigel, Jr., manager of the St. Louis Theatre in St. Louis, Fanchon & Marco house, began a poll of residential sections of the city—from which the theatre draws most of its trade—to determine the attitude of residents on single, double and triple features, and serials, giveaways and short subjects. Questionnaires are being handed the residents by canvassers, and bonus tickets to the St. Louis Theatre will be awarded those who answer the queries.

Carolina Owners Meet

The Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina meet at Myrtle Beach, latter state, Sunday through Tuesday, with president C. H. Arrington presiding.

Mr. Arrington this week mentioned, as problems for discussion, the effect legislation passed by several states would have on the new buying season and relations with ASCAP. He added some exhibitors seemed to fear the new block buying under the decree would introduce more high budget pictures than ever before, and that the exhibitors, as a group, could not absorb the added cost.

Plans for the annual summer convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia, at Old Point Comfort, that state, this week were being readied under the direction of Sydney Gates, exhibitor and chairman of the convention committee. There will be a fishing trip in Chesapeake Bay, he announced this week; also, an informal cocktail party the night before the convention—for the early arrivals. Golf and swimming will be on the program the first day; and the convention will close with a banquet and ball.

Discussion of arbitration proceedings, as revealed in the state's first such hearing, featured the regular luncheon meeting of the Connecticut Allied, in New Haven Tuesday. Dr. J. B. Fishman presided.

An exposition in which theatre equipment will be displayed will be sponsored by the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York, in that city September 9th through 11th, at the Hotel Astor.

WARNERS OPEN 'YORK', U.A. HAS 'SAILORS'

Lasky Feature Set for New York Astor July 2nd; Holdovers for "Billy the Kid", "Face"

New merchandising and field showmanship plans are keeping pace with Hollywood's release of new key product.

It's Warner Brothers' turn now at New York's Astor Theatre, home of first run roadshows in New York City. The company's Jesse Lasky-Hal Wallis feature, "Sergeant York," begins a two-a-day run at that theatre July 2nd; and its advertising and publicity director, Charles Einfeld, arrived in New York City this week from Hollywood to complete arrangements for the extensive exploitation the picture will have for its world premiere.

United Artists' "Three Cockeyed Sailors" received a specially exploited premiere Friday, June 20th, at Norfolk, Virginia, with navy men as guests. MGM last week announced "Billy the Kid" received 13 additional holdovers, and that another of its features, "A Woman's Face," caused Loew's Metropolitan Theatre, Brooklyn, to hold it for a third week, this being the first time the theatre has done this with a picture since 1938.

"Sergeant York" Opening

The world premiere and roadshow campaign for the Warner Brothers-Jesse Lasky-Hal Wallis feature of the life of the famous World War hero, Alvin York—"Sergeant York"—is shaping up, this week, as one of the most pretentious to be attempted by the company, which has made a policy of giving its "big" pictures spectacular world premieres, often in remote locations connected in some manner with the theme of the particular picture.

Gradwell A. Sears, vice-president in charge of distribution for the company, announced last week the film would have its world premiere, on a roadshow basis, at New York's Astor Theatre, following the conclusion of the run of United Artists' "Major Barbara" there.

The opening date is the evening of July 2nd; and it is expected there will be a host of the famous present, especially persons from the armed forces, in view of the film's theme. Governor Prentice Cooper, of Tennessee, Sergeant York's home state, has accepted the invitation to the premiere; other politicos are expected, and the chief character, Sergeant York himself, has been granted a 10-day leave from his post as head of his state's draft board, in order to attend the opening.

Warner officials, including Mr. Einfeld, Mr. Sears, Mr. Lasky, Mr. Wallis, H. M. Warner and others, will be there, as will Gary Cooper, who plays Sergeant York in the film.

One of the special features planned for opening night is a military band parade in Duffy Square, with allied ceremonies. Also contemplated is a reunion of Sergeant York and World War comrades.

During the next few weeks there will be national network radio programs, featuring the Sergeant, and Mr. Lasky.

Warners also disclosed it would, in connection with the film's opening, bring a typical family from Sergeant York's home area to New York for a first train ride and first motion picture.

Within the next week, a "big poster campaign," according to company announcement is to cover New York City. Also, various patriotic and veterans' organizations are offering their cooperation in boosting the film.

The Astor Theatre, at the opening, will boast the biggest electric sign ever installed for a theatrical engagement on Broadway, the company also asserted, adding in conclusion that "the list of promotional tie-ups being arranged on 'Sergeant York' will be one of the most extensive ever effected on a picture."

Mr. Einfeld is expected to remain in New York to direct the campaigns on two other pictures, "The Bride Came C.O.D." and "Manpower." The first, with Bette Davis and James Cagney, goes into general release July 12th, after some pre-releases; the second, with Edward G. Robinson and Marlene Dietrich, will be released August 9th, after a big advance campaign.

"Dictator" Business

Charles Chaplin's United Artists release, "The Great Dictator," still playing and receiving record money in many locations, has already surpassed the receipts from any of the comedian's previous films, even those from his "Gold Rush," Arthur Kelly, vice-president of United Artists, in charge of sales, and temporarily the acting chief, told the company's regional sales convention in New York on Monday, first day of the two day meeting.

Universal's "In the Navy," starring Abbott and Costello, on Tuesday ending its second week at New York's Criterion Theatre, set an alltime attendance record during its first seven days, by playing to an estimated 49,947 persons. While figures were not completed at mid-week for the second weeks' attendance, the theatre's operators predicted the second week would better the first.

At the same time, Twentieth Century Fox's "Man Hunt" last week was claimed to have led all pictures on Broadway for the gross it scored, and it was held over. The film grossed approximately $45,000 its first week.

United Artists held the premiere of its British-made "Three Cockeyed Sailors" at the Granby Theatre, Norfolk, Virginia, Friday, June 20th, with attendant celebration, features of which were a preview for officers and men of the United States Navy Yard, nearby, and for the men from British ships there; and a parade and broadcast. Some 8,400 persons saw the film over the weekend. They broke house records.

Holdovers for "Billy"

From the home offices of MGM last week came the announcement that the company's Robert Taylor starring vehicle, "Billy the Kid," had received 13 additional holdover engagements; and that the film had received three week engagements in Denver, Cleveland, and San Francisco. On Friday, June 20th, the total holdover engagements were 22.

Loew's Metropolitan Theatre, Brooklyn, for the first time since 1938 held a picture for the third week. The picture is MGM's "A Woman's Face," starring Joan Crawford. The film, being held over "extensively," according to the company, had two weeks each in Newark and Jersey City theatres.

In the mentioned situations, a new "Scarred-Face She-Devil" promotion was used successfully, and MGM is servicing exhibitors with new accessories for this campaign, which features the scarred face of Miss Crawford. Among the new accessories are a one-sheet, a three-sheet, and 11 by 14 title card, a 22 by 28 lobby card, and a herald. The campaign was originated by Earl Hudson and Ralph Stitt, of the United Detroit Theatres, when the film played their circuit.

RKO will sell Walt Disney's "The Reluctant Dragon" singly as it has sold other Disney features, reports from the field, where selling approaches have been made, indicate.

Paramount has withdrawn "Parson of Panamint" from its June release schedule, in order to give it "an intensified advertising and exploitation campaign," the company announced last week. It was said the picture received such enthusiastic reviews and audience reactions at Coast previews that the home office executives were convinced it needed more than routine handling.

Special exploitation campaigns are now under preparation, and will be tested at the boxoffices of theatres in specially selected key cities pre-release engagements. The tests will determine the nature of the final campaigns, and the national release date.

It was reported the company was considering a world premiere for the picture in Salt Lake City July 4th, with attendant celebration and personal appearances of the producer, Harry Sherman, and several of the film's stars.

Twentieth Century Fox has formed a permanent field exploitation staff of nine men, under Rodney Bush's direction. Their names will be disclosed shortly.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

AL SHERMAN of Columbia Pictures' home office, is doing something about having his book, "The World Moves On," transplanted to the screen, as a dramatic story of Joseph Pulitzer, Mr. Sherman claiming one of the most complete collections of private letters and memoranda of the late fiery newspaper publisher. He says he has two tons of the stuff, more than the material which Ralph Pulitzer, the son, turned over to the Library of Congress.

Rummaging through dusty old archives, the other day, revealed many anecdotal insights, about how, for instance, Pulitizer suffered from ill health, which made him a prey to anyone who had a nostrum for sale, like E. H. Clement's "Geneva Lithia Waer, to be taken four times a day on an empty stomach." And about how Pulitzer liked the thought that he could be a President-maker. His paper had a brush with Admiral Dewey, hero of Manila, because it supported the naval officer for the Presidency and then left him high and dry. Pulitzer also earned a pat on the back from Daniel S. Lamont for urging the candidacy of Judge Parker for President. Neither gentleman ever got in.

The publisher came to this country as an immigrant boy, rose to the heights but was never a completely happy man. His years of illness kept him away from his family for months at a time.

Pulitzer's insistence upon complete reports from business associates evidently extended to his family as well, for Mrs. Pulitzer penned long and complete letters concerned with every intimate detail of personal and social life, even to whether it would be advisable to accept August Belmont's offer to share a Metropolitan Opera House box on alternate Tuesdays.

When Charles E. Chapin was recommended for a post on Pulitizer's old World, in New York (he was to become, later, one of that paper's outstanding editors), Nelson Hersh, who urged him for the job, insisted once that Chapin be given an extra week's vacation for work well done. Mr. Hersh's recommendation to Pultizer read as follows: "His character I do not admire, but his work is very good. His main fault is flightiness of judgment sometimes." Mr. Chapin, if you recall, died in Sing Sing about ten years ago, while serving a life sentence for murder.

Pulitzer's axiom as a publisher was: "If there is no news, make it." So Nelson Hersh once exploded some bombs from the dome of the old World building at Park Row at the height of a hot spell, to "bring some rain"—and possibly some circulation.

The publisher had a penchant for doing things in code—and his code book (in Al Sherman's possession) had some choice names for Pulitzer friends, associates and business rivals. For example, William Jennings Bryan was known as "Guilder" and "Maxilla." Arthur Brisbane was known as "Horace," Dumont Clarke, Pulitzer's financial adviser, was "Coin"; the New York Daily Herald (now the Herald-Tribune) was "Madonna"; Josephus Daniels was "General"; W. G. McAdoo was "Gargoyle"; James E. McReynolds, then U. S. Attorney General, was "Giddiness"; the N. Y. Journal was "Geranium" and then "Magnolia"; Joseph Pulitzer, Jr., was known as "Velocity," while his dad was called "Marksman." The Republican Party was "Malaria"; John D. Rockefeller was "Gorgeous"; and Wm. Howard Taft was "Rotund."

Pulitzer's phobia about noise (he couldn't stand any sort of sounds) had him spending over $150,000 a year to support his yacht "Liberty," while the phobia prompted him to write to the Coast Guard to muffle the foghorn just off his Bar Harbor, Maine, estate.

In looking around for a circulation hpyo, Pulitzer picked on the Statute of Liberty, which had been offered to the United States by France. The offer was accepted but the statue couldn't be put up because Congress would not appropriate sufficient money for the pedestal in the N. Y. harbor. Pulitzer's World got behind it, urged a campaign for pennies from school-children, and put it over. That's why "Liberty enlightens the world from New York Harbor."

For a time, the other day, patrons in the Lincoln Theatre, at Miami Beach, Florida, could have torn the entire management limb from limb.

Seems that Sonny Shepherd, showman extraordinaire, had one of the theatre's ushers, a Mister Marion Moore, former radio announcer, rush on the stage in the middle of an exciting newsreel. The newsreel was stopped, a spotlight flashed on Moore, who, seated at a table with telephone, microphone and other authentic looking broadcast material, bellowed loud apologies for interrupting the regular performance.

"We interrupt our regular news reel," he said, "to bring you a special news broadcast. "Flash . . . It was reported today Hitler had declared war on . . . "

The telephone started ringing and the announcer said "Yes, lady, No, No, lady, Don Ameche is not in it. . . . Yes, lady," etc.

"Back to the news," shouted Moore: "Bulletin, Washington, President Roosevelt just said Wilkie was . . . "

Same telephone business and chatter again interrupted. Then: "More important news. Bulletin. London . . . Winston Churchill said Hitler could take a . . . "

Same telephone business and at last in apparent desperation, Moore said: "Lady. It seems you know more about that than I do. Anyway, what I have to say doesn't seem important. There's what everybody is interested in . . . "

Usher Moore then pointed to the screen and a trailer opened with: "Here's the Announcement You Have Really Been Waiting For . . . 'The Great American Broadcast' will Appear at This Theatre On," etc., etc.

Sonny Shepherd says "it was terrific"!

Stan Stanfill is always on the alert for publicity for anything playing his Craig Theatre, in Craig, Colorado.

Riding along the 11,000-foot Rabbit's Ear mountain pass, Stanfill's car hit a loose shoulder of the road and toppled into a 12-foot drainage ditch. He suffered a wrenched spine, a bruised hip and a $200 repair bill on his car.

He told reporters that the accident occured when he was hurrying to his theatre to see "The Great Broadcast." They printed it.

ENGLAND censors most identifications of bomb targets, which explains why there are no identificationss of the buildings or film studios in this report from our London office:

During the heavy blitz on London on Saturday night—Sunday morning, a British fighter pilot picked up one of the Nazi raiders and gave it a sharp burst with his guns.

The raider came earthwards in a long dive, the British fighter on his tail. In his efforts to shake off the fighter, the raider jettisoned his load of between 300 and 400 incendiaries and two bombs when close to the ground.

Some of the incendiaries fell on a film studio.

The incendiaries had set alight the whole of the administrative block, some dressing rooms, and a sound theatre and, with the aid of other brigades called in, the local firemen let these burn out and concentrated on saving the biggest studio stages in Europe and other buildings.

They were successful, but while they were working another Nazi raider dived down to machine-gun the firemen and to drop bombs which, like the previous ones, narrowly missed the studios, fortunately falling on open ground.

The only casualties at the studios were three kittens.

Steffes' canal is a half-mile long. Merle Potter, Minneapolis Times motion picture critic, acted as commodore for the launching and dedication.

Broadway's song writers have been banging out tunes of war and patriotic subjects as in the days of World War I. But they're mostly a rather serious lot of lyrics. We want bigger and better ditties like that little number of 1918, "Would You Rather Be a Colonel with an Eagle on Your Shoulder or a Private with a Chicken on Your Knee?"

Says Parb: "Employees are forbidden to: (1) Drink any form of intoxicating liquors, coffee, tea or take any form of narcotic; (2) Get married . . . and, must admit to a complete physical examination."

Kiss the Boys Goodbye

(Paramount)

Musical Comedy

Here is a musical comedy, produced and timed to be a strong box office attraction in the heat of the summer, which has all the components necessary for success. It is light and amusing. The songs and background music are good. And the cast, full of marquee names, is excellent.

Unlike many musicals, "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" has both fast-moving story and numerous humorous lines and situations. But plot and humor are not offered as substitutes for music, as the picture also has several songs which give indications of being hits.

The film was based on the Clare Boothe Broadway play of the same name. That was the play which was interpreted as a satire on the hunt for a Scarlett O'Hara for "Gone With the Wind." But the story has been altered considerably for screen purposes.

The story (outlined in detail on page 145 of the Product Digest) concerns the efforts of a chorus girl, Mary Martin, to win a part in a Broadway play from the director, Don Ameche. The chance is won after she returns to her native Georgia, puts aside her New York ways for those of the South, and performs for Ameche and Oscar Levant, the composer, who are making a tour in search of a new leading lady. Levant has her come to New York, over the protest of the director. The climax is reached at the home of the backer, Raymond Walburn. After singing for the guests, the Southern discovery reveals the hoax and goes home to Georgia, thinking that Ameche wants the former star, Barbara Allen, to play the part. But he follows her.

Mary Martin has perhaps her best role to date, being given an opportunity to sing several songs and carry a number of the humorous scenes. Don Ameche gives a good characteristic performance and sings one song. Oscar Levant supplies much of the comedy. Rochester and Connie Boswell each have one number and both are done very well. Good support is also given by Virginia Dale, Barbara Jo Allen, Raymond Walburn and Elizabeth Patterson.

The film was skillfully produced by William Le Baron and directed by Victor Schertzinger, who composed the five featured songs. The background music, well above average, is conducted by John Scott Trotter of the Bing Crosby radio show.

Exploitation value is centered in the cast names and the fact that this is a picture to which audiences can be invited with a guarantee of entertainment and laughs to make them forget the current state of the world.

Previewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, to an audience of professionals and a large number of paying customers who had come for cash and candy giveaways and the attraction of an advertised "major studio preview" in addition to a current hit. The regular patrons, as well as the professionals, appeared to enjoy the picture very much and laughter was frequent. —MARTIN QUIGLEY, JR.

They Met in Bombay

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Marquee Melodrama

Starting with the names of Clark Gable and Rosalind Russell as marquee magnets, Hunt Stromberg has proceeded in strict compliance with the rules of box office to construct for them a vehicle designed to please their followings. If it appears to the professional eye a somewhat machine-made production, it does not follow of necessity that the millions who have loved seeing these people and others do these things before will not love seeing them do them again.

Only time and test can establish the nature of the public's reaction, and it is to be remembered that only one of Gable's pictures in ready memory—that "Idiot's Delight" thing—found the public unresponsive to his talent.

At bottom this story is a variant of the one about the two jewel thieves, a he and a she, who at first compete for possession of a gem and then form a partnership which progresses from the professional to the romantic. This time they meet in Bombay, on Empire Day, flee together on a tramp steamer to Singapore—or it may be Shanghai—where he, impersonating a British Army Captain, is caught up in a clash of arms with Japanese troops and performs so valiantly as to be awarded the Victoria Cross by a grateful sovereign, after which he is arrested by Scotland Yard for the jewel robbery, escapes momentarily, then returns voluntarily to custody, announcing his intention to marry his partner in crime and join the army after he has served his jail sentence.

If this synopsis suggests that the story is, as the British might say, a bit thick, it is not too hard to take for an audience attracted primarily by the names of the principals. And it does supply, in the battle between the British and Japanese troops, with the British troops victorious, a sequence with action and suspense in it.

Mr. Gable is somewhat more to the fore in the picture than Miss Russell. The other players are sharply subordinated.

There is more action than humor in the film, and such humor as appears is of situation rather than dialogue.

A line spoken by an aged Duchess in her cups, to the effect that "I've always carried my babies like a lady and my liquor like a gentleman" could have been dispensed with at no cost to the enterprise.

The marriage of the principals contemplated at end of the picture might better have been entered into at some point in the action prior to their sharing of quarters on terms intimate enough to suggest that a ceremony has occurred offstage.

Clarence Brown's direction gets about as much out of the material as the writers put into it.

Previewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, to a mixed audience which gave it steady attention, the ladies and children present audibly manifesting their approval of Mr. Gable and his works at a number of points, the men displaying somewhat more restraint.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

Blossoms in the Dust

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Biography of a Humanitarian

This is the story of Fort Worth's Edna Gladney and her life of devotion to the foundlings of her community, the state and the world. It is a story of facts told in terms of drama and dealing with the most fundamental of human emotions in a fashion to surpass in effectiveness the most eloquent fiction.

Analyzed strictly on a basis of box office, the production rates high among contemporary releases.

At root of all that transpires is the plight of babies born out of wedlock into a society accustomed to social and in some respects legal ostracism of illegitimates.

In the telling of the story of a woman's struggle to improve the condition of the foundlings of the world and change humanity's attitude toward the innocent by-product of adult transgression, the picture explores a field of subject matter new to the screen and furnishes showmen a new and vital topic of interest to offer their customers.

It is a basic rule of production that a closeup of a baby is sure fire, with or without story reason. This picture presents a large number of babies, all for excellent reason, and depicts the relationship of assorted adults to the infants and their affairs.

As detailed on page 133 of the Product Digest, the film tells of a woman who, following the death of her own baby, interests herself in foundlings, first in a small way, then as leader of a campaign to effect enactment of legislation to terminate official branding of illegitimates on public records, a practice barring them from civil service and certain other rights and privileges.

Previewed at the Four Star Theatre, Los Angeles, to a large turnout of press and profession. The picture held all present in rapt attention, inducing tears at many points, and was roundly applauded on conclusion.—W. R. W.

Produced and distributed by Metro Goldwyn Mayer. A Mervyn Leroy production produced by Irving Asher.

For Beauty's Sake

(Twentieth Century-Fox)

Comedy and Mystery

"For Beauty's Sake" is primarily a vehicle to bring the long-absent Ned Sparks brand of humor to the screen and at its best is only a fair comedy-mystery in which the star, as a press agent for a beauty salon, is given ample opportunity to demonstrate his individual comic ability. With Majorie Weaver, Ted North and Joan Davis in supporting roles, the picture is at times humorous through the efforts of Mr. Sparks and Miss Davis although it lacks the suspense necessary to entertaining mystery fare.

It concerns a young college boy, "Bertram Erasmus Dillsome" (Ted North), whose interest in modern life is second only to his study of astronomy. He inherits a beauty salon in a fashionable hotel and, under the terms of the will, must manage it for two years. Midway the theme of the picture reverts from comedy and becomes mystery when it is discovered that a blackmail ring is using the shop as its source of information. With the aid of "Jonathan B. Sweet" (Sparks), "Dillsome" uncovers the plot and exposes the operators of the ring before the business is too seriously injured. A romance has developed in the meantime.

The Gang's All Here

(Monogram)

Trucking War

Lindsley Parsons' latest production for Monogram release is a story built on action and comedy with Frankie Darro, Jackie Moran and Mantan Moreland in the starring roles.

Directed by Jean Yarbrough the story concerns the adventures of Darro and Moreland as truck drivers who become involved in a highway war between rival trucking concerns. Aided by Jackie Moran as the garage mechanic, Keye Luke, the insurance investigator, and Marcia Mae Jones as the daughter of the head of the trucking company, the group runs the gamut of adventure until they rid the roads of the outlaw concern.

Highlighted with scenes of the trucking war especially a race between two five-ton trucks resulting in the demolition of one, and the comedy lines handled by Manton Moreland the picture should appeal to those who seek action, suspense and comedy.

Once a Crook

(Twentieth Century-Fox)

Crook Comedy Melodrama

The original of this contemporary crook subject—that it is contemporary is established by the police wearing steel helmets—ran as a Westend play. Its star was, as here, Cockney Gordon Harker, to whose particular style of terse, acidulous comedy the yarn was patterned. Though the Harker fans may tend to associate him with the Inspector Hornleigh of recent screen appearances, they will find the clothes of the ex-crook-turned-saloon keeper fit quite well, and it is of course Harker they will pay to see. The production, however, is very stylized, shows imitation rather than initiative, and beyond the Harker fans the market may not be very wide.

Harker's role is that of a publican with a seamy past and a shady son. Trying to put back in a safe a stolen "sparkler," he is framed by an ex-buddy, caught out by his detective pal, and put on trial. A last-minute alibi saves him. The idea is a sentimental one, but the only sentiment visible is between the boy and his girl friend. Development is rather on comedy lines with Harker provided with a foil in Yorkshire comic Sydney Howard in the role of a plausible old Bible quoter who still keeps an envious eye on loot. Much of the action unrolls behind the bar of the saloon, now and again taking a sidetrack to the apartment of the "The Duke," a gentleman cracksman with a spurious American accent and idiom.

Apart from Harker's patterned patter which his fans will find as they expect from their hero, Sydney Howard's miming in a grotesque role is the film's choicest personal ingredient, beside which Kathleen Harrison's termagant "Auntie" and Wally Patch's solid courtroom cop stand level.

The technical qualities are excellent, but the casting seems to have been a process of wartime difficulty.

A preview theatre audience was ready to laugh at the Harker Howard comedy lines and sequences, but did not visibly respond to the melodrama.—AUBREY FLANAGAN

Western

This latest of the Don "Red" Barry western series is also one of his best. A good story and excellent supporting players are among the chief assets of the picture. The Barry series has always been noted for considerable action, more so than some other series, and this one is no exception. The story never gets out of hand, and is calculated to keep the fans on the edges of their seats. It is suspenseful and builds up to a climax that will not let the expectant spectator down.

Rounding out the picture, there is romance, in which Lynn Merrick, a striking blonde, has more of a part than is usually the case. William Haade plays the sheriff, a stout fellow who has become involved with a gang of criminals in order to obtain money to take his ailing wife on a trip. The wife is played by Dorothy Sebastian, Harry Worth plays the heavy.

Although told and acted with considerable elan, there is nothing unusual to the plot. Barry, on his way to Bannock City, stops some hold-up men from stealing a gold ore wagon, but, found with the dead driver, he is locked up in jail. Befriended by the local Wells Fargo agent—actually Barry is a U. S. Marshal hired by Wells Fargo to investigate the many gold ore thefts, he starts from there and follows his clues until he has the evidence. The gang is captured by a posse in a gun battle. Beyond that there are many human interest offshoots of the main plot and they are what makes this a better than usual western.

I Was a Prisoner on Devil's Island

(Columbia)

Melodrama

"I Was a Prisoner on Devil's Island" is a standard melodrama whose locale is the notorious French penal colony and whose principal characters are a sadistic, grafting doctor, his wife who hates him and an American who has served in the French Foreign Legion. The latter two are in love, and, through the sentence of the youth to the colony for an accidental murder, manage to find a means to happiness, but only after a jungle fever epidemic, in which the graft of prison officials is exposed, and other incidents of melodramatic flavor occur.

Sally Eilers, Donald Woods and Edward Ciannelli are the principal players, and Victor Kilian, Charles Halton, Dick Curtis, John Tyrrell, Eddie Laughton, Edmund Cobb and Robert Warwick are the support.

Producer Wallace MacDonald and director Lew Landers put into the film the elements necessary for it to satisfy the fans of this particular type of entertainment.

College Comedy

Set for release on June 26th, at start of the school vacation period, this comedy of college life under difficulties supplies showmen little, save whatever value may attach to the billing of Ruby Keeler, Ozzie Nelson and Harriet Hilliard for attraction purposes.

It is a slim offering, fashioned in the general format of "Too Many Girls" but dealing instead with a college that has too many boys, and thin as to talent on screen.

Such humor as may have been counted upon to hold together the seven musical numbers which are sung and danced to accompaniment supplied by Mr. Nelson and his bandsmen is amateurishly handled and derives no help from a script that contains no new or freshly treated material.

Direction by Edward Dmytryk manifestly allows for audience laughs and becomes meaningless when these do not occur.

Production by Jack Fier is matter-of-fact.

The story, which is employed mainly as connective and background for band numbers, concerns a stranded dance band which enrolls in a college to stimulate its enrollment, via television and otherwise, with sundry complications ensuing.

Baby Sandy Comedy

Edward Everett Horton, Raymond Walburn, Franklin Pangborn and Jed Prouty, dependables in the field of comedy, are grouped in support of Baby Sandy this time, with benefit to the marquee, but on account of the material supplied them with scant success as to entertainment quality of the picture.

It is in the nature of the popularity which makes baby stars that Baby Sandy's fans may not object to the absurdities and inanities committed in her behalf by writers, producer and director, but that is for the fans to say.

The story is about a baby whose mother installs it in custody of three brothers who live in a Bachelors' Club which has a rule against admission of feminine guests. Chief among several comedy sequences, none overwhelmingly amusing, is one in which the baby operates an elevator, perilously, while the rest of the cast strives to rescue the baby, the elevator and a couple of persons who become entangled in the rigging.

Murder by Invitation

(Monogram)

Murder Mystery-Farce

Laid in an old mansion replete with secret panels and passages, this comparatively well made picture treats, with considerable levity, of a murder mystery. Gruesomeness and farce vie alternately for audience attention, and upon this note showmanship campaigns can be based.

As the story of the attempts of an elderly woman's relatives to obtain her fortune of $3,000,000 unfolds, three persons are murdered, corpses appear and disappear, and the actual culprits are discovered through the work of a Winchellian columnist and the woman herself.

Wallace Ford as the newspaperman; Marian Marsh, making a screen comeback, as his secretary, and Sarah Padden, veteran character actress, are the principal players in the cast, Miss Padden playing outstandingly the role of the elderly woman whom her relatives attempt to have declared insane.

Director Phil Rosen paced the story with a skilled hand, making the A. W. Hackel production a solid entry in its entertainment category.

The picture closes with a gag, having a newspaper photographer snapping the columnist and the secretary in a clinch and turning to the audience with: "The Hays office ain't going to like that long kiss."

Two in a Taxi

(Columbia)

Love and Economics

Stemming from the Irving Briskin side of the Columbia studio, and directed by Robert Florey, this is a return to the type of story popular during the early 1930's, dealing with the efforts of an impoverished young couple to establish themselves sufficiently to get married.

Anita Louise is the young lady in the case, Russell Hayden the young man. For Mr. Hayden, it marks a first dramatic role, since he played the part of "Lucky" in the "Hopalong Cassidy" series. Both the principals and Noah Berry, Jr., as their friend and confidant, give good accounts of themselves.

Hayden is seen as an independent taxi driver, always a little in debt to the finance company. His attempts to raise enough money for a down payment on a gas station are depicted in serious vein, with some comedy stemming from his troubles with traffic officers. The place of the "little man" in society comes in for discussion not always treated humorously.

Dick Purcell, Chick Chandler, Fay Helm, George Cleveland and Frank Yaconelli are among those rounding out the cast. Production, direction and story values are pedestrian and according to a formula which may well have outlived its usefulness as entertainment.

Previewed at studio projection room to a visibly restless press audience.—WALTER SELDEN.

Puddin' Head

(Republic)

Canova Comedy

This latest of the Judy Canova pictures follows closely on the heels of her "Sis Hopkins." Both these productions have Judy emerging from hillbilly surroundings into the upper strata of New York wealth and society and both are dependent, preponderantly, on the comedy element with just a suggestion of personal tragedy to anchor the stories.

In a comparison of the two, "Puddin' Head" comes off second best. There are a few comedy scenes that are very amusing, but for the most part the comedy appears to be labored and overdone. It would also appear that the picture is too long for the story it has to tell.

The supporting players include Francis Lederer, who plays a fortune-hunting prince; Raymond Walburn and Eddie Foy, Jr., father and son comedy routine; "Slim" Summerville, who plays Judy's hillbilly uncle, and Alma Kruger, the stern chairman of the board of the broadcasting company. A more detailed synopsis of the picture is carried in the Product Digest section, page 171. Judy sings several songs, including "Hey, Junior!," "Minnie Hotcha," "The Ghost Routine" and "You're Telling I," the latter with Eddie Foy, Jr.

The Medico of Painted Springs

(Columbia)

Dr. Kildare on Horseback

With "The Medico of Painted Springs," Columbia introduces a new series of western pictures in which the principal character is a young doctor who is skilled in riding, shooting, fighting and everything else expected of an outdoor action film hero. Starring Charles Starrett in the title role, the initial picture augurs well for the group, for it contains the ingredients western fans admire.

Supporting Starrett are Terry Walker, Ben Taggart, Ray Bennett, Wheeler Oakman, Richard Fiske, Edmund Cobb and The Simp-Phonies, the latter a cowboy band.

The young physician, hired by the Army, arrives in a small western town to examine volunteers for Teddy Roosevelt's "Rough Riders" and becomes involved in a war between sheepmen and cattle raisers. He gets to the bottom of the criminal activity and brings peace to the range.

Jack Fier, the producer, and Lambert Hillyer, the director, deserve the credit for a tightly packed, surefire piece of entertainment.

Merchant Seaman

(General Film Distributors)

War Documentary

Once again the Crown Film Unit has, whilst contributing a perfect documentation of an aspect of Britain at war, enriched the entertainment archives of the British screen. The credits this time are due to Jack Holmes and his technical staff for the creation in "Merchant Seaman" of a picture which is bang in the very front of realist films of today. Taking his unit on to the high seas and into the harbors of Britain, using shipboard and deckhouse, and the direct bronzed seamen themselves, Holmes has made a photographically real study of the men who man our convoys, captured the dangers and the thrills, set his sound track throbbing with the beat of the ship's engines, and the demoniac scream of enemy bombers, left the tang of spume and spray in the memory of a magnificent and human document. The film in its brief scope includes a torpedoing, an attack by bombers and by submarine, attempts no heroics and no melodrama, and is, as a result both heroic and intensely melodramatic. Few British films have been as well cut as this, none more thrilling nor more inspiring. It deserves a widespread box office success on both sides of the Atlantic it takes as its canvas.—Running time, 24 minutes.—AUBREY FLANAGAN.

Harvests for Tomorrow

(Warner Bros.-Loew's)

New England Farming

Produced by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and being distributed by Warner Brothers and Loew's, Inc., in the northeastern section of the country for the three months' period beginning July 1st, "Harvests for Tomorrow" is a documentary film of farm land and the rehabilitation of such land in New England. Narrated by Frank Craven, who has been provided with a script as warm and simple as his dialogue and Yankee humor, the film tells of the growth decline and present-day rebirth of the American soil in that section of the country. The excellent photography is aided by a musical score by John Alden Finckel.—Running time, 28 minutes.

New Construction Begun in Mexico

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

A syndicate of Mexican capitalists and theatremen is completing arrangements for the erection in the port of Vera Cruz of a de luxe cinema, similar to the Cine Teatro Alameda, a leading Mexico City theatre, at a reported cost of about $700,000. Work on this theatre is expected to start early in July and it is planned to open it about the end of next winter or in the early spring. Backers of the proposition consider that Vera Cruz is to become an even more important tourist center as a result of the increased popularity of sea travel to Mexico.

Films made by two cameramen who rode on local fire engines for a week when they responded to alarms have been compiled for national exhibition by the local police traffic department. These pictures, showing how traffic congestion and the carelessness of motorists and pedestrians imperil life and property here by hampering the fire department, are part of the traffic authorities' program to educate automobilists and the general public to the advantages of careful navigation in the streets.

"Cantinflas," film comedian, is scoring a great success in the picture, "Ni Sange Ni Arena" ("Neither Blood Nor Sand"), burlesquing bull fighting, now in its second week at the select Cine Teatro Alameda here. The response to this picture is extraordinary. It grossed $14,950 in its first week, only $50 less than "Gone With the Wind" at this theatre. But "GWTW" played to matinees, always morning shows in this country, at the Alameda. "Ni" has broken all box office records here for its initial week.

Featuring the critics' reviews and stressing the "adult entertainment only" angle, Jim McDonough distributed heralds on "This Thing Called Love" at the Grand, in Galt, Ontario. Cards were posted on posts, fences, windows, etc., carrying copy in block letters "What Is This Thing Called Love? For further information telephone (theatre number)."

Opposition of the Confederation of Mexican Workers which has succeeded in keeping German pictures off Mexican screens has not prevented Pedro Calderon, one of the leading Mexican distributors, from attempting to exhibit a German film, the first of that kind to appear in Mexico in a long time, "Aurora or Submarine Warfare." This picture was passed by the Government's censors after a few deletions.

Small producers of Mexican picture shorts are in danger of being driven out of business because of the demand of the labor unions that they employ more help than the producers assert is necessary. They have appealed to the unions to modify their demands, contending that it is better for them to keep going with staffs that are adequate to their needs than to go out of business and throw workers out of employment.

Just completed is the latest Ralph Spence original, a comedy titled "From Rags to Rhythm." Designed with flexibility of casting in view, the story is patterned to fit such comedians as Bob Hope, Jack Benny, Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie or Red Skelton, and has been submitted to Paramount's Buddy De Sylva and Broadway's Billy Rose, who requested a copy.

Mr. Spence was one of the company which worked on the "Ziegfeld Follies" in New York, in the days of twenty dollar first nights and sequin-studded curtains. First meeting in 1921, Spence used to write the book and De Sylva the lyrics. One of the most successful of the Spence efforts was "The Gorilla," 1925 stage hit and subsequently the subject of three film versions.

His latest work has been the re-write on "New York Town," with Fred MacMurray, Mary Martin and Robert Preston, not yet set for definite release, but the Spence trademark on picture scripts extends back some 25 years, includes films here and abroad, ranges from "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" to "The South American Way."

Comedy? "Still the way to get them coming to the box office," says the writer, and points to "From Rags to Rhythm."

"THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOLLYWOOD"

Victor Mature is one of five players signed by Hal Roach some two years or so ago to be built up to stardom in Roach pictures. He had a part in Roach's "1,000,000 B.C.", released in April, 1940.

Week before last, in New York, Victor Mature and the lady of his choice obtained a marriage license; told the license clerk they would be married on Sunday at a certain church.

Sunday the press of Gotham appeared at the designated church to cover the nuptials, but the principals didn't arrive.

That Sunday night Walter Winchell told his Jurgens Journal radio listeners about the incident.

Next day, Monday, Actor Mature was signed to two Hollywood contracts, a two-a-year five-year deal with Twentieth Century-Fox and a special, written-in part in Arnold Pressburger's "Shanghai Gesture".

Both deals are by special arrangement with Hal Roach.

Up to Their Ears

Twentieth Century-Fox is currently going through its share of the production boom; with eight pictures shooting, one started, and another recently completed.

Started this week was "Week-End in Havana," Technicolor musical being directed by Walter Lang, who handled "Moon Over Miami." In the lead roles are Alice Faye, John Payne, Carmen Miranda, Cesar Romero and Cobina Wright, Jr. "Belle Starr" was the film most recently completed, with Gene Tierney playing the title role, supported by Randolph Scott.

The pictures now before cameras include such future screen material as "How Green Was My Valley," based on the Richard Llewellyn novel, produced by Darryl Zanuck and directed by John Ford, with a cast headed by Walter Pidgeon, Maureen O'Hara and Anna Lee. Then there is "Charley's Aunt," starring Jack Benny and featuring Kay Francis, Edmund Gwenn, James Ellison, Arleen Whelan, Ann Baxter and Richard Haydn, and "A Yank in the R.A.F.," which co-stars Tyrone Power and Betty Grable, and "Wild Geese Calling," with a cast headed by Henry Fonda, Joan Bennett and Warren William.

Additionally shooting are "Man at Large," with Marjorie Weaver and George Reeves; "Riders of the Purple Sage," with George Montgomery and Mary Howard; "We Go Fast," co-starring Alan Curtis and Lynn Bari, and "Marry the Boss' Daughter," with Benda Joyce, Bruce Edwards, George Barbier and Hardie Albright.

Slated to start July 7th are "Cadet Girl" and "Small Town Deb," followed a week later by "Lone Star Ranger." On July 26th, cameras roll on "Remember the Day," starring Claudette Colbert, and "Detour to Love."

In two separate loan-outs of the same player, Hollywood this week again demonstrated its dependence upon the star system it created. And, additionally, gave proof of its trend toward multi-starred films.

The first instance was the case of Henry Fonda, under contract to Twentieth Century-Fox. Mr. Fonda was borrowed by Columbia to appear opposite Barbara Stanwyck in "The Doctor's Wife," and shortly after, borrowed by Warners for the sake of "The Male Animal," in which he will play opposite Priscilla Lane.

For "When Ladies Meet," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer added Herbert Marshall to a cast already including Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor and Greer Garson. The all-star backfield will be directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

Frank Seltzer has joined Jesse L. Lasky as an executive assistant. He resigned from the publicity staff of the Association of Motion Pictures Producers.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS LOSE GROUND IN DRAFT FIGHT

Leaders See Few Concessions Possible in Effort to Reserve Needed Projectionists

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

With the industry's efforts to obtain a retention of its manpower reaching an advanced stage, indications are that the net result will be much less than it expected, less even than it will be content with. As forecast in these columns, any concessions on the reservation of manpower, whether it be for studios or picture theatres, which will be made by the Government are not likely to exceed fifty percent of the demands.

Already some indication of the position in regard to picture theatres has been given by Sidney K. Lewis, president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association who addressing his General Council said: "We can no longer expect to retain the whole of our first and second projectionists over 25 . . . the thing we have to do is to make the best bargain we can at a time like this."

Studied by Panel

In regard to production the Manpower Panel, having heard all the available evidence from the Services, the Government Departments and the industry itself, on needs and available personnel, has started to draw up its recommendations. The adamantine attitude of the Services and the urgency of the military situation suggest that here again the industry will have to be content with less than it would like.

Though many women are already working in the boxes as second and third operators the Services have got an envious eye on these, and the A.T.S., the Army's feminine corps, are currently advertising for women technicians and projectionists to work in and around the mobile film units.

Nor has the exhibitor front been entirely solid in confronting the Ministry of Labour. It has already been reported that the circuits had made their representations independent of the CEA. It is now established that they have been critical of the CEA treatment of the problem, accused it of lack of energy and drive, called for a more vigorous handling of the whole matter.

The CEA handling of the problem, however, has been defended by Mr. Lewis, who has pleaded the adoption of the diplomatic method on the grounds that "It is not always wise to lead a revolution up Tower Hill and sing the Red Flag until you know the result of the enquiry." Mr. Lewis protests that he is as ready as anyone "to breathe fire and brimstone" but "sees no reason why the big guns should be let off yet if we can bring about the desired results and maintain amicable relations with the Government departments, which is a statesmanlike way of doing it."

Mr. Lewis, acting of course for his fellow officers, has, in fact, rebuked Association members for their lack of collaboration in providing ammunition for the battle. A questionnaire was sent out to exhibitor members to provide statistics for the argument, only two-thirds, at most, of the cinemas approached replied. Now a new questionnaire is being sent out by the Board of Trade to probe, factually and statistically, the allegation that some 2,000 cinemas at least would be compelled to close unless the picture houses are allowed to retain their operators. Until the facts are garnered and presented to the Board of Trade, which probably will not be before this reaches print, the situation remains static, with the calling up of the projectionists temporarily suspended.

S. W. SMITH, managing director of the British Lion Film Corporation who has been voted into the presidential chair of the Kinematograph Renters' Society for a second year of office.

Meanwhile the CEA will pursue its conciliatory way, even in the face of the ginger group. Says Mr. Lewis, with characteristic and resourceful metaphor, "If you want to get a deputation to sound the big drum to a Government department and put their backs up I am ready to receive your instructions, but if so I must ask you to relieve me of any resposibility for its results."

Suggests Pooling Resources

Meanwhile on the production field constructive suggestions continue to come from industry sources. Not the least of these emanates from producer Michael Balcon, who suggests that the problem of personnel can be solved for the time being by a rationalisation and pooling of manpower, by a conservation of personnel resources. No new studios, says Balcon, should be opened: no new companies formed; artists should be pooled and no particular star should be placed under exclusive contract.

Exhibitors and producers both have another headache, provided by the coupon rationing of costumes and clothing. All clothing, by the new Board of Trade order, is rationed on a coupon basis, coupons being supplied to and used by the individual. Neither exhibitors nor production companies have coupons for clothing and on the face of it no existing machinery will permit them to acquire clothing, costumes, or materials.

Approaches made by production interests here, and notably by its American representatives, have drawn from the Board of Trade a promise that an amendment will be made to the new clothing order to enable producers to acquire costumes, dresses, suits, etcetera, for British films. It has been unofficially stated that the export market will provide a suitable loophole, but the indications are that concessions for film production are likely to cover a wide range.

Work Resumed By Gainsborough

The Gainsborough Studios at Islington which were closed during the stiffest days of last year's Blitz are once again to be used as a production headquarters. Maurice Ostrer, Gainsborough-G.B. executive in charge, has so many films on the tapis that they cannot all be made at Shepherds Bush where all his pictures have been produced recently. So the Gainsborough lot, on the banks of the Regents Canal in one of London's most Blitzed districts goes back to work.

First film to be made there will be the screen parallel of the highly successful radio feature "Higang" in which Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Vic Oliver and Jay Wilbur's band have each Sunday night for the past twelve months, sent the thermometer of British radio listening soaring to its hottest point in years.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyon, and Mr. Oliver, leaders of the American entertainment outpost in wartime Britain, will, of course, be starred in the film, script of which is already being matured by the literary team of Messrs. Marriot Edgar and Val Guest. Ben and Vic will be news commentators at rival radio stations. Graham Moffatt and Moore Marriott, established standbys of countless Shepherds Bush and Islington comedies, will be in the cast. Marcel Varnel will direct.

Shepherds Bush claims a wartime production record with 14 features to its credit since September 1939.

John Paddy Carstairs has concluded studio work on the Vic Oliver-Sarah Churchill comedy "He Found a Star" at the Riverside Studios, Hammersmith. Final scenes were shot in the Wimbledon Theatre, and, cutting is now being attended to. The film casts Oliver as an agent whose mission in life is to protect the smaller artist from the depredations of the crooked. John Corfield produced.

"Blitz Hotel," which is to dramatize the story of a typical London hotel in wartime, is to be made at Denham by Maurice Elvey who is to forsake the directorial side for that of production. Harold French will direct under Elvey's aegis. A script has already been prepared by Negley ("Way of a Transgressor") Farson. Objective of the film is to concentrate on the hotel during twelve nocturnal hours of Blitz, and weave a pattern of drama and comedy, adventure and thrill. In the film will appear, probably, bandleader Carroll Gibbons who has led his orchestra at a London Hotel since the war started. He has also written the music for the film.

Norman Hartnel, creator of dresses for Her Majesty the Queen, has dressed some of the scenes in Warner's Teddington film "You Can't Escape for Ever." Hartnell's creations will be seen on set representing Florien's dress salon in pre-Capitulation Paris. Authentic, one hundred per cent, dyed in the blue Mannequins from Mr. Hartnell's studios will work as models before the cameras. John Harlow is directing. Ann Dvorak has the part of Paris dress designer.

POTENTIALITIES OF FUEL SHORTAGE WORRY OWNERS; SOLUTIONS STUDIED

Some Exhibitors See Possible Use of Special Buses to Bring Patrons to Theatres; Heating Will Be Problem

Predictions that the nation's autodrivers face "gas-less Sundays," at first voluntary and then probably enforced, and that the country's home-owners and real estate operators face a fuel and possibly a coal shortage, hold portents for theatre operation, ominous even if still speculative. The predictions, largely by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior—lately appointed "petroleum czar"—this week were being mulled by theatre owners, both independent and circuit, whose theatres are heated by coal or oil, and patronized by owners of automobiles.

Conversations with operators of the larger circuits revealed varying opinions on courses to be taken, and uncertainty over the extent of possible petroleum-product restrictions.

May Set Up Bus Lines

It was apparent fuel storage precautions of great extent were not being taken by exhibitors, because of uncertainty over future Government action and, also, that although several groupings of theatres depend upon patrons' own automobile travel for a majority of their business, it was expected that bus and other transportation lines would continue to feed theatre areas. If authorities allow it, special bus lines may be established by theatres, either individually, or cooperatively, by themselves, or in conjunction with other local merchandising services.

Presented in following paragraphs are the views of the operators of the leading circuits, many of whose houses exist on attendance of car owners, and most of whose houses use oil for heating.

Charles Koerner, newly appointed operating head of the RKO circuit, remarked that in the majority of instances of dependence on car trade, alternative "feeders" to the theatres were bus lines and he did not expect the restricted gasoline consumption to affect these lines.

In the event of gasoline restrictions, and even the cutting of bus service, he envisioned special bus service by theatres. Asked whether he thought exhibitors would be allowed to use gasoline vehicles to maintain patronage, he replied that he thought they might and that, in any event, they could operate these lines in conjunction with other local enterprises, as a "community service."

Not over 15 per cent of RKO's theatres depend upon car owners for business, Mr. Koerner estimated. The majority of the chain's houses are in cities, with numerous non-private feeders.

He added he expected the Coast "type of operation"—large theatres attracting patronage from great distances—to suffer mostly from anticipated restrictions, but noted the Coast is the site of oil production, and that the extent of restrictions up to this week was "anybody's guess—and, everybody's guessing."

Anent fuel for theatre heating, he remarked that the circuit depended mainly upon coal rather than oil.

"We are not disturbed as yet, but we may have to be," he concluded.

FOX NEWS TO GET HEADLINERS' AWARD

Fox-Movietone News will receive the 1941 journalistic achievement award for the best foreign newsreel of the past year at the eighth annual National Headliners' Club frolic on Saturday, June 28th, at the Traymore Hotel in Atlantic City.

The company received the award for bringing to this country the newsreel showing the defeat of the French fleet at the battle of Oran, considered the outstanding foreign newsreel of the year by the judging committee of the Headliners' organization.

Charles Moscowitz, general manager of the Loew chain, said at New York headquarters the circuit had not formulated policies because there had been no official action; and until there was action, he did not think the circuit was justified in taking decisions that might have to be altered or junked.

He remarked that so far as the expected fuel shortage affected theatre operations it would affect the circuit no more than other circuits and theatres. In any event, he said, the Loew chain is now doing what it has done every summer: stocking its bins and fueling its tanks, for the forthcoming autumn and winter.

He refused to hazard what percentage of the chain's houses depended on the "car trade," beyond remarking that in the neighborhood situations, which comprise many of the Loew properties, there was no dependence on such trade.

He also remarked that patronage devices, such as use of special buses, in event of restricted use of gasoline, were not being thought of at present, because the extent of the restrictions was not known. He added that he did not think such buses would be allowed because they would nullify the object of the Government action.

Sees Clearance Affected

Joseph Seider, head of the Prudential circuit, which recently acquired the Casey and Wheeler group, and now has theatres in Long Island, Westchester, New Jersey, and Connecticut, said 85 per cent of his theatres depended almost solely on trade from people with cars.

"This is most true of the smaller towns," he said, adding that he expected bus lines to be as much under fuel surveillance as private cars, and for that reason could not envision the use of buses by theatres, inasmuch as such would increase gasoline consumption.

He remarked that one good feature in the situation was that persons would patronize neighborhood theatres, rather than travel distances to a theatre which had more fortunate clearance.

He refused to hazard the average distance traveled by persons attending his theatres, remarking that the subject was one of dispute in current clearance cases.

The Prudential-Wheeler houses depend entirely on oil for heating, he said.

Mr. Seider said oil dealers were guaranteeing delivery for the winter, but were refusing to quote prices. He said the average tank capacity in a theatre was 2,000 gallons, precluding possible stock-up sufficient to last through a winter.

A. Gordon Reid, general manager of the Fabian circuit, with theatres in upper and lower New York State, and in New Jersey, said:

"We have about 30 houses in areas in which people come to theatres by automobiles, and in those cases, the majority of the theatres' trade is from those people. This has been too sudden for us to think much about it, and formulate a policy as yet, because the Government hasn't definitely said what it is going to do. What has happened up to now have been statements and suggestions.

"However, I can predict it will be a serious business for our country houses. I can see only a reliance, if automobile travel is restricted, upon buses, because that is the normal alternative means of transportation. Possibly, we may have to offer buses ourselves, if the Government will allow us to buy gasoline for the purpose. That's still in the future.

"I cannot say there is any 'average' distance traveled by persons who come to our theatres. There is no longer any 'country.' A person may be 20 miles away; but if the picture is good, he'll hop into his car and be at our theatre in 30 minutes.

"So many of our theatres depend upon a lot of small towns nearby; Pompton Lakes, for instance, and Middletown, and Port Jervis. All of these have many small towns and villages nearby, from which people come by car.

"Heating in our houses will be another problem this winter; but we're not thinking that far ahead, this week. About 75 per cent of our houses use oil. Maybe we'll have what they had in the first World War—heatless days, one day per week when a theatre will be closed."

First Runs Would Be Hurt

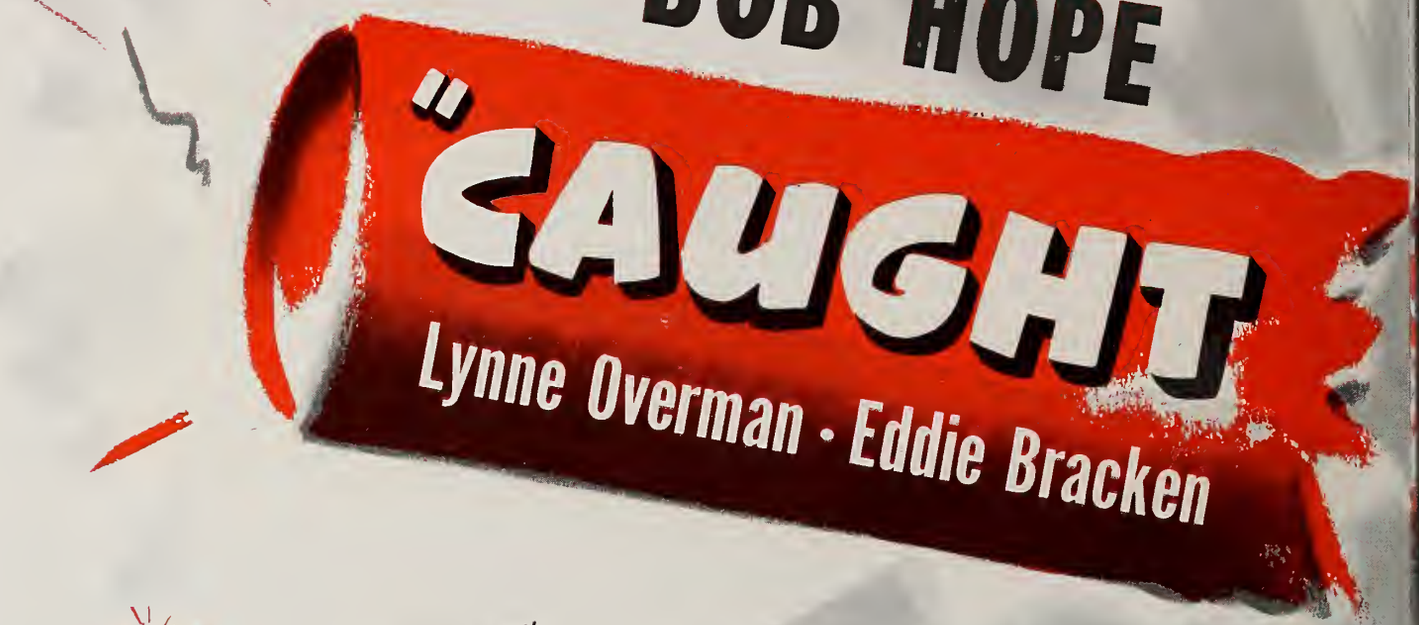
George Skouras, head of the chain bearing his name, predicted a possible gasoline restriction would hurt first runs only, benefit neighborhood houses.

He deprecated the importance of car trade and said 90 per cent of the country's theatres depended for the bulk of their business, upon people of the immediate neighborhood.

Additionally, Mr. Skouras saw reduced car travel as a boon because the automobile is to some extent a competitor, as an entertainment medium, to the theatre.

The importance of reduced fuel consumption to theatres was belittled by the circuit head, who remarked problems such as giveaways, games, and double and triple feature programs, were more pressing to the current and future success of exhibition.

Heating of his theatres was not a question of moment, he asserted, pointing out that tanks in theatre basements were now filled. "If the time ever comes when they refuse to sell us oil," he said, "there won't be any business to use the oil for."



Joseph Bernhard, general manager of the Warner circuit, remarked that he could not see oil restrictions here, when they have not got them in Canada, and added:

"Anyway, nothing's definite. Government leaders make lots of statements, and we have to wait for something tangible."

More than half the chain's theatres apart from its first runs are dependent upon car trade, Mr. Bernhard estimated. He added no special oil orders, or plans for additional tank installations, had been given.

Use Romantic Types for S. A., Hollywood Told

Hollywood's endeavor to help cement relations between the Anglo-Saxon and Latin republic in the Western Hemisphere, by sending motion picture stars below to South America on good-will missions, is worthwhile, but it should be done with top-flight and romantic stars, according to a Latin-American publishers' representative, Pedro Weinstein Uris, who was in New York for two weeks, buying Disney cartoon and other cartoon publishing rights, and who left for his Buenos Aires headquarters this week.

Mr. Uris, traveling auditor for the publishing house, Tor, producers of children's magazines and of books, said Latin-Americans were already pre-sold on the United States, its democratic system, and the necessity for holding together in the face of outside aggression; and that, therefore, the good-will trips of film stars such as Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and of Don Ameche were well received.

Want "Romantics"

However, he said, Mr. Fairbanks is not, in his opinion, the type of say Tyrone Power, Clark Gable and Robert Taylor, who have occupied the imaginations of Latin-Americans, and especially of their women, as romantics. He asserted Mr. Fairbanks, instead, was known as a virile, active type.

He added that while the missions of such people accomplished their purpose, they were, however, deadly to the subsequent popularity of the stars—a fact, he admitted, which might give pause to the stars and the companies who may release them for such missions.

The unveiling of a romantic motion picture star—his appearance in person instead of in the screen roles Latin-Americans have hitherto been accustomed to—is too great an impact for the sometimes unrealistic Latin screen fans, Mr. Uris pointed out. They become disappointed, he said.

The Nazis and their friends in Argentina and other South American countries have not been able to overcome at all the influence of the American screen in maintaining good relations between Latin and Anglo-Saxon countries on this side of the world, Mr. Uris declared.

In fact, in Argentina, Nazi influence is ridiculously small, in comparison with American, he claimed. El Pampero, the sole Buenos Aires newspaper favorable to the Nazis, and a newspaper about which much comment has been made, has a circulation of less than 50,000, and is supported mainly by Axis funds. "It is a laugh," he said.

El Pampero is the newspaper which has frequently criticized not only North American diplomacy but also the American screen, and especially the sending of American film stars to the Latin countries.

Nebraska Jurors Fine Fox-Midwest; Crescent Case Set

A Nebraska independent on Monday won triple damages of $7,789.01, plus legal costs, from Fox Midwest Amusement Corporation when a jury in federal district court at Lincorn, Neb., found the circuit guilty of Federal anti-trust law violations.

F. E. Hollingsworth, owner and operator of the Pix theater in Beatrice, Nebraska, brought suit against Fox alleging violation of the Sherman Act and other national anti-trust laws. A jury set Mr. Hollingsworth's actual damages at $2,596.67. The law provides he has a right to thrice this amount. Fox intimated it would not appeal.

Fox Midwest was the last of 17 defendants named in Mr. Hollingsworth's original suit in which he asked $234,000 damages and charged a conspiracy among the defendants to force him out of business by giving the Fox house, the Rivoli, a "corner" on virtually all first run films. All but three Fox subsidiaries and their officers were dismissed by Judge T. C. Munger after the trial was a week old. The day before the case went to the jury, Judge Munger directed a verdict favoring all the remaining defendants but Fox Midwest.

The judge told the jurors that evidence of a conspiracy was inconclusive and that they should devote themselves only to the question of monopoly. Seven distributors had been named in the conspiracy action.

Take Crescent Depositions

Preparations for the anti-trust suit against the Crescent Amusement Corp. which comes to trial July 7th in federal court at Nashville continued this week as Alan N. Doby, special attorney for the Department of Justice, continued to gather depositions from principals in the case.

Mr. Doby has questioned Anthony Sudekum, president of Crescent, and Kermit C. Stengell, president of the co-defendant Rockwood Amusement Company. O. W. Hughes, assistant United States Attorney, has mailed subpoenaes to 72 witnesses. The list includes former theatre managers, bookers, owners and others associated at one time or another with operations of the defendants or other companies in the same area. Many of the persons named are now residents of cities scattered from New York to California.

Mr. Hughes has entered a motion with Judge Elmer D. Davies requesting that the court compel their appearance. Judge Davies has not yet ruled on a defense petition for a jury trial.

A supplemental bill of particulars recently entered adds 24 alleged anti-trust violations in Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, Arkansas and Mississippi to the government's complaint.

The anti-trust suit entered at Sioux Falls, North Dakota, by Arthur R. Johnson against Minnesota Amusement Company and major distributors asking $523,500 damages will come to trial in federal district court at Sioux Falls in October, Government attorneys indicated this week.

NOTHING REALLY WRONG BETWEEN FCC AND RADIO, FLY TELLS SENATE

Interstate Commerce Committee Hearings Held Following Resolutions to Investigate FCC; New Networks Hinted

Radio networks should be licensed but, in any event, only minor revisions in present laws appertaining to radio are necessary to eliminate the difficulties between the industry and the Federal Communications Commission, its chairman, James L. Fly, said in Washington on Monday, taking a conciliatory tone after several weeks of somewhat acriminous debate with representatives of the radio chains, both at the National Association of Broadcasters convention in St. Louis and the three-week Senate Interstate Commerce Committee hearings in Washington.

The hearings were on a resolution by Senator Wallace White, Republican, of Maine, to investigate the FCC after its action of May 2nd, ordering the National Broadcasting Company to sell its Blue network, and criticising what it termed "monopoly" in broadcasting. Commissioner Fly on Monday again asserted he did not doubt the Commission's authority to act and order as it did; and that the hearings were, "for all practical purposes" an investigation. He added the FCC was willing, nevertheless, to have its authority determined by the courts, and reiterated that its regulations were beneficial to radio as a whole.

Committee Recesses

Meanwhile, the Senate committee was recessed, subject to the call of the chairman, Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana, and this week was studying the testimony taken in three weeks of hearings, during which Commissioner Fly defended his orders of May 2nd, and Commissioner T. A. M. Craven, the NBC, the Columbia Broadcasting System, had several independent station operators assailed them.

For thirteen days spread over a three-week period, members of the committee had heard the jurisdiction of the commission over the networks alternately defended and attacked. Chairman Wheeler presided at all hearings; Senator White attended nearly all the sessions and other members of the minority were fairly constant in their participation while the Democratic members appeared as opportunity afforded them time.

If the committee decides to make no further investigation it may, nevertheless, suggest the suspension of the regulations to afford time for the consideration of legislation revising and modernizing the radio law, which all parties agreed was desirable. Some legislation already has been drafted by Senator White, more clearly defining the powers of the commission and amending the provisions dealing with appeals to the courts from FCC decisions.

Meanwhile, a new controversy appeared to have broken out in the commission, which on June 19th announced that Mutual had informally submitted a new form of contract with its affiliates, which is non-exclusive, contains no provision for option time, permits stations to determine annually whether to remain with the network and gives affiliates responsibility in the selection and rejection of programs.

The same majority which supported the network regulations joined in passing on the contract, announcing that while it has not been formally approved the commission "believes that the new Mutual network form of affiliation contract, as it understands the operations intended thereunder, will be in compliance with the letter and spirit of the regulations."

Commissioners Norman S. Case and T. A. M. Craven, who dissented from the chain investigation report and regulations, opposed the majority on the ground that it was "jumping the gun" in passing on the contract before the regulations which it is designed to meet are operative.

On representations that parties interested in the subject would not be able to prepare their presentation for the hearings scheduled to open June 25 on newspaper operation of broadcasting stations, the commission postponed the hearings until July 23.

The application, asking for postponement until September 15, was filed by Harold Hough, chairman of the Newspaper-Radio Committee, who requested additional time to give newspaper interests an opportunity to prepare their testimony and evidence.

New Networks Hinted

First hint of a possible new network was dropped at the Senate committee's FCC hearings, last week, when, in criticizing the Commission's rule over radio, John J. Burns, counsel for the CBS, expressed doubt that "even Ed Noble would want to start a network" under FCC rules.

He referred to Edward J. Noble, owner of station WMCA, New York, who refused to confirm the significance of the remark, when reached, later, in that city.

The Senate hearings closed Friday, June 20th.

At the Friday hearing, J. W. Lee of Station KGFF, Shawnee, Okla.; Clarence Wheeler, vice-president of WHEC, Rochester, N. Y.; James Weiland of WFTC, Kinston, N. C., and Charles B. Hasbrook of WCAX, Burlington, Vt., attacked the May 2 regulations, while Hope H. Barrol, Jr., of WFBR, Baltimore, charged the chain contracts give the networks an option on substantially all the desirable hours of affiliates.

Lee, whose station formerly was affiliated with MBS, testified that he had been forced to pay more in line charges to A. T. & T. than he had received from his affiliation with Mutual, which drew the remark from Senator Bone of Washington that a "little more rigid inquiry into A. T. & T. line charges by the FCC might be wise."

Paul W. Morency, of Harvard, a vice-president of the Independent Radio Network Affiliates, on that day testified his unit voted 205 to 18 that grievances with networks should be adjusted by direct negotiation, rather than by Government regulation. He added the unit also voted support of the White resolution for an FCC investigation, 210 to 15.

A chief speaker, also, on that day, was Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, who asserted the new Commission regulations had brought the radio industry "awfully close to censorship" and that "radio stations are in a fearful frame of mind."

Mr. Miller charged the public, generally, had never complained about the service given them by the networks. He also said present rules applying to radio, are antiquated.

The Commission's ruling that its orders must become effective by August second, was also assailed by the NAB head, who noted no specific reasons were advanced by the FCC for setting that date.

Trammell Attacks Commission

Niles R. Trammell, president of the NBC, was a chief speaker on Wednesday, June 18th, noting, above all, that the same commission which has been threatening profitably operated and honestly acquired properties of the networks, is also demanding they invest their money in the uncertainty of television.

After charging that, unless Congress acts now, Commissioner Fly may, under powers conceded now, take over the radio industry eventually, Mr. Trammell claimed the commission chairman was attempting to benefit the Mutual Broadcasting System, a competitor, which has supported Mr. Fly.

He additionally asserted: "Nowhere in the history of administrative regulation has so brutal a method of amputation of a major portion of a great private enterprise, been invoked."

Under the FCC rules, Mr. Trammell added, a prospective purchaser of discarded NBC affiliates would be unable to have exclusive contracts with them, would not be certain of the allegiance of these affiliates for more than one year, and could not have an option on their time during the year.

Senator Wheeler, committee chairman, said long term contracts gave networks control over station affiliates, and that that control should be subject to FCC approval.

On Monday, Commissioner Fly denied knowing of plans for Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Petroleum Coordinator, to take over communications. He added he doubted the reports and did not believe Mr. Ickes desired to add to his present troubles.

SEC Holds Hearings on Atlas Proposal for Reorganization of K.-A.-O.; Picture Stock Trading Is Still Negligible

J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., announced Monday in New York, that the company had concluded a loan agreement with the First National Bank of Boston and the Bank of Manhattan Company, making available to it funds for production and general corporate purposes up to $5,600,000. The loan agreement, which provides for interest at five per cent, runs for three years from June 30, 1941 and is renewable at the option of the company, for an additional year.

More than $4,000,000 of the loan is understood to be new money. The First National of Boston made available to Universal a year ago $1,500,000 for the retirement of a $1,110,000 studio mortgage held by Consolidated Film Laboratories.

"The new loan consolidates and expands the credit facilities available to the company," said Mr. Cowdin. "The additional working capital provided under the agreement is important at the present time since the company's current program calls for the manufacture of a substantial portion of the product for the 1941-42 season prior to its opening on September 1. Universal production is already well ahead of any previous years and it expects to enter the new season with a record number of pictures completed and in the hands of its exchanges for delivery in accordance with its release schedule."

P.R.C. Additional Funds From Consolidated

Financing plans also commensurate with the expanded production, and increased budgets on the 42 pictures on the 1941-42 program of Producers Releasing Corporation, were consummated last Friday by O. Henry Briggs, president of P.R.C., and Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries.

This new financing by Consolidated supplements the deal made in February in which Consolidated made available to PRC a sum in excess of $1,000,000 for the completion of the current 1940-41 program and the 1941-42 picture schedule of 42 feature productions.

With 34 of its 38 pictures on the 1940-41 program completed, and the remaining four in production or preparation, PRC is ahead of schedule, and is set to begin production on the 1941-42 program in August.

George Batcheller, in charge of production for PRC, has already scheduled "Jungle Siren," the first 'special' on the new program, to go before the cameras in July.

Sigmund Neufeld, supervisor of westerns, has in preparation the nine stories secured from Johnston McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro," to be used for Buster Crabbe, George Houston and Tom Tyler, on the 1941-42 program of "Adventures of Billy the Kid," "The Lone Rider" and "The Frontier Marshal" series.

Production unit heads of PRC include Jed Buell, John T. Coyle, T. H. Richmond and K-B Productions.

LOS ANGELES SEVENTH INDUSTRIAL CITY

Los Angeles now ranks seventh in the United States as an industrial area. In value of production, the area leads in manufacturing motion pictures and airplanes. It is second to Detroit in automobile assembly and second to Akron in rubber products. Other important industrial activities include oil refining, meat packing, food processing and furniture and clothing manufacturing.

Monogram Acquires Stock from Pathe

Monogram franchise holders, together with W. Ray Johnston and Trem Carr, last Thursday, June 19th, acquired 65,866⅔ shares of Monogram stock held until then by Pathe Laboratory, Inc.

The acquisition of this stock gives the Johnston franchise holders' group approximately a 50 per cent holding in Monogram.

K.-A.-O. SEC Hearings Open and Close

Washington hearings before the Securities and Exchange Commission last Monday on the Atlas Company proposals for reorganizations of Keith-Albee-Orpheum failed to bring applicants interested in the hearings to testify.

After Irving Schiller, counsel for the SEC introduced the application in evidence, Trial Examiner Charles S. Lobinger called for the witnesses who did not appear, and the hearing was closed, subject to any amendments that may be filed later by the applicants.

Seeking exemption from provisions of the investment company act for certain purchases and sales of securities and other property among them are Atlas Corporation, RKO, K-A-O, American Company, Michael J. Meehan and a new company to be known as the B. F. Keith Corporation.

Meanwhile in Wilmington, Delaware, dismissal of a Chancery Court action last week to enjoin RKO from voting its seven per cent cumulative preferred stock of K-A-O in favor of a proposed reorganization, has paved the way for consummation of the plan. Chancellor W. W. Harrington granted the dismissal on petition of the counsel for the J. S. Farlee Company, New York, which brought the original complaint.

The meeting of Keith-Albee-Orpheum stockholders to act on the proposed plan for refunding and consolidation for the company, scheduled for Tuesday, was postponed to Friday to allow time for attorneys to complete contract forms. Approval of the plan is expected at the meeting.

SEC Reports on Film Stock Deals

Trading by officers and directors in the securities of motion picture companies continued negligible in April, according to the first semi-monthly summary for that month issued Monday by the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington.

The only transaction reported was the acquisition of 100 shares of Columbia Pictures common stock by Abraham Schneider, New York, officer, who at the close of April held 1,504 shares and 7,880 options for common stock.

In reports on the holdings of persons becoming officers or directors of corporations, the SEC listed Hugh S. Robertson, New York, as holding no Radio Keith Orpheum securities when he became a director May 1st.

A sharp jump in business in the Third New York (Broadway) District brought Federal admission tax collections in May to $6,695,991, an increase of $1,328,000 over the preceding month, it was reported Monday by the Internal Revenue Bureau at Washington.

The May total compared with $5,627,394 in April and $1,791,096 in May, 1940, at which time the 40-cent ticket tax exemption was still in effect.

In the New York theatrical district, collections increased from $514,220 in April to $1,846,594 in May, or slightly more than the increase nationally. Almost all of the increase was in box office collections, which jumped from $446,265 to $1,773,084, only slight improvement being shown in other classifications with collections in tickets sold by brokers increasing from $14,919 to $16,931, permanent use or lease of boxes and seats from $103 to $356, and admissions to roof gardens and cabarets from $52,993 to $56,223.

Bureau records show that for the five months of the calendar year—January to May—total U. S. collections were $32,766,903, against $9,522,228 in the corresponding period in 1940, while for the first 11 months of the fiscal year, which ends June 30th, they were $65,082,445 against $20,242.313.

Encouraging Signs In Ohio Sectors

Retail sales in six Ohio key cities have aggregated $125,000,000 monthly so far this year, compared with $102,000,000 last year, $94,000,000 in 1939, and $118,000,000 in 1929, according to figures released this week by the Central National Bank, Cleveland, for their monthly business outline. A study shows that sales for the full year will reach at least $1,500,000,000 for the six cities, and at least $3,200,000,000 for the state, an all-time high.

Approximately 200,000 jobs have been filled by private industry in the state during the past 18 months, lifting the total employment figure to 1,900,000 men and women. About 100,000 additional openings are expected to be created before the end of the year.

Frontier To Release "Land" in September

"Native Land," a full length "dramatized documentary film, portraying the American tradition of liberty in terms of today" is nearly completed, and will be released by early September, according to its producer, Frontier Films, Inc., of New York City.

The film, now 100 minutes long, was produced by Paul Strand and Leo Hurwitz, of Frontier and features Art Smith, Howard de Sylva, Virginia Stevens, and Amelia Romano, players with experience in that city's Group Theatre. Music is by Marc Blitzstein, commentary by David Wolff, and narration by Paul Robeson. To be printed on 35mm., the film represents two and one-half years of production, money for which, Mr. Hurwitz said recently, was advanced only by Frontier.

9-MAN BOARD IN HOLLYWOOD RULES ON SCRIPTS AND FILMS FOR THE PCA

Hays Emphasizes Functioning of Board; 33,917 Opinions on Stories, Scripts, Finished Films Issued in the Six-Year Period

Joseph I. Breen's actual transfer, last week, from the motion picture industry's Production Code Administration in Hollywood to executive head of the RKO Radio Studios, brought emphasis from Will H. Hays, speaking for the organized industry, that "the work of the Code Administration is so organized it will continue to function effectively.

"The Code Administration operates as a board, with a director," Mr. Hays pointed out. A director successor to Mr. Breen is still to be named.

The board is an eleven-man setup, nine in Hollywood at the main source of production, one in the east, and another, Francis S. Harmon, traveling between both offices as executive assistant to Mr. Hays. Mr. Harmon also is head of the eastern branch, assisted by Lester Thompson, who also is director of the industry's Advertising Advisory Council.

The nine board members in Hollywood include Geoffrey Shurlock, Charles R. Metzger, Arthur Houghton, Harry Zehner, Earl E. Bright, T. A. Lynch, Charles C. Pettijohn, Jr., Simmon Levy and Addison Durland—a membership with a wide variety of backgrounds, geographical, social, professional and religious to assist Hollywood in maintaining proper standards in pictures under the Code.

During the six-year period commencing January 1, 1935, and ending December 31, 1940, the Code Board issued 33,917 opinions relative to the suitability of novels, stage plays, short stories, original scenarios, shooting scripts and completed pictures.

Committee Views Scripts, Films

A committee of the Board views story or completed picture, and if certain specified changes are suggested, the committee recommends to the Board that script or film be approved upon this basis.

Mr. Shurlock, senior member of the Hollywood nine-man Board, who presided at the daily conferences during Mr. Breen's trips to New York, Europe and elsewhere, will continue temporarily as acting director. It is at these daily conferences that decisions are made, based on the various committee opinions of scripts and pictures viewed within the previous 24 hours.

The Board's facilities are available both to MPPDA members and non-members. Last year, some 523 features were approved; 329 of them were productions of member companies and 194 were from non-members.

An insight into the committee-membership equipment reveals a wide diversification of backgrounds, all making a continuing contribution toward the achievement of a balanced judgment on the part of the board as a whole.

FRANCIS S. HARMON, head of the eastern branch of the Production Code Administration, and executive assistant to Will H. Hays, was born in Paulding, Mississippi, in 1895. His father and grandfather were Methodist ministers. He holds B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of Virginia, and LL.B. from Harvard Law School and an honorary LL.D. from Millsaps College, in which Mississippi institution he lectured in history.

He served for two years as Assistant Attorney General of the State of Mississippi, practiced law in Jackson and is now a member of the Mississippi and New York Bars and of the American Bar Association. He was editor of a Mississippi daily newspaper for five years and is now the president of the corporation which owns and publishes this daily.

During the World War, he enlisted in France as a private in the regular army, later becoming a lieutenant of field artillery in the A.E.F.

Mr. Harmon served as National President of the YMCA for two years (1930-1931) then as General Secretary of the International Committee of the YMCA's of the United States and Canada for five years.

The Production Code Administration

Standards of morality and good taste embodied in the motion picture industry's Production and Advertising Codes are applied by this group. Reading from left to right: Simon Levy, Arthur J. Houghton, Harry H. Zehner, Charles R. Metzger, Geoffrey Shurlock, acting director; Francis S. Harmon, head of the Eastern branch in New York; Thomas A. Lynch, Earl E. Bright, Charles C. Pettijohn, Jr., and Addison Durland. Lester Thompson, administrator of the Advertising Code in New York and assistant to Mr. Harmon on Production Code matters, does not appear.

GEOFFREY M. SHURLOCK was born in Liverpool, England, in 1894, and came to the United States as a child. He is a grandson of an Anglican clergyman, a member of the Episcopal Church and is married. He was educated in private schools in California.

He joined the Production Code Administration in 1932.

LESTER THOMPSON, assistant to Mr. Harmon in the Eastern Branch of the Production Code Administration, in addition to his duties as Director of the Advertising Advisory Council, was born in California in 1888 and is a graduate of San Francisco schools. He attended the University of California, where he was a member of Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

He has been continuously in the amusement and newspaper business since leaving college in 1909, specializing in publicity work. He was 11 years with Ringling Brothers and later with the combined Ringling-Barnum & Bailey Circus. Between circus seasons, he publicized theatrical attractions and road-show pictures.

Mr. Thompson was associated for many years with the late J. J. McCarthy, his first assignment being Griffith's "Intolerance" in 1916.

Following service in the Navy during the war, Mr. Thompson was one of the original ten men selected by Paramount to inaugurate the first exploitation department in the motion picture industry. He had headquarters in Boston and covered all New England. In 1930, he re-joined Fox Films and spent two years as special exploitation representative in Australia and New Zealand.

When J. J. McCarthy joined the Hays organization in 1933 to inaugurate the Advertising Advisory Council, Mr. Thompson came along as his first assistant. Following Mr. McCarthy's death in 1937, Mr. Thompson was appointed director.

EARL E. BRIGHT was born at Evansville, Indiana, in 1898. After attending the public and high schools of that city, he was employed by the Gulf Refining Company and the P&WV Railway Company in Pittsburgh, entering the University of Chicago in 1921 and receiving the Ph.D. degree in 1924. He has been an assistant to Will H. Hays, in New York and Hollywood, for the past fifteen years.

ARTHUR J. HOUGHTON was born in Boston, attended the public schools in that city, and then went to St. Joseph's College, New Brunswick, Canada. In 1913 he married Sallie Fisher, light opera prima donna, and they have two children. He and his family are members of the Catholic Church.

He has been connected with show business since 1908 when he served as manager for several musical comedies. In 1910 he began a long association with Charles B. Dillingham at the Globe Theatre, New York. As manager for the team of Montgomery and Stone, he superintended all of their productions up to 1928, and also supervised the three silent movies made by Fred Stone in California in 1917. After touring Europe for Flo Ziegfeld for talent and plays, he managed the New Amsterdam Theatre

President Receives Zanuck's Report on Defense Films

Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production for Twentieth Century-Fox, and head of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, last week made a report to President Roosevelt on what the film industry is doing to aid the defense program.

Mr. Zanuck visited the White House, where he is understood to have given the President a detailed outline of what is being accomplished, and what is planned for the future in the way of training films and other pictures.

Following his visit he returned to Hollywood last Thursday, June 19th.

Dismiss RCA Suit

All causes of action in the consolidated stockholders' suit against the Radio Corporation of America were dismissed in New York Supreme Court Tuesday by Justice Aaron J. Levy. The suit had referred to alleged misconduct by officers and directors prior to 1932.

The court overruled stockholders' contentions that the company concealed certain acts and settled previous stockholders' actions, so that the six-year period in which suits can be brought expired before the commencement of the dismissed action.

ASCAP Sues Broadcasters on Barring of Songs

During the past few weeks while the networks have been busy in Washington, testifying before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee hearings on the FCC rulings concerning NBC and CBS, officials of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, whose negotiations with the networks have been quiescent for more than a month, quietly set in motion a four-way legal suit filed against the National Broadcasting Company, Columbia Broadcasting System, National Association of Broadcasters, and Radio Corporation of America. The suit asks for damages based on about 1,000,000 songs "banned by NBC and CBS since January 1st."

Following announcement of ASCAP's legal move, the networks countered with a "test case," instituted by Broadcast Music, Inc., the music publishing firm set up by the networks after the split on the first of the year. Edward B. Marks Music Corporation is named with BMI in the suit filed in the Supreme Court of New York which aims to determine legally an involved copyright problem.

The ASCAP suit which will be handled by its attorneys, Schwartz and Frohlich, with David L. Podell as its trial lawyer, will seek triple damages against the "big-business elements" of radio, arguing wholesale conspiracy in restraint of trade and figuring the damages at approximately $15,000 a day lost in revenue since January 1st.

BMI's test case is not for damages, but will argue for clarification of ownership of 15,000 songs in the catalog of the Marks publishing company, which, since January, has been a BMI affiliate. BMI claims that it has been playing songs written by ASCAP members before the writers joined the Society, but that it has refrained from using the songs while the writers were members of ASCAP. The network music company wants the Supreme Court to settle, once and for all time, the question of who owns the copyrights to the songs and whether or not a music publisher has sole control of a song's copyright. ASCAP's contention has been that composers are privileged to license these rights jointly with the publishers. The suit does not involve in any way the numbers in the Marks' catalog which are presently being performed by BMI licenses, but is intended to have the court clarify who owns the rights so that compositions involved will be available for performance.

The test case compositions selected are: "Bluer Than Blue," by Lew Pollack and Tot Seymour; "You Fit Into the Picture," by Bud Green and Jesse Greer, and "Mississippi River," by J. Rosamond Johnson and Frank Abbott. All except Mr. Abbott are ASCAP members.

Taking time out from its current litigation problems, the Society's board of directors, at a meeting held early this week, authorized a $1,000,000 dividend for the second quarter, ending June 30th, which will be paid to ASCAP members by July 1st. The dividend, which was approved in the form of a resolution proposed by J. J. O'Connor, publisher member of the board, is much higher than the membership anticipated in view of the Society's decreased radio revenue since January 1st. Approximately $1,500,000 for quarter dividends was made by ASCAP in normal revenue years.

Responsibility of Films in Defense Cited by Arnold

Addressing the Rotary International convention last week (June 18) in Denver, Edward Arnold, president of the Screen Actors Guild, pledged anew the motion picture industry to service of the democracies.

"There are two Hollywoods," he declared. "One is the Hollywood everybody knows. The other is the Hollywood which, until a few years ago, nobody knew. One is the Hollywood of make believe and glamour, of beauty and artistry—the Hollywood which presents itself on the theatre marquee and on the screen inside the theatre. That Hollywood you know, and tonight I want to talk about the other Hollywood—the Hollywod behind the screen, the Hollywood that is grateful to the public which made it and is aware of its responsibility to that public, the Hollywood which is humbly aware of the great instrument for good within its control and sincerely seeks the best ways to use it, the Hollywood that serves the public interest in a thousand ways.

"Purpose Is To Entertain"

"Make no mistake about it; the purpose of the entertainment industry is to entertain. But that isn't all. We are conscious within our industry of our responsibility to the public and to those democratic institutions and traditions which made possible the free development of the motion picture.

"Box office isn't the only important word in our industry. Service is another.

"The motion picture developed under democratic conditions, thriving under the basic freedom which is freedom of expression. In the democracies, public support carries with it public responsibility.

"The motion picture, product of democracy, has had that support and now gladly shoulders its responsibility. In the service of the way of life which created it, the motion picture industry dedicates itself to the democracies.

"I bring to you the greetings of the Motion Picture Society for the Americas, in which I have the privilege of serving as a member of the board of directors. . . . The society was established by the Office for the Coordination of Commercial and Cultural Relations Between the American Republics. Its directors, together with John Hay Whitney . . . and Kenneth Thompson, executive secretary of the Screen Actors Guild who was drafted to direct the work of the society, contribute their services toward making the motion picture a medium of strengthening the cultural ties among the 21 American republics.

Seeks to Foster Unity

"Using the educational potentialities of the films, the society seeks to foster unity in our hemisphere, based on an intimate first hand knowledge of each nation's art, music, literature, history and ways of life. Those of you whose homes are in Mexico City will remember the happy results of a visit by 50 of our leading actors, directors, writers and executives to your city in April. Others of you whose homes are in the other American republics we hope to see and meet with personally on future trips to Central and South America. We will come to you for advice and counsel.

"If you wish us to, we will make motion pictures in your countries. The films which we make in our country and send to you for your entertainment will, we hope, be consistent with your culture and your ideals. Through the medium of the motion picture, we hope to become not only good neighbors, but better neighbors—better friends."

Telling of the work of the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense and the making of special films for various branches of the armed forces, as well as other agencies, Mr. Arnold continued:

"Meanwhile in the commercial production of motion pictures, consideration must be given to the requirements of civilian morale. We must continue to produce the best of entertainment. It is interesting to note that the president of the British Board of Trade considered American motion pictures so important to the morale of the British Isles that he requested that film imports be maintained at the highest possible level. For England, American films remain an 'essential service' and the same is true at home and in other American republics."

Mr. Arnold also told of the charities activities of the industry, as well as arrangements for special shows at encampments of armed forces.

Paramount Permit Issued

Permit for the construction of Paramount's new $100,000 exchange building has been issued by the District Building Inspectors. Delay in getting the permit was due to the building boom in the capital. Browne Enters Plea Of Not Guilty

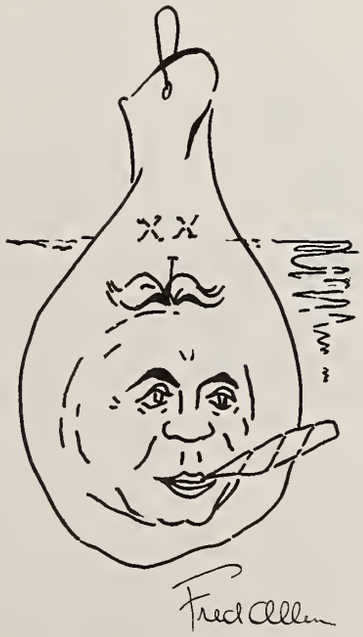
George E. Browne, president of the IATSE, on Friday, June 20th, entered a plea of not guilty to the three-count indictment which charges him and William Bioff with violations of the Federal Anti-Racketeering Act by alleged extortion of $550,000 from four film companies. Judge Edward A. Conger of the Federal court in New York has fixed bail at $50,000 and set trial for August 18th, the same day as the Bioff trial.

Judge Conger in denying a request by Browne to fix bail at $20,000 said he saw no reason to differentiate between Bioff, whose bail is $50,000, and Browne. Upon the request of U. S. Attorney Matthias F. Correa, the court admonished Browne not to interfere with Government witnesses.

Harry Young Promoted



Harry H. Young, Universal salesman in Columbus, Ohio, has been appointed manager of the Universal exchange in Cincinnati, to succeed Peter Rosian, who last week was named manager of a newly-created district consisting of Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Oklahoma and Dallas territories. Mr. Rosian will continue to make his headquarters in Cincinnati, which will necessitate remodeling the new exchange building, which was dedicated a few weeks ago. Successor to Mr. Young has not been announced.

COMMERCIAL TELEVISION STARTS, BUT WITHOUT FILMS FROM MAJORS

Distributors Withhold Rights to Features on Ground of Competition; Broadcasters Will Use Documentaries, Shorts

Films—none from the majors—will occupy as much as 30 per cent of commercial television time, in some instances, when the broadcasters begin the 15 hours a week of commercial television authorized to start on Tuesday July 1st. The gulf between the broadcasters and the motion picture industry in respect to the use of screen product for the airwaves remains however wider than ever before.

Renewed efforts by radio men to interest the major distributors in commercial television have been rejected. Film executives are frankly outspoken in their belief that television at present offers nothing but competition to the motion picture exhibitor and distributor. They see slight chance of revenue sufficient to induce them to offer film product. Even were the returns from sponsored television likely to run into many times the highest figure now anticipated, several key motion picture men said it was doubtful that film producers would jeopardize their theatre contracts by supplying product for the airwaves.

Old Films, Shorts Used

Despite the coolness of the industry towards television, the National Broadcasting Company, Columbia Broadcasting System, and DuMont Television Corporation, ready to start commercial television at New York, report a sizeable percentage of their tentative program is devoted to transmitting from motion picture film. The product which they will use runs from educational pictures to travelogues, library stock material, and the output of now bankrupt independents. Little of the material is, or ever was classed as top notch motion picture product.

The attitude of the film industry as a whole towards television was characterized by the statement of a Twentieth Century-Fox official: "We regard it as competition, for the time being at least, and have not and will not release any of our product to television."

RKO spokesmen said the company's official attitude on television was "Not interested." In the past, issues of the Pathe Newsreel and the March of Time, distributed by RKO, have been used on NBC television programs. They will not be available for commercial television after July 1st. "We make films for theatres" one executive added "why should we sell or give them to a medium that may eventually keep theatre patrons at home?"

Discussed at U.A.

United Artists' distribution officials said that the question of television rights had been referred to its producer-members a year ago. At the time none were interested in a broadcasting tieup for their pictures. Since then the subject has been considered a dead issue.

Universal Pictures a year ago refused permission for a broadcaster to use one of the company's short subjects on an experimental program. According to the company's lawyers Universal still feels its interests are centered exclusively on the screen and there is no reason to sell or assign television rights either for current or old product.

Spokesmen for every other company, with the exception of Paramount which is the DuMont parent company, expressed similar disinterest in the present television market. All added that they would do nothing to jeopardize exhibitor revenues.

Sole link between the organized industry and the television studios, insofar as the use of film is concerned, is through the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense The series of short subjects and brief trailers prepared by various government agencies on phases of the national defense program have been made available for television programs. At New York NBC has indicated that it will run the series as a patriotic service. CBS, DuMont, and television stations in other sections of the country are expected to use the defense pictures also.

At the office of Francis W. Harmon, coordinator of defense activity in the motion picture industry, it was said that the films were cleared for use over the air waves at the request of the Office of Government Reports. A. A. Mercey, assistant to Lowell Mellett, director, asked the film industry to allow the broadcasters to use the national defense reels.

Other films for television are being obtained, it is reported at New York, from the files of film stock libraries and the files of independent producers. For the most part the pictures are travelogues or educational subjects, although one series of four reel mystery and comedy subjects are reported to have been obtained by NBC. General Film Library, largest of the stock collections at New York reports that it has provided film for a number of television stations, both in New York and other cities.

Payment by the broadcasters for the film is reported as nominal, in comparison with standard film rentals. The stock shots are generally purchased on a "cost per second on the air" rather than a "cost per foot basis." Other pictures have been purchased outright or leased for a specified number of television showings.

Documentary films, as a class, are more generally available for broadcasting than regular product. "The River," "The Plough That Broke the Plains," and other U. S. Government shorts are on NBC's list of future film broadcasts. British short subjects, produced for the Government Propaganda Office, describing the Empire's war effort may also be used by certain broadcasters. Propaganda will be eliminated from the reels if they are used however, one spokesman said.

ASCAP Complications

The whole issue of films for television is at present further complicated by the fact that the majority of the reels under consideration by the broadcasters contain ASCAP music, not licensed for reproduction on the airwaves. Pending a formula with the music Society new scores, from recorded public domain music, have been added to some films. Officials of ASCAP characterized the whole field of performing rights to music on television programs as "unexplored and without precedent." They expressed willingness to meet with the broadcasters, sponsors and other interested parties to work out a formula to permit performances on the copyrighted music. It was pointed out however, that there is question as to whether ASCAP holds the dramatic performing rights of some songs used in motion pictures. It was held possible that the discussion would have to include the individual composers as well as their agent society.

The largest single deal for film between a broadcaster and motion picture distributor is reported to involve the "Chronicles of America" series of educational pictures produced in the early 1920's for the Yale University Press. NBC is said to have acquired television rights from the Press at New York, and according to tentative plans will present the fifteen three-reel historical films as part of its sustaining educational television fare. MAYER READY FOR COMMERCIALS, TOO

First experimental test of theatre television in New York's Rialto Theatre was conducted last Saturday. The screening was of the Aqueduct, Long Island, horse race and was satisfactory, according to Arthur Mayer, Rialto manager, who has a three-month contract with option to renew for exclusive use in New York of the Scophony system.

Mr. Mayer plans to hold similar, unannounced, "sneak" tests between now and Tuesday, the tentative date set for his introducing television programs in his theatre, the first motion picture house to do so in New York.

When asked whether the exhibitor would have to pay promoters of highly-publicized sports events, like the Louis-Conn fight, for example, Mr. Mayer said that television of those events for theatre use probably "would be taken care of" by sponsors who would want to capitalize on the broadscale advertising of this new medium.

one time were distributed to theatres by Pathe but for over ten years have been restricted to a school, church and educational circulation.

DuMont, a Paramount subsidiary, appears at present to be the only television firm likely to have an unlimited supply of motion picture material. Tentative plans list up to five hours a week of film transmission by DuMont's New York station. Paramount's general product is not expected to be released for television. However discussions under way are said to involve use of special newsreel clips, and old short subjects and features. The studio may also experiment with special production for television use in the future.

Travel films issued by the film service of the U. S. Department of Interior's travel bureau and state and chamber of commerce scenic reels may also be used on the airwaves. However, the broadcasters will not use the commercially sponsored reels prepared, and usually distributed without cost, by railroads and travel agencies. Efforts will be made however to sell air time to such agencies. One television program man said that rates would be "low enough to practically insure the use of television by groups with film already available."

At least one contract, for five years, has been signed between a broadcaster and a film distributor. The pact with Central Films, headed by Philip M. Brown of New York, makes the company's travel and novelty short subjects available for air use on a per program rental basis. The agreement concluded a year ago is said to be the first formula for renting general films to a broadcaster. Payments are per program and rentals are said to average in the neighborhood of prices for one day's showing of a short at a Broadway first-run house.

Stations Ready for Opening Tuesday

Commercial television will make its airwave debut Tuesday with the authorization of the Federal Communications Commission. In the New York area the television stations of the two major networks, the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System are ready with the minimum of 15 hours a week of program material.

But at midweek, less than seven days before the launching of what prophets a year ago were hailing as "a great new industry," a great hush surrounded details of the new operation.

Itemized lists of programs for the first weeks were held back by both networks. Their subject matter was hinted at in only the broadest outlines. All information on sports, studio, and film subjects originally scheduled for use during early commercial operation was labelled "tentative" again this week. Officials were reluctant to discuss the possibility of sponsorship of the so-called "commercial" telecasting.

Advertising, sponsorship, rates, and other commercial details existed, it appeared, only as topics of "confidential" and "tentative" discussion in vice-presidential offices. Several advertising agencies expressed interest in possible future sponsorship of television programs. They too were advised to bide their time while the broadcasters debated and settled the commercial formula.

Product, as in the early days of experimental television, appears to remain a major problem under commercial operation. Tentative plans included studio, remote pickup and film programs. None however appeared likely to differ from the subjects used a year ago when television was on the air experimentally for as much as 16 hours weekly.

Quiet Launching Seen

The broadcasters, it was noted in New York, are not likely to launch television with publicity, expensive promotion, and high cost programs while their fate at the hands of the FCC remains uncertain. As one official observed, "You can't start an expensive new industry with one hand, and tell the government that you are facing ruin with the other." The facts surrounding the start of commercial operations on July 1st seemed to bear out the observations. Neither of the big radio networks appeared likely to go "all-out" on television until they were sure of "unrestricted enterprise" in the field. They will however comply with the FCC order and have 15 hours a week of programs on the air each week starting with July 1st.

NBC last week halted preparations of a publicity announcement of its first television plans, the hours on which its station at New York, W2XBS, will be on the air and what type of program it would broadcast in the effort to build up a television audience large enough to attract sponsors. Queries as to the first week's program were answered on Tuesday and Wednesday with the word that they were not set.

From the office of Alfred Morton, vice-president in charge of television reporters were advised that no statement on NBC television plans would be published. Programs, it was said, will be announced from week to week. Brief summaries will be sent to radio editors of the daily papers for listing on the radio pages. However there is to be no publicity, or other building up of program offerings. Direct mail, to the three or four thousand owners of television receivers in the New York area, will be relied upon by NBC to inform potential audiences of what will be on the television programs.

The tentative lineup of programs for the first week closely followed the pattern of experimental broadcasts which have been underway, intermittently, for almost two years. Afternoon and evening transmission periods, starting at 2:30 and 9:00 P.M. were expected to fill in the minimum of 15 hours and comply with FCC time requirements. Between July 1st and 7th at least four tennis matches, a baseball game between the Brooklyn Dodgers and Philadelphia, and unspecified studio and film transmissions were supposed to be on the tentative bill.

They include a broadcast on July 1st of the presentation of a one million dollar check to the United Service Organization. Soldiers from Fort Dix will stage a dramatic skit prepared for the television programs to show the work of the USO. On Wednesday a television version of another show "Bottlenecks," prepared by soldiers of the Army Signal Corps at Fort Monmouth, N. J., will be broadcast.

Columbia's plans were also nebulous. At least insofar as they were publicized. The station announced that it has a full fifteen hour schedule ready for transmission from its studios in Grand Central Station. Casting directors are still interviewing and rehearsing acts, musicians, commentators and other talent for the first week programs. But no details were listed. Programs will be sent at the last minute to newspapers and to listeners on the CBS mailing list.

The schedule of Columbia operations now includes weekday broadcasts from 2:30 to 3:30 every afternoon, Monday through Friday; and 2 to 4 on Saturdays. Evening programs will be broadcast from 8 to 9:30 Monday through Thursday and from 8 to 10 on Friday and Saturday. No Sunday programs are now planned.

Work at CBS continues on the color system developed by Dr. Peter Goldmark, who is also chairman of the color committee of the Radio Manufacturers Association. CBS, it is understood, plans to press experiments, and in January 1942, when the subject again comes before the FCC will seek government authorization for colored cemmercial television.

RCA and DuMont Adjusting Receivers

Meanwhile, manufacturers are reported completing plans to make necessary adjustments on television receivers. RCA and the DuMont manufacturing firm will both make the changes through their dealers, without charge to the owners. They would not estimate how long the changes will take.

Sets will not be able to receive CBS programs, on the newly assigned Channel No. 2 until adjustments have been made.

DuMont television plans are still pending completion of installation of equipment at the transmitter at 515 Madison Avenue. According to Allen B. DuMont the firm has notified the FCC that it will be on the air not later than August 1st. It is understood that defense priorities have held up delivery on needed parts for the transmitter. As soon as they arrive and are tested the station will take the air commercially. The possibility of meeting the July 1st deadline are described as slim, but the DuMont engineers expect they will be broadcasting within a week or two afterwards.

Program plans at DuMont are described as virtually complete. They will not be announced, however, until the company starts regular operation. Will Baltin, program director, will supervise studio pickups on dramatic, and live talent shows. Between three and five hours weekly will be devoted to film transmission. Mr. DuMont said that the available subjects include travelogues, old cartoons, and a number of educational subjects. Deals with the parent company, Paramount, for newsreel, short subjects and features are still pending.

RESTRICTIONS IN SIGHT FOR AXIS FILM DISTRIBUTORS, EXHIBITORS

Hull Tells Senator Mead Film Propaganda Is Being Studied; Extension of Alien Agent Registration Act Seen

Drastic U. S. Government action is in sight to halt spread of Axis propaganda films in the United States, it was indicated Monday, following a letter made public by Secretary of State Hull to Senator James M. Mead of New York.

Secretary Hull, in reply to last week's request by Senator Mead that the U. S. make a full study of the question of propaganda film importation and circulation said, "The matter of the dissemination of propaganda of all kinds, including films, by agents and representatives of the Axis powers is one which has received careful consideration of this department as well as other departments of the Government which are immediately concerned.

"Under the Act of June 8th, 1938, which is commonly known as the Foreign Agent Registration Act," the letter continued, "any agent of a foreign principal disseminating propaganda material is required to register with this department. A careful watch over propaganda material has been kept by this department in order to determine whether the provisions of this Act are being complied with. Since it has been felt for some time that an elaboration and tightening of the statutory restrictions would be desirable, proposed amendatory legislation is now being drafted."

Extension of Law Seen

Administration officials refused to discuss the steps that might be taken to achieve this objective, but there were suggestions informally that the requirements of the alien agent registration law might be extended to cover all persons who disseminate foreign propaganda in any manner, such as through theatre exhibition. It is considered doubtful that, at the moment, the Administration would care to impose a flat ban on the dissemination of propaganda, since to do so would serve to drive it underground where it would be difficult to detect.

Under President Roosevelt's order "freezing" Axis funds, all German and Italian money in this country is made immovable in the banks where it is deposited, except that nationals of those countries residing here may be permitted to draw certain sums for living expenses.

Concerning motion pictures, the Presidential order means that if Germany or Italy has sold any films here all money received for the pictures and not already transmitted must remain in the United States until released on order of President Roosevelt.

No information has been made available as to whether any funds from motion pictures have been nailed down by the freezing order, but if so, it is not believed the sum was large.

When asked whether present developments in Washington would affect his company, George Nitze, president of Ufa Films, Inc., interviewed in his New York office early in the week, said "It may have some effect, but it is too soon to tell."

Mr. Nitze, who throughout the interview assumed an amiable, affable manner and even suggested to the reporter that his office "would be glad to cooperate in any way it could," reiterated that Ufa was "merely an American business organization that has contracts with producers in Germany and Italy on the usual percentage arrangement." He enumerated the companies as Universum Film Aktiengesellschaft, Tobis and Italafilm, Inc.

Mr. Nitze, nevertheless, is registered with the State Department under the Foreign Agent Registration Act.

Queried as to why the firm name of Ufa was used, even after it became known in this country that Universum Film Aktiengesellschaft and Tobis were taken over by Dr. Goebbels, Hitler's director of the Ministry for Enlightenment and Propaganda, Mr. Nitze said, "It was a very good idea to continue to use this particular trade name, as it was known all over the world. We were incorporated under the laws of the State of New York in December, 1924."

Mr. Nitze, who has been in America since 1928, disclaimed any knowledge of how Ufa or Tobis operate in Germany, and denied having any connection with them other than "business." He said, "I have enough to do with my distribution business here in the United States."

According to Mr. Nitze, only 15 theatres in America show German language films. He did reveal, however, that his pictures "also were shown to schools and organizations," but did not divulge what schools or organizations he meant. The fee for showings to the latter groups, was $25 a day for a feature and $5 for a short subject.

Mr. Nitze declared, "The profit to Ufa from German theatres in the United States is so small, that it amounts to practically nothing." When asked why he continued to remain in a business that netted so little profit, he replied, "We have a number of employees. We want them to keep their jobs. We make just enough profit so that we can operate."

He also denied that Ufa ever received subsidies of German funds. "If that were true," he said, "we would have a large, showy office taking up the whole floor, instead of the small office which you see."

Mr. Nitze denounced the "frequent statements in the American press that Ufa is controlled by German authorities. I most emphatically state that this is an absolute falsehood and merely invented for agitation purposes."

When asked whether Ufa was doing business in South America, Mr. Nitze said that his company did not operate outside of the United States.

Claims Newsreel Status

Referring to the current suit before Supreme Court Justice William H. Murray, in Albany, to determine whether "Sieg im Westen" is a feature film and therefore should be licensed by New York State for exhibiting, Mr. Nitze declared that it was instituted to "stir up trouble," and that the picture was "entirely made up of newsreel scenes."

According to the Ufa head, the film arrived in this country on March 23rd, 1941 and was inspected at the Port of New York customs' office, under entry number of 751647. Three weeks later it was released to Ufa, but Mr. Nitze did not say where the picture was during the three-week period. Anti-Nazi sources in New York have charged that "Sieg im Westen," like other German propaganda films, reached German consular offices first, before being released, to Ufa with orders for distribution.

The real owner of Universum Film Aktiengesellschaft and Tobis in Germany, as reported in the New York Times on May 6th, 1937, is the Franz Eher Publishing Company, owner of the Voelkischer Beobachter, the Nazis' central propaganda medium, of which Hitler is a partner. In 1937, 20 directors of Ufa resigned their posts and Dr. Goebbels named bankers, actors, directors and representatives of his Propaganda Ministry to serve on the board.

Max A. Cohen, head of Allied Theatre Owners of New York, an MPTOA affiliate, is responsible for calling Senator James M. Mead's attention to the urgency of governmental restriction on Axis propaganda films, which prompted the New York senator to inquire, in a letter addressed to Secretary Hull last week, what action the State Department was taking to ban such films as "Victory in the West."

In a statement to the press last Monday in Panama, Douglas Fairbanks, President Roosevelt's goodwill envoy to South America, declared that he found "German propaganda has made serious inroads in South America, far more serious than we realize back home."

IRELAND, PROVINCES REPORT BUSINESS UP

The motion picture theatre in Ireland and British Provincial settlements are doing capacity business, it was reported in a letter to the Paramount home office from Tony Reddin, British publicity representative for the company, who recently completed an extensive tour of the British Isles.

Blackouts are not compulsory in Ireland, Mr. Reddin wrote, and theatre business is at record levels, while theatres in Birmingham have not missed a single performance since the Blitz began.

Charter Committee Named For Los Angeles Variety

Duke Clark, Paramount branch manager who was recently named temporary chairman to appoint a committee of Los Angeles film and theatre men to request a charter from the Variety Clubs of America to organize a tent in that city, has named John Leroy Johnston, Charles Buckley, Robert H. Poole and Earl Collins to the committee and they in turn will appoint ten more committeemen.

Kenneth T. Collins, chief barker, is chairman of the Indianapolis Variety Club's sponsorship of "Opera Under the Stars" in that city July 9th and 10th. Co-chairmen are Arthur Landes and Marc J. Wolf. The proceeds from the presentation will go to the club's philanthropic work.

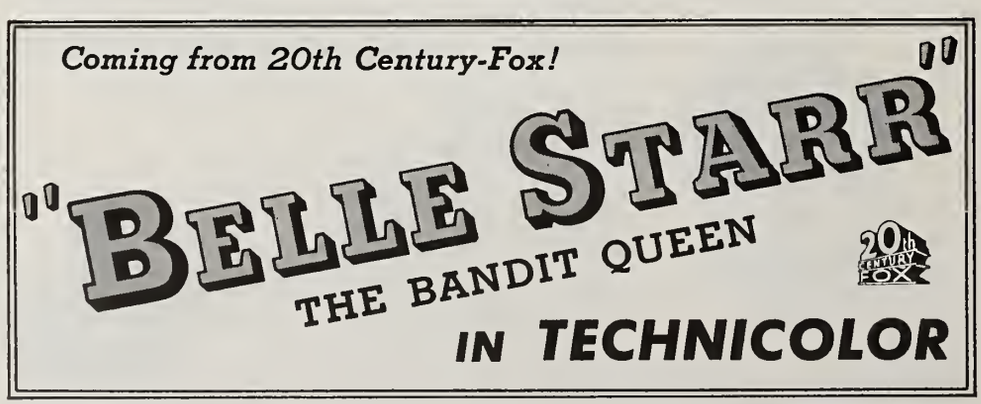
The annual outdoor party of the Kansas City Variety Club will be held July 28th, at the Ivanhoe Country Club. This is a semi-public event, with tickets available for Club members, their family and friends.



The Cincinnati Variety Club will hold its annual frolic June 30th at the Summitt Hills Country Club. Mike Greenberg and Andrew Niedenthal are co-chairmen of the affair.

World Sued on Contract

A breach of contract suit for $85,000 damages was filed Friday in the Federal district court in New York by J. S. Rex Cole against World Pictures, Du World Pictures, Lloyd's Film Storage Corp., Arthur A. Mayer and Irwin Shapiro. The plaintiff, as assignee of Bennett Pictures Corp., Ltd., claims violation of a five-year distribution contract made in 1935 for the films, "Legong" and "Kliou." The complaint charges defendants with failing to account for the proceeds of the films.

U. A. Promotions

Ed Mullen has been promoted to assistant to Clarence Eiseman, manager of United Artists' New York exchange, and Herbert Reichek has been named office manager. The announcement of the promotions was made by Harry L. Gold, vice-president, and Arthur Silverstone, eastern district manager. Mr. Mullen formerly was office manager at the exchange, and Mr. Reichek was chief booker.

Films Prepared For Defense Use

The American motion picture industry, hewing to its policy of entertainment first and propaganda second, regardless of pressure groups, nevertheless has been contributing to national defense, through special training films, in one instance, and through the wholesome themes of its purely theatrical product, the Kiwanis Club and representatives of the Schine circuit were told, in Gloversville, N. Y., Tuesday, by Arthur H. De Bra, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Mr. De Bra pointed out that many short subjects and feature films in the past three years contained "material directly relating to mental preparation for our national defense." He continued:

"I wish I could read you titles. I must be content with a summary from a recently completed study titled "Motion Pictures in a Democracy." During 1939-'40 and '41, 68 entertainment films were listed which make a contribution to the knowledge of America's history and traditions; 43 films of a biographical nature tended to increase appreciation of the great builders of the nation; 77 films underscored the responsibilities resting upon the present generation for preserving American and world democracy; 45 pictures dealt with family life in a democracy; 13 showed the tragic effects of racial and religious prejudice; 12 underlined the importance of conserving our material resources; 10 pictured the benefits of better housing and improved recreational facilities; and 15 others dealt with local and national projects of importance to National Defense."

He added these films were as important in Latin-American republics and British territories as here, and were therefore weapons in the "war of nerves—better antitoxins for saboteurs and fifth columnists than the Axis propaganda pictures."

300 Silents Revived at Museum of Modern Art

A cycle of 300 films, including those of the silent era from 1895 to 1928, will be launched by the Museum of Modern Art in New York on June 30th.

The exhibit of the films will take four months with each program running two consecutive days, giving New Yorkers the opportunity to see the historical development of motion pictures as contained in the Library's collection.

Short Booked in Sweden

Walter Gould, foreign head of United Artists, has announced that the company would distribute in Sweden and Switzerland the British short subject, "London Can Take It," a pictorial description of life in war-torn London. Quentin Reynolds, American correspondent, is narrator for the subject.

Charles Hurley Promoted

Charles Hurley, formerly assistant booker of the Universal exchange in Washington, D. C., has been transferred to the Cincinnati branch as head booker, to succeed Frank Schreiber, who recently resigned to become manager of the Avon theatre in Cincinnati.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

AssociatedBritishTalkingPictures

I SEE ICE: George Formby—Formby is very popular with our customers and we find enjoyable box office returns on his pictures. This is not his best, but did business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Columbia

HOWARDS OF VIRGINIA, THE: Cary Grant, Martha Scott, Richard Carlson—I have yet to meet an exhibitor that has enjoyed business on this one. We failed to make film rental. Costume and historical pictures are not popular with us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LOST HORIZON: Ronald Colman, Jane Wyatt—Plenty old, but plenty good. Never had so many comments on a single picture and they were all good. People still come to see it in spite of its age. I haven't seen a picture yet that has outranked this one. Running time, 118 minutes. Played June 5-7.—Christ S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

THIS THING CALLED LOVE: Rosalind Russell, Melvyn Douglas—A clever little comedy. Well directed and all parts carried out by the cast. If your patrons like something spicy, this is it. It really is worth running. Running time, 98 minutes. Played June 1-3.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

First National

RETURN OF DR. X, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Rosemary Lane, Wayne Morris, Dennis Morgan—Had the kids scared to death and most of them standing in back despite all the seats. Personally, I don't think this was the scariest but it was good, nevertheless. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 5-7.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and neighborhood patronage.

STRAWBERRY BLONDE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—This is just what the doctor ordered. It makes no difference how sick you may be, "Strawberry Blonde" is a sure cure. We have waited years to see such a picture. Run it the best time you have got and book for a second engagement if you can. It is worth it. Running time, 97 minutes. Played June 8-10.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage

STRAWBERRY BLONDE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—A nice show which did fair business; we are still humming the theme song used in this one. Played May 6-8.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Oka. General patronage.

WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Sylvia Sidney, Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie—Good action picture and average business. This is a circus story, though you could not tell it from trailer, one sheet or 11 x 14's. Some thrilling scenes where lion kills trainer and escapes. It thrilled me because I once saw a lion trainer killed by five lions when I was a band leader in a circus. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 11-12.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

COME LIVE WITH ME: James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr—Good picture and pretty good box-office. Now that James Stewart is in the Army his publicity is helping his pictures. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 21-22.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S CRISIS: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day, Robert Young—On a par with the rest of this very good series. All of them are above the average in program fare. Business not so good on this one, but business is off during May-June every year. To keep up the interest in the series, perhaps two a year would be enough.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

FLIGHT COMMAND: Robert Taylor, Ruth Hussey, Walter Pidgeon—I really do believe Metro means it this time, when they say bigger and better pictures, watch Leo, etc. At least, this is a good start. Now, come on, Metro, get out of that rut you are in and get back to par. Played June 15-17.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

GO WEST: Marx Brothers—Enough laughs in this picture for three or four of the general run-of-the-mill. The audience missed several of the gags still laughing over the last one. When the Brothers were on the screen the laughs came one after another in short order. Some thought it silly but they all liked it. Running time, 82 minutes. Played June 11-12.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

NEXT TIME WE LOVE (Reissue): James Stewart, Margaret Sullavan—Another weak box office attraction that was forced onto the exhibitors along with their other product. Double billed with "Maisie Was a Lady" for one day, which helped it some but not enough to realize a profit. Running time, 87 minutes. Played May 20.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

PEOPLE VS. DR. KILDARE, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Lew Ayres, Laraine Day—Good picture and good business. Kildare stories always please. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 10.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PHILADELPHIA STORY, THE: Cary Grant, Katharine Hepburn, James Stewart, Ruth Hussey—A great picture for a great town but we are not in a great town. Since the play was in my nearest city, a few looked forward to seeing the picture. Katharine Hepburn did build up her standing with the ones that saw the picture. I still don't see how Stewart won the "Oscar" for his part. Of course, that's only a small town manager's opinion. Running time, 112 minutes. Played May 25-26. Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

PHILADELPHIA STORY, THE: Cary Grant, Katharine Hepburn, James Stewart, Ruth Hussey—Not nearly as good as I though it was going to be. Had quite a number say they didn't like it. Advance information led one to believe this was just about the greatest show of its kind ever made. Entirely too much dialogue and not too much story; also, very short on action. The box office also was given a slap in the face!—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibtor. Address all communications to—
What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

STRIKE UP THE BAND: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Paul Whiteman—Very fine entertainment, but a few selections played by the Paul Whiteman orchestra would have put this in the top bracket. Too much Rooney and drums. Running time, 120 minutes. Played June 14.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

TAKE ME BACK TO OKLAHOMA: Tex Ritter, Bob Wills and his Playboys—The audience was laughing all the way through this and it wasn't because of the jokes. Positively the worst picture of the year. Running time, 64 minutes. Played May 8-10.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

CAT AND THE CANARY, THE: Bob Hope, Paulette Goddard—This one had the adults as scared as the kids. Had most of the kids standing up in back and a few grown-ups. One of the best mystery-comedies made. Bob Hope is a natural for this part. The murderer is well concealed. Audience well pleased and half scared to death. Running time, 71 minutes. Played June 8-11.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

DANCING ON A DIME: Robert Paige, Peter Hayes, Grace McDonald—Can't understand why they spend millions for big musicals when this type of program pleases the public more. We need more programs like this. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 4-5.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

REACHING FOR THE SUN: Joel McCrea, Ellen Drew, Eddie Bracken—Good picture which pleased but failed to draw. Many scenes are supposed to have been laid in a large automobile factory in Detroit. Has good comedy and some action. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 15-16.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS RIDE AGAIN: John Howard, Ellen Drew, Akim Tamiroff—A very good western. Enjoyed by everybody. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 6-7.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

VIRGINIA: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray—This is my first contribution to your much appreciated forum and I feel this feature is worthy of the doubtful honor of breaking the ice, as my sentiments are often not with the majority. I consider this just about the finest piece of work I ever sat through. If Paramount has any more of this calibre up their sleeve, for goodness sake's, let's have them. Running time, 12 reels. Played June 16-18.—Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West, Ontario, Can. Small town and early tourists' patronage.

DANA ANDREWS

Shines in "Belle Starr"—wins stardom in "Swamp Water"!

One of the fresh new 20th Century-Fox star personalities!

Donald Woods—This picture is a real scream. Not a dull moment. The audience was well pleased. Good cast for such type of picture. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 25-28.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

RAMPARTS WE WATCH, THE: March of Time—Just a full length newsreel. Audience attention was more tban I expected. All together, not a bad show, but not the best. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 1-4.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and neighborhood patronage.

SCATTERGOOD BAINES: Guy Kibbee—Everybody enjoyed this picture. Comments very favorable. Business very good. Played it on dual bill.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Just about the oldest picture shown here, but people still come to see it. A good mystery comedy. Ginger Rogers being the Academy Award winner helped it a lot. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 1-4.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and neighborhood patronage.

Republic

FRIENDLY NEIGHBORS: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—A hillbilly screwball comedy and what I mean is, not bad. I have not seen the people enjoy a picture so much since "Scatterbrain." Good work, Republic, keep it up. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 13-14.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

GAUCHO SERENADE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—These please my country folks 100 per cent. Capacity business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 7.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

PRAIRIE PIONEERS: Three Mesquiteers—A satisfactory western. Played with "Scattergood Baines" to satisfactory business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SCATTERBRAIN: Judy Canova—A swell picture for Republic. Audience really howled with laughter. Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 15-17.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and peighborhood patronage.

SHERIFF OF TOMBSTONE: Roy Rogers—Average western with Roy Rogers and George "Gabby" Hayes, which pleased weekend business. Running time, 56 minutes. Played June 13-14.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHAD HANNA: Henry Fonda, Dorothy Lamour—These stars have a good following in my section and color also helps. A few of the patrons were disappointed because they didn't see a few good circus acts. Played too late for the best business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played May 28-29.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLLYWOOD CAVALCADE: Alice Faye, Don Ameche—Ameche and Faye are all washed up here. Fair picture. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 29-31.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and neighborhood patronage.

MARK OF ZORRO, THE: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell, Basil Rathbone—For some unknown reason this slipped at the box office and that naturally made me lose respect for the picture. I expected fairly big business, but I only expected. Its drawing power failed to function. Running time, 93 minutes. Played June 8-9.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

STANLEY AND LIVINGSTONE: Spencer Tracy, Nancy Kelly, Richard Greene—A grand picture, but the take for three nights didn't think so. Running time, 101 minutes. Player May 22-24.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and neighborhood patronage.

TALL, DARK AND HANDSOME: Cesar Romero, Virginia Gilmore—A nice entertaining picture which pleased all the fans. You might call it a sleeper. Played May 2-3.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

TIN PAN ALLEY: Alice Faye, Betty Grable, Jack Oakie, John Payne—For your best play-date only. I enjoyed a good crowd that really enjoyed the picture. This pair of ladies is worth the admission just to look at, plus their singing, makes them tops. The only thing that could have added to this picture was color. I'll never forget Betty Grable in the color of "Down Argentine Way," and the patrons feel the same way. Running time, 92 minutes. Played June 15-16.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

TOBACCO ROAD: Gene Tierney, Charley Grapewin, Marjorie Rambeau—The draw was slightly above average, but the complaints were terrific. This and the "Thief of Bagdad" (U.A.) hold the record for drawing the most kicks in 1941 and were more panned than anything we have run for several years. This is a tobacco-raising country and I presume the patrons expected something in this line, and were thoroughly disgustd with the rantings that run through the show. —L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

TOBACCO ROAD: Charley Grapewin, Gene Tierney—This one could have been left for the stage production and all the picture patrons would have been satisfied. As it turned out no one was satisfied and business was at a low ebb; just another miscue by the producers. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 23-24.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

WESTERN UNION: Robert Young, Randolph Scott, Virginia Gilmore—Very fine picture which pleased most of the fans. Well produced, well directed. Business good. Played May 13-15.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

WESTERN UNION: Robert Young, Randolph Scott, Dean Jager, Virginia Gilmore—A grand out-doors show with just about the right amount of everything to give it a top rating in entertainment. Didn't do the business we expected though, as we played in the dull season (first part of June).—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

United Artists

FOUR FEATHERS, THE: John Clements, Ralph Richardson, June Duprez—A good picture; some amazing scenes. People who had seen it before came and saw it again. Running time, 109 minutes. Played June 8-11.—Crist S, Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General and peighborhood patronage.

SON OF MONTE CRISTO: Louis Hayward, Joan Bennett—Good feature and booked with "Come Live With Me" it means B. O. Well acted by Hayward and Bennett and keeps your interest due to the action throughout the film. Must have good picture for support as alone don't think it would mean a great deal. Running time, 102 minutes. Played June 1-2.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood and transient patronage.

SON OF MONTE CRISTO: Louis Hayward, Joan Bennett—Used in the middle of the week, to low grosses; it is not box office and will not give the satisfaction that "The Count of Monte Cristo" and "Man in the Iron Mask" gave. United Artists forces us to belp them remain in business and it is getting to be a habit with me. Running time, 102 minutes. Played May 21-22.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

THIEF OF BAGDAD, THE: Conrad Veidt, Sabu, June Duprez—This is about the world's worst! Had I seen it first, I wouldn't have run it under any circumstances. The cost of this typical "peculiar" U.A. show would have produced a dozen or more worth while pictures. The second and third nights were the lowest in history. Bad news travels fast.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

Universal

BANK DICK, THE: W. C. Fields—Drew above average mid-week and seemed to please most of the patrons. Comments were quite numerous and indicates that the picture business should go in for plenty of comedies in the new season.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

BUCK PRIVATES: Abbott & Costello—I can hardly wait for my booking on their next picture. This was the best yet from Universal for the box-office. The name was a natural and the picture did not let them down. Play it on your best date by all means. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 14-15.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

INVISIBLE WOMAN, THE: John Barrymore, John Howard, Virginia Bruce, Charles Ruggles—Something different in freak shows. The comedy situations are very good and drew a lot of healthy laughs. Picture drew slightly above average on a double bill.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

MAN FROM RED BUTTE: Johnny Mack Brown—Good weekend.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklaboma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

MODEL WIFE: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—Here is a picture that isn't big, but contains a lot of entertainment. If you can get them in, it will please everyone. Good enough for any days of the week. One of the most enjoyed pictures we've played in some time. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 28-30.—Ritz Amusements, Inc., Park Theatre, North Vernon, Ind. Small town patronage.

MR. DYNAMITE: Lloyd Nolan, Irene Hervey—Will get by on double feature. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 22-24.—R. F. Netzel, Palace Theatre, Granden, Wisconsin. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN THE TROPICS: Allan Jones, Nancy Kelly, Budd Abbott, Lou Costello—Just about the best liked mid-week program picture that we have run for a long time. Drew especially well tbe second night which is unusual for a mid-week change. The comedy, handled mostly by "C" and "A," is hilarious. Why producers make so many peculiar shows that the general public despise is hard to understand. We need more like this one.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

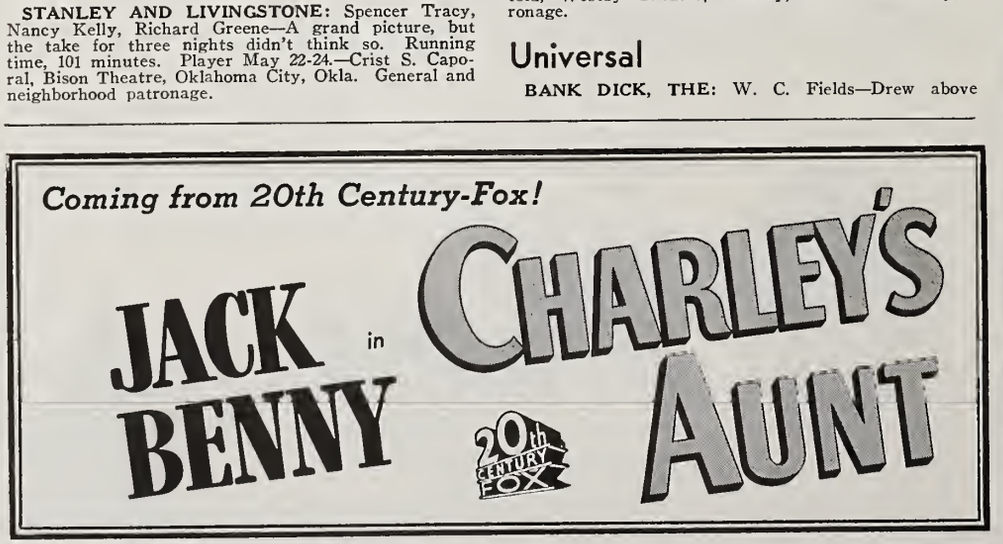
FOUR MOTHERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, Claude Rains—Good family picture, but more a ladies' picture than anything else. I put up a clothes-line full of baby diapers on the front and some of the patrons were misled because we didn't see much of the babies. Running time, 86 minutes. Played June 4-5.—Feilx H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

FOUR MOTHERS: Lane Sisters, Jeffrey Lynn, Gale Page—Just a fair picture that fell down badly at the box office. Satisfied those who saw it, but there were not enough of them to make it a profitable investment. Running time, 86 minutes. Played May 28-29.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

GREAT LIE, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent, Mary Astor—Some of my patrons do not like Bette Davis but I think she is swell and this was a good picture. Played April 19-21.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

GREAT MR. NOBODY, THE: Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie—A nice little picture but nobody came. Played May 20-22.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

GREAT MR. NOBODY, THE: Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie, Alan Hale—As long as everybody in the house enjoys it, we have no kick coming. Personally, I don't like to see Albert in such a dumb role. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 11-12.—Guy C. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.



HERE COMES HAPPINESS: Mildred Coles, Edward Norris—Another good little picture with no draw. Business light. Played May 24-26.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY (Reissue): James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Good picture that did extra business. Played May 9-10.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck—It is outstanding as most of Frank Capra's productions are, but no better than the others and they are asking your right eye for it. It is not a very profitable adventure at the terms under which it is offered to you. Personally, I would advise you to wait until their feet touch earth before buying. Running time, 123 minutes. Played May 25-26.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

SEA WOLF, THE: Edward G. Robinson, John Garfield, Ida Lupino—This one was very good although it didn't do the business it should have. I don't think Warners should have allocated it so high, as they put it in their top brackets. The acting was perfect, especially that of Edward G. Robinson. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 25-26.—Walter Eldred, Colfax Theatre, Colfax, Calif. Small town patronage.

SEA WOLF, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Ida Lupino, John Garfield—Quite a good crowd turned out for this sea thriller against much competition. Maybe it is a little brutal in spots, but it went over very well here. It is hard to believe it was all taken in the studio. There isn't a slow moment in the whole picture. Running time, 99 minutes. Played May 29.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Miscellaneous

WESTERNS: Any Company—It has always been a mystery to me why they do not put better looking girls in the western pictures. It is just as important to have a prety girl in a western as it is to have them in the Broadway Melodies. Now it might be said they can't be found but Hollywood is full of good looking, talented girls who would jump at the chance to play in any kind of picture. The new season is coming up soon and I wish the producers would take a tip and make the heroines so good looking that the boys from the country would not only want to see their favorite cowboy do his stuff but they would also want to see the gal playing by his side. The western fans like pretty horses and they also like pretty girls. Now let's have some fresh pretty faces for 1941 and 1942.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. General patronage.

A jury on June 5th convicted the defendant on 22 counts of grand larceny and one of third-degree forgery in the total theft of $186,000 from the concern over a period of years, which, Hymes confessed, was squandered on gambling and extravagant living.

Part of the sentence—five to ten years—was on five of the grand larceny counts, all to run concurrently, and an additional term of 18 months to five years was imposed on the forgery conviction.

About 150 municipalities in the state are on daylight saving at present and it is expected a few more will join the movement shortly, following the lead of Indianapolis.

OBITUARIES

Nathan Salmon, Theatre Owner, Dies at 75

Colonel Nathan Salmon, who with his son-in-law Colonel E. John Greer was owner of the Lensic, Paris and Burro Alley theatres in Santa Fe, New Mexico, died Tuesday, June 17th, at his home in that city.

Born in Bastinka, Syria, in 1866 Colonel Salmon came to the United States in early manhood and subsequently amassed one of the largest fortunes in New Mexico. Besides his theatre interests he was a large real estate owner of other property in both Sante Fe and Albuquerque.

Colonel Salmon had been in ill health for the past several years and underwent a major operation at Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, a little more than a year ago. Following his illness he retired from active business and turned the management of his enterprises over to his son-in-law, Colonel E. J. Greer.

Both Mr. Salmon and Mr. Greer were in the original group of men who formed Gibraltar Enterprises Inc., and Mr. Greer is still an active member of that independent exhibitors' organization.

Mr. Salmon took a personal interest in advancing the independent exhibitor cause, having served as president of the New Mexico Exhibitors' Association and having an active part in protecting the political right of the motion picture industry as a whole, in his state.

Mr. Salmon entered the theatre business in Santa Fe, New Mexico, in 1911. Several other theatres of a smaller type were opened and closed by him until 1931 when he erected the Lensic theatre. As far as it is known Colonel Salmon's Lensic theatre was the first in the United States to install huge over-stuffed rocking chairs as loge seats. Recently he erected the Burro Alley theatre named after one of the early streets in Santa Fe. In 1939 he erected the Hilton Hotel in Albuquerque.

Surviving Colonel Salmon is his daughter, wife of Colonel Greer.

Kramer Case Appealed

The Kramer theatre case has been appealed in Detroit, Mich., to the Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati by Cohen and Shevin.

IN COURTS

Film Actor Wins Screen Test Suit

Justice Frank A. Carlin in the New York city court ruled on Friday, June 20th, that the failure of a film company to give a screen test to an actor under an agreement with him even though the company had refused to employ the player subsequently might be the subject of a damage suit. Making a precedent setting decision, the court granted a judgment of $1,500 for breach of contract in favor of Conrad Noles against Loew's, Inc. Attorneys for the company said they would appeal the decision.

According to the testimony Loew's in March 1939, signed Mr. Noles to a contract under which he was to receive a test, and under which Mr. Noles granted exclusive option on his services from the date of the agreement until four weeks after completion of the test.

The plaintiff claimed that he did not seek other employment, although he had an opportunity to do so, for a period of ten weeks from the date of the agreement.

The court said: "It may be argued that the defendant after it made the screen test could refuse to employ plaintiff on the ground that he did not measure to the requirements for employment. In my opinion that cannot be urged as prejudicial to plaintiff's recovering damages for the period aforesaid, when the defendant held the plaintiff helpless and subservient to the defendant's desire to secure a star by depriving that star of shining in another orbit."

Affirm Ownership Rights to Ideas

A decision dismissing the $25,000 radio-idea plagiarism suit of Alonzo Dean Cole, writer and director, against Phillips H. Lord Inc., advertising agency, was reversed Friday, June 20th, and a new trial ordered by the appellate division of the New York supreme court.

The plaintiff had claimed appropriation by the defendant of his radio program, "Racketeer and Company," in the defendant's program, "Mr. District Attorney." The plaintiff had been employed by Lord in 1938 and 1939, and claims to have submitted the idea for a series based around a crusading district attorney at that time.

The seven-page opinion pointed out that the suit was not for the plagiarism of any particular script but of a formula program and the court explained that when the defendant transferred any rights to "Mr. District Attorney," he sold not scripts but the basic idea.

Berman Files Bankruptcy

Benny Berman, manager of the Eagle theatre in Manhattan, on Friday, June 20th, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, listing liabilities of $8,560 and no assets. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

SELLING THE SHOWMEN

Any organized planning aimed to shake the industry out of its "doldrums", must strike first and directly at an obvious and spreading rottenesss.

That rotteness is defeatism.

Travelling in the field and in conversation with visiting Round Tablers, your Chairman notes an alarming tendency to surrender among the men in the first-line trenches. These are the managers who must be depended upon to carry on while the skies are filled with barrage and disheartening counter-barrage of accusation between exhibition, distribution and production.

Now, how can your theatreman be expected to function while, called upon to present a solid front in support of his efforts, the industry indulges in a civil war of name-calling.

The names are many, and all hard. Double-features, give-aways, bad pictures, inadequate showmanship, denouncing trade paper advertising, and what-have-you.

Every last man has his rock to hurl. The air is just filled with 'em.

Few weeks back, this column said that salvation lay in giving the business back to the showmen. The job is not that simple. Before the shakiness and panic can be overcome, pessimism must be routed.

That routing may be accomplished by recognizing the immediate necessity of selling the business to the men in it, men who love showbusiness and eager to be sold. That selling would play down unwarranted fears of "boogie boos" which exist in the minds of the fearful and play up more enthusiasm for an institution that places entertainment within reach of millions.

The job is not selling the public as it is first selling the lad who sells the public. Let the theatreman be properly wound up and he will be seeing to it that the cash customer is adequately told. His doing of it before helped make the business profitable. He can be encouraged to do it again.

Not yet is the industry falling apart. It may be that its seams are straining. But they're not giving. A lot of good showmen would function with a lot more assurance if they were sold on that.

In view of the present emergency, and in answer to a growing number of requests, Motion Picture Herald, through Managers' Round Table, now extends its services to readers by offering its facilities to exhibitors seeking to fill manager vacancies or desiring to strengthen manpower showmanship.

Interested exhibitors are invited to communicate their wants directly to this department where every effort will be made to bring man and job together.

There is no charge for this service.

A GOOD SPOT TO SELL 'EM

Circuit conventions, this year, have already been holding. Now reports say more are to come in the next months, and notably among operations where so far these gatherings have not been held annually.

That would bear further on the subject of selling showbusiness to the men in it. No more effective project has been devised to give theatremen a lasting shot-in-the-arm.

The days spent together are pure tonic for managers. Group discussions, stimulating talks by bossmen and invited guests, visits with brother managers and department heads, play periods — all contribute to a "letting down the hair". It releases tensions, breaks up the daily grind, strengthens loyalties, sends the manager back to his post champing at the bit to "have at 'em".

Convention-conscious circuit heads are the first to declare that the cost of bringing the boys together is negligible in proportion to the increased grosses the managers bring in.

For the Second Awards "Quarter-Master" Judging, the Committee was comprised of Arthur Mayer, New York Rialto; Sol A. Schwartz, division manager, RKO Theatres, and Lew Preston, general manager, Endicott Circuit, of New York.

Roving photographer stunt was used by George Avis at Loew's Century, Baltimore, for advance on "A Woman's Face." Anyone who could identify his photo from among pictures posted in front of theatre received guest tickets. Lad worked business districts week ahead, distributing tiein heralds in addition.

Double-barreled action front was designed by Louie Charninsky for his date on "Bombs Over London" and "Torpedoed" at the Capitol, in Dallas, Tex. Scene stills were spotted at boxoffice and that's Louie in person pointing to diving plane in flames.

Sam Taub, (left) manager of the RKO Chester, Bronx, hands certificate of victory to Patricia Richards, winner in the "Queen of Starlight Park" contest staged by Bill Berns, exploiteer, for "Million Dollar Baby." Berns, who works for both Warners and the park, designated winning girls as "Tomorrow's Million Dollar Babies."

Goldman Features Keith Radio Show

With local semi-professionals organized into a Little Theatre Group, and the radio time promoted over Station WDAS, Manager Jack Goldman is using a unique buildup for the programs at Warner's Keith, in Philadelphia, by staging a radio dramatization of his current feature each Sunday night. Though the thought is being used around the country, the type of show and the manner in which it is presented are said to strike out along original lines.

The scripts are re-writes and condensations of prepared material boiled down to present dramatically the highlights of the feature attraction. Preparations for each week's show begin almost immediately after the radio program with the actors, their director David Ghen, the author, Oscar Goodwin, Goldman and his assistant Dave Horowitz previewing the next attraction. Members do not try to emulate the stars, two rehearsals are held during the week and "final dress" rehearsal held Sunday morning.

One broadcast each month is devoted to a contest. Three scenes from three outstanding pictures produced during the past decade are dramatized and listeners are asked to guess the picture titles. In this connection the first 25 correct answers are awarded guest tickets.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Brien Ties Stewart Photo To "Philadelphia Story"

Practically a year after date Lige Brien at the Belmar in Pittsburgh made good use of a photo taken of himself and Jimmy Stewart on the MGM lot, when the former was in Hollywood as a 1939 Quigley Grand Awards winner. In this instance planting it on front page of neighborhood paper in connection with his advance on "Philadelphia Story." Misspelled word contest was also planted with merchandise and ticket prizes awarded winners.

"Buck Privates" brought a bannered replica train street bally which toured district within a 10-mile radius. Andrews Sisters records were played from train, boys distributed imprinted cellophane bags containing peanuts and public address system plugged the picture's opening, while cow bells and blowing horns attracted the crowds. Brien further promoted use of machine for lobby which played hit tunes from the film, numerous windows were landed and tickets went to entrants securing most words from the word "Private."

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Graver's "Honeymoon" Bally

Pop Graver, manager of Warners' Grove, Willow Grove, Pa., used a clever street bally for "Honeymoon for Three," two girls and one boy touring all the surrounding towns. "Land of Liberty" was vividly brought to the attention of patrons with a display enhanced with guns, flags and varied paraphernalia synonymous with Americanism. The American Legion corps turned out for Graver with a huge ballyhoo and endorsement.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS

This cartoon was drawn for Ralph Lawler, Toledo Paramount Theatre, by "Wog", nationally famous for his "Chief Wahoo" comic strip.

Unique Display Aids Breslin on "Blonde" Date

Ten days ahead of "Strawberry Blonde," John Breslin at the Utica, Utica, N. Y., displayed a round disc about 15 inches in diameter with different samples of blonde hair, together with a one-sheet poster captioned "Are You a Strawberry Blonde?" by mounting the material on a 40x60 display frame augmented by other copy and placed it in the lobby. The round disc with the different samples of blonde hair in the center of the board was arranged so that it could be turned to any sample hair patron wished to look at. Display attracted many people not only from a curiosity standpoint, but many others who were seeking information in regard to the different colors of blonde hair.

Breslin's Mickey Mouse Club also played a big part in the campaign. At regular meetings, the theatreman taught members all the songs in the picture, particularly the one, "Casey Will Waltz With the Strawberry Blonde While the Band Plays On." They sang this song for a week in advance every time it showed on the screen, and of course, the words appeared right on the screen. Members of the Mickey Mouse Club were planted all over the theatre and at every performance to egg the audience on to sing and enjoy "Casey."

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Lucky Number Contest Aids Poppay on "Doe"

Syd Poppay, Majestic Theatre, Gettysburg, Pa., conducted a lucky number contest with one of the local restaurants for "Meet John Doe." The owner placed "John Doe Numbers" under each plate and posted lucky numbers in the window. Holders of the numbers received passes.

To insure good attendance for "Men of Boys Town," Poppay arranged for an announcement at the Mothers' Club, contacted a local minister for endorsement and planted a serialization in advance with a daily newspaper. For "The Bad Man," Syd tied up with a local daily for a title contest. Picture title was scattered about the paper in various styles of type faces, free passes to those assembling the title from a certain type face. Round Tabler also tied up with the Gettysburg News Agency with a display of western magazines into which were placed house programs.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Woodin's Hay Wagon Aids "Sis Hopkins"

Large hay wagon was used by Larry Woodin, manager of the Arcadia, Wellsboro, Pa., to bally "Sis Hopkins," with kiddies riding on the wagon as it toured the city streets. A "Sis Hopkins" matinee was run during the engagement, with all girls wearing hair ribbons admited at children's prices. A contest was held to find the local girl whose measurements most closely approximated those of Judy Canova, with an eight-week pass for the winner, who was also the guest of honor at the opening performance. On opening night, a half-hour band concert, playing the picture tunes, was held in front. A window of a local department store featured an organist playing the picture songs, the music carried to the street by loudspeakers.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Reh's "Navy" Broadcast

Al Reh, of Warners' Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, highlighted his campaign for "We're in the Navy" with a radio contest on WPEN. The best 40 letters stating "Why I would join the Navy" were awarded house passes. Officials at the Philadelphia Navy Yard were house guests on opening night, the performance further marked by the personal appearance of Abbott and Costello. For "Love Crazy," Reh had a gent in female garb impersonating William Powell stationed at the City Hall marriage license bureau to give advice to the June brides.

Miami Mayors Boost Premiere

Considering the intense rivalry between both communities, Sonny Shepherd's success in getting the mayors of Miami and Miami Beach to signalize the double-world premiere of "Moon Over Miami" by proclamation is credited for being one of the highlights put over by the Wometco theatreman for the dates at the Lincoln, in Miami Beach and the Miami, in Miami. Opening day, labelled "Moon Over Miami Day" was so honored in the two-city proclamation, the copy calling attention to the fact that many of the background scenes were taken locally by the 20th Century-Fox cameramen for inclusion in the picture.

For outside ballyhoo along the beach, Shepherd arranged to have life-size cutouts of Betty Grable supplied by the Charles E. McCarthy ad forces, the cutouts planted in life boats, and rowed up and down the beach front by the local life guards. The latter also were posed for surf shots with the Grable likeness, the shots being serviced to newspapers and magazines all over the country. To intrigue leading merchants both in Miami Beach and Miami, Sonny put on a window display contest, with prizes awarded for the best displays on the Miami background of the picture.

Radio was liberally used in the campaign. Spot announcements and description of the opening day ceremonies were carried by all local stations, as was full coverage of the fact that Mayor C. H. Reeder of Miami threw the switch which started the projection cameras at the Miami Theatre. These photos were planted in the press, as were shots of the impressive theatre fronts.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Lyons, Heinz Stage Shorts Quiz Contests

A new step in merchandising short subjects was inaugurated recently by managers Harry Lyons and Jack Heinz, of the RKO Alden and Flushing theatres, respectively, when they staged novel shorts quiz contests backed by comprehensive publicity campaigns.

Taking the RKO Radio Pictures regular cartoon quiz, originated for newspaper and theatre use, Lyons blew up two units on which were drawing pertaining to such shorts as the Disneys, March of Time, Information Please, Sportscopes, Picture People and Pathe News. An usher distributed questionnaire blanks on which the answers were to be made and the blanks dropped into a receptacle just before the patrons entered the Alden.

A tie-in was arranged with the Queens Evening News for a reproduction of the quiz in cut form along with the correct answers, and announced the winners.

Heinz put over a newsreel quiz entirely centered around the Pathe News, billing it on the theatre front and in newspaper publicity as "America's first newsreel quiz." A highlight news event for each year of Pathe's history, was mounted on a display board and numbered. Questionnaires were distributed on which contestants named the specific news events. In addition there were several other questions as to the historical and current aspects of the veteran newsreel.

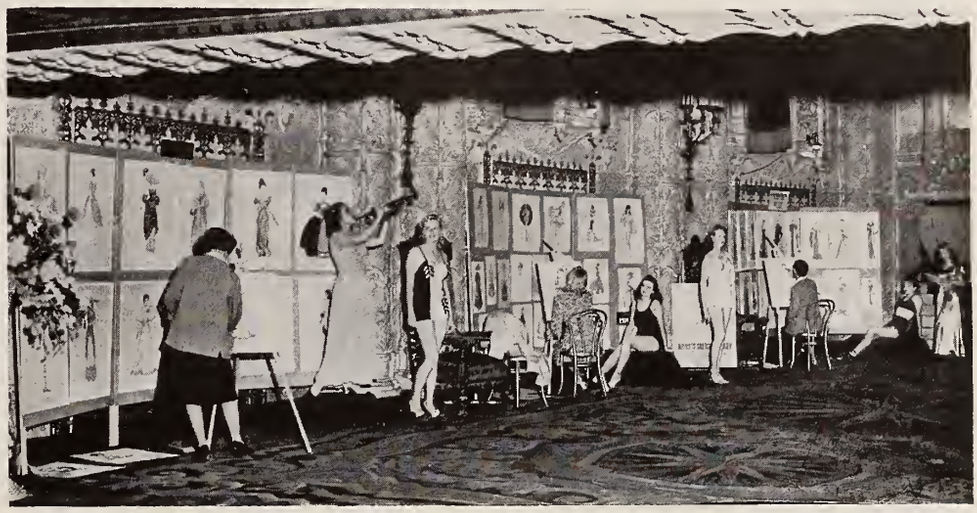
British Tars View 'Sailors' Opening

Since there are quite a number of English seamen serving aboard British battleships in the U. S. Navy Yard of Norfolk, Va., United Artists selected that spot for the world premiere of "Three Cockeyed Sailors" at the Granby Theatre where, in cooperation with Manager Earl Westbrook, the United Artists' exploitation forces put on a strong campaign to call attention to this British release. Among the projects was a gala midnight prevue for the officers and crews of the English battleships now at the base and also for officers of the U. S. Navy.

Following the showing, a 15-minute radio program was arranged for in the lobby of the theatre and also short-waved to England. Further importance was given the opening by the U. S. Naval Band parading to the theatre as escort to the British tars and officers. Announcements of the promotion and the dates of the picture were made in all quarters and barracks at the Navy Yard and also among the naval forces in nearby Portsmouth.

Chamber of Commerce cooperation was had with a series of special announcements to members and window cards in all windows, merchants hooking further into the campaign with colorful co-op ads. Newspapers featured premiere with banner page one headlines and stories which fully detailed the opening day's festivities, emphasizing parades to the theatre by naval bands, 100-piece American Legion orchestra and Boy Scout Bugle Corps.

Also contributing to the publicity was the use of marines and armored truck with special escort meeting plane at airport with print of the picture, which was rushed under guard to center of town. Covering the surrounding area, three special sound trucks were sent out publicizing the date in a 150-mile area.



"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

"Shock" Theme Featured On "Flight from Destiny"

To sell "Flight from Destiny," Marty Goldenberg, manager of Warners' State, Philadelphia, employed the "shock" theme. He prepared a trailer and lobby layout with the message, "Flight from Destiny," has a weird, uncanny theme that will startle and leave you breathless. It has never been presented on the screen in this manner and is a shocking physico-analytical probe of a character you wouldn't like to meet on a dark street." To arouse further interest, he used this copy: "Are you shock-proof? Put your hand on the glass over the mechanically treated red spot. If it turns blue, you can't stand the shock of seeing 'Flight from Destiny.'" For a street stunt, he employed a hooded figure in a Dante cape distributing cards with copy, back of the bally reading: "I Am Destiny."

For "Mr. and Mrs. Smith," he enlarged a page from the telephone directory and used the following copy: "Calling all Smiths and their friends to see Carole Lombard and Robert Montgomery in "Mr. and Mrs. Smith." "If you see your name ringed in red, you will win a pass to see this hit picture."

"Ziegfeld" Art Contest Staged by Tom Soriero

ARTISTS AND MODELS AT WORK IN FOYER OF THEATRE

SINCE much has been made of the costumes and clothes worn in "Ziegfeld Girl," Tom Soriero seized upon the second week of the date at the United Artists, in Los Angeles, to tie in with the Hollywood Art Center School for an art contest held ahead in the elaborate and expansive theatre foyer which served as art salon and class room, as illustrated above.

To start the promotion, the school invited students and local artists to participate. This was followed with classified ads in the downtown papers for models. Others desiring to pose were drawn from other model studios. Hundreds replied in answer and the most shapely selected, a total number of 18 in bathing suits and other costumes posing daily for the amateur and professional artists. Emphasized by Soriero, is that all sketches in the panels shown in the illustration were actual drawings by the contestants during the course of the competition. These in addition to the actual posing were credited by the Round Tabler for packing the foyer at all times with interested patrons.

The prizes given by Tom were jobs of usherette and spot girl at the theatre, a further award going to the artist selected by the judges for the best drawing of a streamlined Ziegfeld Girl. Over 150 sketches made during the week were turned over to the cooperating art school to be used as reference in securing positions for the models.

Comprehensive publicity was obtained in advance by Soriero through promoted programs and announcements over Stations KFOX, KRKD and KMTR. Feature breaks were secured in the downtown dailies together with vigorous plugging by the art school.

Noted also by the theatreman was that the costs of the entire project were held down to a minimum.

Balkin Directs "Magic" To Local Music Lovers

George Balkin, Warners' Vernon Theatre, Philadelphia, sponsored an essay contest for moviegoers and music lovers in the interests of "There's Magic in Music." The contest was based on answers to the question: "What music do you consider outstanding—popular or classical?" Best answer in 50 words brought the patron a pen and pencil set with 10 guest tickets for the next 10 best answers.

A word-of-mouth radio campaign was promoted by Balkin for "The Great American Broadcast." Tying in with the local amateur radio operators, he had the "hams" plug the picture among each other in their nightly conversations over the short-wave airlanes.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Contests highlighted Jack Flex' "That Night in Rio" date at the Keith, in Syracuse, one of which was a quiz stunt with questions pertaining to previous pictures in which Faye, Ameche and Miranda appeared. Another was along the limerick lines, paper using two columns of art layout on this and required contestants to fill in last two lines to coincide with limerick lines as printed. A song title memory contest was also featured with entrants required to name songs used in previous pictures whose plot was that of a story of South American life.

RKO INVITES PATRONS TO "PICK THE WINNER"

To attract the customers away from their home radios on the night of the Louis-Conn prizefight, the RKO theatremen in Sol Schwartz's metropolitan district not only advertised that the scrap would be broadcast at the theatres, but also offered guest admissions as prizes to those selecting the winner and the winning round in advance. As patrons entered, they were given blank forms to fill in with their guesses, which were gathered by ushers before the broadcast started.

Of some 10,000 blanks distributed in 10 houses, only 15 patrons picked Louis and the winning round. It was noted that none of the correct guesses came from the houses in Harlem.

For out-front attractor on "Western Union" at the Capitol, in Brampton, Ont., Jack Campbell planted a table at curb on which were laid insides of old radios, tubes, condensers, etc. Borrowing a telegraph key with buzzer attachment, lad pressed key, giving out dots and dashes for attention. Members marched to theatre where a brief concert was given, stunt good for art and reader breaks in local daily.

For his opening of "The Bank Dick" at the Roxy Theatre, in Kennewick, Wash., Round Tabler Howard McGhee issued teaser heralds in check form issued on the Bank Dick for 20,000 laughs to be drawn from W. After picture opened these were stenciled over with different color paint with the words: "He's Here."

Army Tieins Aid 'I Wanted Wings'

Showmen in the field are still going strongly for their dates on "I Wanted Wings," especially availing themselves of the tiein possibilities afforded by the military services; in Barre, Vermont, for instance, Round Tabler John P. Hassett staged a parade of members of the 187th Field Artillery, to mark the premiere. City and state officials, including Governor Wills, were present for the opening and the cockpit of a Douglas DC-3 bomber attracted much attention in the lobby. A transport pilot was on hand during run to explain the features.

Army A-Boards were promoted and posted at strategic points about town, one side being devoted to recruiting and the other to the special one-sheet on the picture. Army recruiting truck with loud speaker toured first two days of run and when not touring was stationed out front.

Visiting Dignitaries Hosted

A dinner sponsored by the local Lions, Rotary, Chamber of Commerce and American Legion was given for visiting dignitories and young men interested in Flying Cadet training. Local dailies came through with stories on the dinner with generous picture mention.

Down in Washington, Dan Terrell for the date at Loew's Capitol also received the cooperation of army officials with recruiting trailer at theatre, officer in attendance distributing heralds. Anti-aircraft searchlights were used for the opening which was attended by a list of distinguished officials, invited by Loew division manager Carter Barron. Papers came through with stories and art ahead.

Features "Flying Cadet Week"

Under the supervision of Ralph F. Stitt, head of the United Detroit Theatres' advertising department, Mayor Edward J. Jeffries proclaimed the week the picture was current as "Flying Cadet Week." Windows in the area displayed cards and banners heralding the occasion together with blowups, stills and theatre credits. In center of the business district an Army Cobra plane was stationed with officers on hand to distribute heralds telling of the "Cadet Week" and picture opening.

To top all activities a show, screening of the picture and luncheon, arranged for the Mayor, radio and press representatives was held at Selfridge Field. Members of the First Pursuit Squadron stationed at the field put on an air show at the field and then left for downtown Detroit where they duplicated their performance. During the show a commercial plane towed banner with picture title. Preceding the prevue of the picture at midnight, the First Pursuit Squadron flew over the city amidst the glare of searchlights.

Highlight of Joe Longo's campaign at Loew's State, in Cleveland was a gasoline-powered model airplane contest with promoted prizes going to winners. Reporting some 400 entries, Longo secured as judges such prominents as supervisor of industrial arts in the Cleveland public schools, representative from American Airlines, model supply dealer and others.

Indiana-Illinois Circuit Managers Maintain High Batting Averages

The consistently fast pace of the theatremen among Alex Manta's Indiana-Illinois forces keeps up to par as Round Tablers of the circuit report late activities as instanced by the campaign put on by Howard Sexton for "Tobacco Road" at the Roxy, in LaPorte, Ind., with the city's mayor promoted to officially change the name of the main street to "Tobacco Road" for the duration of engagement.

This was done with plenty of ballyhoo, the ceremony being publicized in advance and started with records over the p.a. system after which the mayor made the official proclamation. Street signs noting the change were pinned up by popular local girl. Another slant that commanded attention was the bannering of all public service busses with large signs reading: "Ride this bus to see."

On behalf of the Jefferson, in Goshen, Roy Helson, Indiana-Illinois city manager in that situation, reports his campaign to introduce a new house policy featuring a "Variety Hour" instead of the second feature, this hour made up of selected short subjects and billed on almost equal footing with the main picture. Helson gave this quite a ride in the newspapers, elaborate attentions in lobby displays, heralds and other forms of publicity. Helson also adopted Chick Tompkins' recent teaser campaign in opening the new policy with the date on "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary." In his teasers, Ray used head cuts of Andy Hardy announcing himself as pleased that his picture was being coupled with the opening of the new hour.

The Mantaman was also able to report a gratifying Mother's Day party in which a lot of attention was paid in newspapers with the announcement that all mothers over 70 years of age would be guests of the theatreman. In addition to the free show, the Round Tabler arranged for free ice cream at a neighborhood drugstore and promoted the local cab companies to bring the guests to and from the theatre.

The city being an important industrial center, Helson availed himself of opportunities for special shows given by the various factories, reporting a recent three-day benefit on a tiein with a prominent factory athletic association. All important organizations were contacted to cooperate and to aid in selling tickets.

Also reported on by Helson was an Americanization Show with both circuit theatres there tying in with the American Legion, schools and other local civic organizations, with MGM's "Land of Liberty" the special feature. All children led by the school bands and American Legion color guard and motorcycle escort paraded to the theatre with appropriate banners, where they put on their own Americanization program prior to the feature picture. Newspapers, of course, came through with excellent breaks plugging the special show.

For his second extensive campaign since he recently moved to the Gayety Theatre, in South Chicago, Bob Griffith reports on "Flying Wild," the featured promotion being the placing of a real airplane on top of the theatre marquee and the distribution of newspaper style heralds by newsboys, calling attention to the unusual setting. Next in importance in the campaign was the release of a lot of colored balloons "Flying Wild" from the marquee on a Sunday afternoon. The fact that guest tickets were attached to some of the balloons provided sufficient drawing to bring over 500 youngsters, Griffith reports.

DANCE HALL
(20th Century-Fox)

Romance, Comedy

Executive producer, Sol M. Wurtzel. Directed by Irving Pichel. Based on the novel by W. R. Burnett.

SYNOPSIS

The scene is Danceland, a dime-a-dance palace in central Pennsylvania. Duke McKay (Cesar Romero), manager of the place, is pummeling a prostrate man, when Lily Brown (Carole Landis) sails into him. She is only partly mollified when Duke explains the man has been bullying his pianist-pal, Joe Brooks (William Henry). Later, Duke goes to his hotel room with a bunch of the boys and starts a crap game. The noise disturbs Lily, whose room adjoins, and finally she breaks up the game by coming in and winning all the money.

Then she reveals she is "Venus," the New York singer Duke has hired, sight unseen, to work in his dance hall. Next morning, Duke intercepts her breakfast tray and takes it to her himself. Lily throws him out. At the dance hall that night, Lily is similarly glacial. Duke tries a new approach and succeeds in getting Lily to drive out to the country with him. Once he has her in his arms, Duke gives out with a horse laugh and taunts her with the remark that women are all alike. Furious, Lily walks home.

She is given a lift by Max Brandon (J. Edward Bromberg), prosperous lingerie shop owner. Duke makes a play for Ada (June Storey), Joe's girl friend, to show his carelessness of Lily. When this line fails, Duke locks Max in a closet and renews his advances on Lily. She pretends to give in. Lily drives off and leaves Duke stranded in the country as revenge.

Lily sends one of Joe's original compositions to a New York publisher. The publisher wants Joe to take his band to New York to exploit the song, but Joe, gives all the money he has to Duke, who has gambling debts. Lily learns about the situation and berates Duke. Duke, in desperation, fixes a $2,500 "bank night" award at his dance hall, and sends the winnings to Joe. Duke, however, is caught at his game and jailed. Lily borrows money from Max to effect his release.

Drama of the West

Produced by Harry Sherman. Directed by William McGann. Based on the novel by Peter B. Kyne.

SYNOPSIS

Old "Chuckawalla" Bill Redfield (Charlie Ruggles) is leading a young prospector through the desert, when they come upon a deserted village. Chuck tells the story:

Forty years before, Chuck begins, he struck gold near the very spot where they are now sitting. He became rich and gave some of his friends part of his holdings. The gold strike attracted the usual band of adventurers and soon a town came into being. It was named Panamint and Chuck was made the first mayor.

A church is built and Chuck is delegated to find a preacher. The miners, headed by Bud Deming (Joseph Schildkraut), want a man who can handle the town on its own terms. Chuck finds his man in Phil Pharo (Phil Terry). Phil shocks the snobs right off by harboring Jake Crabapple (Clem Bevans), a drunkard, in the parsonage. Then he preaches in the Pick and Drill saloon. The town's snobs jump at the chance to accuse the parson when, in a fracas, a man dies accidentally striking his head on an iron rod. The parson is charged with murder.

Word is brought to Chuck and he goes for the miners. They no sooner emerge from the mine when it caves in from rotten shorings. The mob is about to hang the parson when Chuck and the miners rescue him. Chuck tells them what happened at the mine is only the beginning of God's judgment. With the mine wiped out, Panamint soon becomes a ghost town.

Sea Adventure, Romance

Produced and directed by Frank Lloyd.

SYNOPSIS

It is the year 1810 when John Jacob Astor (Roger Imhof) sends the ship "Tonquin" out from New York on a fur-trading expedition around the Horn to the wild and remote Oregon country. The ship is manned by a cutthroat crew under Captain Jonathan Thorn (Walter Brennan), a stern New Englander. Among those on board are Duncan MacDougall (Nigel Bruce) and Angus McKay (Leo G. Carroll), hard-bitten Scotch fur-traders; Ovide de Montigny (John Carroll), a French-Canadian, and young Robert Stevens (Franchot Tone).

Stevens, who has turned down the job as manager of Astor's warehouse to join the expedition, discovers a stowaway—Julie Morgan (Carol Bruce), lured aboard by Ovide's tales of Paris. Captain Thorn finds Stevens telling Julie that the ship is not going to France, and mistakenly blames Stevens for Julie's presence aboard. Thorn assigns Julie the job of cabin boy, and punishes Stevens by making him sleep among the rivermen. Ovide steers clear of Julie and bitter feuds develop between Thorn and Stevens, and between Stevens and Ovide.

Julie meets Ovide on deck to give him a chance to explain. She falls overboard and Ovide rescues her. Both Thorn and Stevens have become attracted to Julie. The ship halts at the Falkland Islands and Julie sneaks ashore to ask Ovide to marry her. Because she is a temptation to him, Thorn sails off and leaves her on the island, but Stevens forces Thorn at the point of a gun to return for Julie.

Thorn releases Stevens at the mouth of the Columbia River, and warns him not to return to the ship. Stevens learns of a plot by the Indians to seize the ship. When he arrives on the scene the attack has started. Ovide is killed and Thorn badly wounded. Stevens escapes with Julie as Thorn blows up the ship.

SYNOPSIS

At the dedication of the vast new building which houses the United Broadcasting System, Harold L. Montgomery (Raymond Walburn), scatterbrain vice-president, discovers that one foot of the building is on the ground which belongs to one Judy Goober (Judy Canova), a hillbilly girl. To avoid a possible suit, Montgomery and his equally scatterbrain son, Junior (Eddie Foy Jr.) go to the hill country to talk Judy into selling her property.

As it turns out Judy hasn't even known that she owns the land. And now she doesn't want to sell it. She and her Uncle Lem (Slim Summerville) move into the rickety old house which still stands on the property. The Montgomery's engage the services of Prince Karl (Francis Lederer) a frayed-of-cuff but smooth talking Russian.

Finally Karl arranges a singing contract for Judy, the plan being to let Judy sing into a "dead" mike and have her purchase luxuries and go into debt. Judy falls for the plot and as soon as she is deeply in debt the contract is cancelled. Judy agrees to sell her property. Karl asks Judy's forgiveness and when he learns that a delegation from Judy's home town is coming to celebrate her "success," he helps her in a plan to make the delegation think that she is really a radio star.

The two, with Uncle Lem, rig up a microphone in the barn and attach it to the radio in the Goober home. Accidentally, Lem makes a connection with the United Broadcasting cable, and Judy's voice goes out over the airwaves to the country. By the time the company's employees discover the cause of the disturbance, the sponsor of the program which she had "invaded" has decided that she is terrific.

The girls have accepted an invitation to have tea in the boys' rooms on the basis that the aunt will be there to chaperon them. Before the tea, Jack's father, Sir Francis (Laird Cregar), visits his son to tell him that they are broke. Jack tells his father he ought to wed the wealthy Donna Lucia, Charley's aunt.

In London, Donna Lucia (Kay Francis) calls on her lawyers, the firm headed by Babbs' uncle. The uncle advises her to check up on Charley by going to Oxford incognito as Mrs. Beverly Smythe. Babbs, posing as Charley's aunt, helps the two couples along at the tea. When Spettigue finds out about the wealth of the bogus aunt, he enters in competition with Sir Francis. Babbs is kept busy evading the two elderly men.

To complicate matters, the real Donna Lucia, incognito, arrives, and Babbs, who has been delegated to entertain her, dresses and undresses while shuttling between his two jobs. Finally, after Babbs has obtained a letter from Spettigue allowing the marriage of his wards, he is exposed when a spear catches his wig and leaves him bareheaded. McDowell details his best man, Brand Calhoun (Johnny Mack Brown) to the task of running down the gang. Brand bids goodbye to Patti McDowell (Nell O'Day), the captain's daughter, and Joan Rawlings (Kathryn Adams), daughter of the banker, and, accompanied by Steve (Roy Harris), his young brother, rides away.

Brand and Steve come to the rescue of a stage, which is being held up. They chase the bandits off but Steve dies of a bullet wound. Back at the Ranger station, Brand resigns. He disappears into the wilderness, becomes an outlaw and eventually is taken into the organization run by Martin—who is actually the leader of the bandits. After breaking up the bandit gang, Brand returns to the Rangers as a captain.

SYNOPSIS

Buck Roberts (Buck Jones) ex-United States marshal, is asked by a government official, to clean up a gang of gold thieves in Mesa City. Buck travels to the town and learns that the Wells Fargo stage coaches are being held up and the drivers killed. Ruth Masters (Luana Walters) has been running the business since the murder of her father. Colonel Tim McCall (Tim McCoy) and Sandy Hopkins (Raymond Hatton), friends of Buck, come to Mesa City to help him.

Buck drives the stagecoach with the next gold shipment and takes Ruth's boy friend, Joe (Dennis Moore) along with him. However, Buck replaces the gold with stones before starting off. The stagecoach is held up and robbed but both Buck and Joe recognize members of the Taggert gang. Buck doesn't even pretend to fight and Joe, believing him in league with the gang, has Buck locked up in Mesa City. Colonel Tim and Sandy come to his rescue, and the Colonel explains to the miners where Buck has hidden the gold and that Taggert and his men are the real thieves. HORSEFLY OPERA (20th-Fox)

Terry-Toon (1513)

This is a "western" with the characters being bugs, flies and other small creatures. After a harmonious opening chorus, the tiny cowboys leave their protector, the big old horse, mount their horseflies and are away in a shower of dust. A villainous spider waylaids a bug-size stage coach being drawn by flies. The principal passenger is a caterpillar of many parts and pockets. The caterpillar loses his valuables, but makes his escape and gives the alarm. The cowboys rush to overtake the fleeing spider, surround him and in battle, defeat him.

MEMORIES OF EUROPE (MGM)

Miniature (M-236)

"Memories of Europe" in the main is a compilation of scenes taken in the days when there was peace in the old world, gathered by James A. FitzPatrick. Opening with a huge map of Europe FitzPatrick turns back the pages of memory to show scenes taken in France in 1937, including the International Exposition in Paris. From France the scene moves to Holland, Denmark, Switzerland and Czechoslovakia, one of the small nations resulting from the last war. In closing Mr. FitzPatrick salutes those in Europe who still remain defiant.

SAIL HO (W.B.)

Sports Parade (6408)

In this Sports Parade subject, a timid character supplies the continuity as he goes shopping for a boat with his wife. The reel itself is principally concerned with the various types of sail boats from the little cat-boat up to the big racing schooners. As a climax there are scenes of a boat race between fast racing sloops. Knox Manning is the commentator.

STARS—PAST AND PRESENT (Rep.)

Meet the Stars (028-8)

A galaxy of stars appear in this issue of the series. First, current stars hold the spotlight—at a bathing party, which includes Brenda Joyce, Alan Curtis and Ilona Massey among others; at the home of Cesar Romero, where he and Patricia Morison try their skill at a novel outdoor bowling game, and in a beauty chair, where Mary Martin models some emeralds from the collection of jeweler Durward Howes. Then to past stars, the occasion being the unveiling of the plaque, in memory of Mabel Normand at Republic's new sound stage. William Farnum acts as master of ceremonies. The audience includes many of the old Keystone Kops and other film celebrities of a decade ago. Scenes from an old Mabel Normand film are also included in the reel.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON (20th-Fox)

Terry-Toon (1515)

A little Fox in quest for food on behalf of himself and his family is pursued by a pack of foxhounds, which he outwits. He comes to a barnyard, where there are stores of foods. The place is guarded by a faithful old watch-dog, who opposes as best he can the tricks and wiles of the Fox. The contest between the two is waged all over the barnyard but eventually the Fox gets the food he wants and starts home. Again he is pursued by the foxhounds. He slips inside the door just in time. The Fox family holds a feast.

IT TAKES ONLY A SECOND TO SEE THE difference

● The new "One Kilowatt" High Intensity arcs really pour daylight on the screen. Projection is vastly improved because of the much higher intrinsic brilliancy of these arcs — 100 to 120% higher than Low Intensity. A comparison will convince you.

Every small theatre needs and can afford this modern high intensity projection light. Ask your dealer for a demonstration.

The words "National," "Suprex" and "Orotip" are trade-marks of National Carbon Company, Inc.
